the House December 20, 1920, more than three years ago. If there should be among them some suggestions which are valuable and correct, it is to be hoped that the committee now in charge of the bill is quite competent to make them. I should think that it would require probably 24 hours' work to make the examination if one were unaccustomed to the work. The gentleman to whom it was assigned by the House committee on this 1st day of February, 1923, was compelled to put in 45 minutes' careful analysis of that work.

The letters of the Post Office Department are as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 8, 1921.

HON. JOSIAH O. WOLCOTT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WOLCOTT: Replying to your letter of February 2, asking for any criticism I may care to make on the bill (H. R. 9389) to consolidate, codify, revise, and reenact the general and permanent laws of the United States in force March 4, 1919, which bill appears to have passed the House and is now in the Senate for consideration. I beg to state that some months ago a copy of the first 335 pages of the bill was received in this department and referred to the solicitor for examination. At that time a complete copy was requested, but it does not appear that it has been received.

The solicitor reports that a few slight errors have been found in the sections of the advance part relating to the Post Office Department, a list of which will be included in a report on the complete bill, if these errors are found in the bill as passed by the House.

A copy of the complete bill has again been requested, and as soon as it is received a prompt examination and report will be made on such sections as relate to the Postal Service and the Post Office Department.

Respectfully,

A. S. BURLISON,
Postmaster General.

All prior suggestions made by the Post Office Department were incorporated in H. R. 12. Copies of both bills—H. R. 9389 and H. R. 12—were sent to the department. The delay in getting them was due to the fact that young gentlemen down there neglected to let anybody know that they were received. Several months after H. R. 12 passed the House I visited the solicitor's office and he and his assistants informed me that they had no further suggestions to make. However, I have just received—January 31, 1923—the following letter:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR,
Washington, January 31, 1923.

HON. EDWARD C. LITTLE,
Chairman Committee on Revision of Laws,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LITTLE: Referring to your telephonic inquiry of yesterday, I take pleasure in transmitting herewith a copy of a letter dated November 25, 1922, addressed to Hon. RICHARD P. ERNST, chairman of the Senate Committee on Revision of the Laws, by the Postmaster General making certain suggestions respecting H. R. 12, a bill "to consolidate, codify, revise, and reenact the general and permanent laws of the United States in force March 4, 1919."

Sincerely yours,

H. J. DONNELLY, Acting Solicitor.

This letter suggests that they have again called attention to about a dozen former suggestions on which we had, as I was informed, fully agreed. In order to avoid delay, I shall just discuss them and you can get an idea of the importance of criticisms which for 20 months delayed the big bill.

In section 6304 they say the word "bonds" should be changed to "bond"; in 6466, the footnote should be 29 S. instead of 19 S.; and a comma should be omitted in 6518. Possibly they are right. If the committee in charge will employ a young lady with a lead pencil, I should think they would be able to meet that emergency and dispose of it immediately. The footnote is no part of the law, and if there was not a footnote in the book it would be just as good law as the Statutes at Large are now. It is hoped that the book will not be delayed 20 months longer on such criticisms.

The department again calls attention to the criticism they offered on section 10385, of which they asked that it be canceled. Well, we canceled it. They suggested that they expected us to substitute a quotation from the Thirty-eighth Statutes, page 195, and do not find it. Well, it is there in section 9692. They suggest that section 3789 of the Revised Statutes is absent. That section has long since been repealed and disposed of by the printing laws now in existence, which are found in the book. The section number is cited in the sections which immediately supersede it, so that a lawyer may know that the new section grew out of that.

The department suggests that they regard sections 5969, 6531, 6653, and 6695 as superseded by others which are in The Code. The reason they were placed in the code is because they were not superseded by the others. There was no repeal and no conflict whatever. In some of them it might be suggested that there is partially a slight duplication, but the publication of both has been essential to every one of them.

The department suggested that the word "officer" has been omitted in 3330; that the word "second" should be inserted instead of "first," in section 6433; that the word "foreign" should be omitted in 6762; and that a citation to that one should be omitted because it is quoted in full somewhere else. The application of a lead pencil for a few minutes should dispose of these suggestions if they are correctly made, and if a lawyer is employed for a few minutes he could state whether those words are as recommended. The fact that a few lines are quoted in full in another section is no reason why the citation should not be applied to 6762, and the citation is no part of the law anyway, and I do not know why they said anything about it.

Revised Statute 3789, including much other similar law, was long since repealed and passed out of use by the law on printing, which is all in this book.

Referring to section 6493, the department makes a suggestion which is due to an error very common among department men. This book is a book of permanent and general law only; no appropriation bills are included. None of the appropriation bills are permanent law or substantive law unless they say, "Hereafter it shall be the law." On page 467 of the Thirty-fourth Statutes an appropriation was made "Providing that certain persons employed on June 30 should on July 1 be appointed as inspectors of the grade of $1,800 per year." That was a purely temporary law made as part of an appropriation. It provided that certain people should get certain raises in salary provided they were so appointed. The whole proposition passed off the map whenever that appropriation was exhausted. There is no such law. The department suggests that the law prior to that date was obsolete because of that provision in the appropriation, but it is just as existent as it ever was, and that fallacy has made much trouble for the revisers, who were compelled to adhere to the actual law.

The department suggests that Revised Statutes 3835 should be in the bill H. R. 12, telling about application of money on bonds. That has been superseded by what is now section 6394 of H. R. 12, and there is no place in the book for 3835, except as it is now in effect in 6394. The revisers gave this, as all other suggestions of the department long ago, careful attention.

Referring to our section 6542, the department calls attention to section 4 of the Thirtieth Statutes, page 444, and suggests that it should be in the bill. This Thirtieth Statute, page 444, provided that second-class matter should only be returned when postage is prepaid. Our section 6542, found in Thirty-sixth Statutes, page 306, provides that it shall be returned to the mailer and postage collected there. It, of course, does away with the act the department mentions. Merely to state this is certainly sufficient. The department agreed with us when we went over it in the first place, and their action at that time was right.

The department has the following: "37 Stat. 553, act of August 24, 1912—Collusion among bidders." They do not say why they put that there. It is found in section 5742 of H. R. 12. I expect they wanted to give us a compliment for our care in putting it in. If they have overlooked it, I am sorry. After having worked over it 22 months with great care it is a little trying to have to go over it again because somebody did not find it the second time after he had agreed to it once.

The department calls attention to three lines on page 555 of the Thirty-seventh Statutes and a paragraph on the next page, concerning which they make no suggestion, but what they probably mean to say is that it is not in the book. After three years of time I do not personally recall whether that is somewhere else in the book or whether for some reason it was omitted. The department at the time agreed with the committee on whatever was done. If there is a mistake, here is an excellent opportunity for some other committee besides ours to do 25 or 30 minutes' work and make the correction. If it should develop on a few minutes' examination that it should be in and is not, some other committee can show their desire to be helpful to the bench and the bar by adding it to sections 6697 and 6698 of the Code. It would be a great pleasure to the House Committee on Revision of the Laws, which has taken care of more than 10,000 of these sections, if somebody else would help us on one. I earnestly hope that the bill will not be delayed another two years in order to accomplish that 30 minutes of work. If the department has discovered an error in the work to which we invited their attention three years ago, I thank them very much for the assiduous care they have given to the great topic, and am only sorry that we did not receive their suggestion long since.

In my previous speeches of January 20 and January 26, found on pages 2083, 2507, 2508, and 2509, I have discussed at some length the attitude of the Department of the Navy, which began with their letter of May 25, 1920, when the then Secretary of the Navy said that he "was not in a position to assign any members of its personnel exclusively to the task of making said examination and report," and added, "A lack of time and personnel qualified for the task which could be detailed for such work precludes the possibility of undertaking it at this time." As they then proceeded by admitting that there were 70 sections of the law as shown in the bill which they had never heard of, as they continued by devoting most of their attention to the headlines of the sections, which are no part of the law and which the revisers were amply competent to write, as they concluded by demanding that we omit certain portions of the law made by Congress for the reasons shown in the letter of May 25 and in the letter a year later of March 1, 1921, as follows:

The clause in the act of October 6, 1917, was the subject of the fullest consideration by the experts in both the War and Navy Departments, including the General Staff and the War Council, with the result that the two departments agreed that this provision could not be put into effect and concurred in recommendations to Congress that it be repealed. Inasmuch as the said provision could not be put into effect, its repeal would serve no purpose other than to eliminate it from the statutes, thereby preventing confusion which it might cause in the minds of those not familiar with the subject. Whether repealed or not, the fact would be that it was not in effect and could not be put into effect and therefore could not be regarded as a provision of law which was in effect in 1919—

the revisers were forced to the conclusion that the Secretary was quite right when he spoke of their "lack of personnel qualified for the task." This personnel still have, I understand, 96 criticisms of the Navy Department's part of the bill in the hands of the other committee. The revisers have prepared 96 thorough discussions of the 96 suggestions. If some other committee will study the criticisms and the answers this committee has made, they ought to be able to decide which is right. I should think a day or two's work would fully dispose of the whole matter, and if they wish to make 96 amendments to the law as presented by our committee, that is their privilege and that is what they are instituted for, and if there is something to correct, why do they not correct it. I should not like to feel that they would idle away two years on a work of this vast importance and for which there is a general and insistent demand from the bench and the bar all over this country. If there is a mistake in it, fix it; that is what you are paid for and that is your duty. I insert the following letters on this subject:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS,
May 23, 1920.

Hon. E. C. LITTLE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LITTLE: I am in receipt of your letter of May 20, 1920, inclosing copies of two letters received by you concerning your bill to codify the laws from justices of the Supreme Court. I thank you for sending me copies of the letters. I congratulate you upon your splendid work so far accomplished by you.

Yours truly,

REED SMOOT.

1301 CLIFTON STREET,
Washington, D. C., May 10, 1920.

Hon. E. C. LITTLE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have your favor of the 29th ultimo and have just received a copy of your bill for the revision of the statutes of the United States. So far as opportunity has offered, I have examined it, and it seems to me that the work is well and thoroughly done. Thanking you for the favor, I am,

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM R. DAY.

THE CONNECTICUT,
Washington, D. C., May 14, 1920.

Hon. E. C. LITTLE, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have received the calendar print of the Laws of the United States, and thank you very much for the same. The amount of research and industry which you exhibit in your bill is wonderful.

Respectfully yours,

JOSEPH McKENNA.

LOUISVILLE, KY., January 9, 1923.

Hon. RICHARD P. ERNST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I regretted very much not seeing you again while we were in Washington, but circumstances did not seem to favor our plan of dropping in on us on your way to the Capitol the morning after I saw you. I regret that such was the case, but know how busy you are and how likely you are to be diverted from one thing to another under the necessity of the situation.

The one thing which I desire to bring to your attention was the effort now being made to revise the statutes of the United States and to have the code of laws published as promptly as possible. I wanted to talk to you about this because of its importance to the United States courts and especially to the judges. I need not remind you of the enormous size and number of volumes which have accumulated since the last revision and the trouble the courts have in looking through all of them for possible enactments. It is because of this situation that I venture to bring this matter to your attention and to ask, if it be possible, that you will facilitate the enactment of proper laws. My attention has been directed to you in the matter because I saw in the newspapers that one of your committees was the one which had the matter under consideration for action.

Hoping that you are well, and that the new year will bring you blessings, I am Very cordially yours,

WALTER EVANS.

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., May 26, 1921.

Hon. EDWARD C. LITTLE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LITTLE: During the recent vacation I took occasion to examine very carefully your codification of the United States Statutes. I did this with a special interest as a lawyer and as a member of the Judiciary Committee of Congress. I want to say to you that I am very familiar with codification work, having done a lot of it myself. I have never seen it as well done as you did it. I believe you have rendered a very great service not only to the professional bar but to every man who wants to know what his rights and what his duties are under United States law, and I have the honor to subscribe myself

Your obedient servant,

JAMES W. HUSTED.

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 15, 1921.

Col. EDWARD C. LITTLE, M. C.,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLONEL: I have just taken the opportunity of looking through the new codification of the Federal laws, which is now pending before Congress and which, without doubt, will shortly be passed by both Houses and signed by the President.

I am astounded at the amount of work that has been involved in this great undertaking of revising, harmonizing, and systematizing the laws of our country. Without in any way reflecting upon the other members of the commission, I know that practically all of this work has been done by yourself. From my experience as a lawyer and a judge on the bench, I know it is impossible to praise too highly the great work you have done. It is the most important piece of legislation that has come before Congress in many a year, and I would rather go down to posterity as the author of this great work than to be known as the author of any bill that has passed Congress in the last five years.

Allow me to congratulate you on the magnificent work you have so well accomplished.

Very truly yours,

PHIL D. SWING.

STETSON, JENNINGS & RUSSELL,
New York, January 31, 1923.

Hon. EDWARD C. LITTLE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LITTLE: Your letter of January 10 reached my office while I was absent attending the midwinter meeting of the executive committee of the American Bar Association. Since my return a few days ago I have been hoping that I might have time to make the critical inspection of the bill which you suggest, but with the pressure of other matters it is quite clear that I shall not be able to do so in time to make my views of any service to you during the present session of Congress. There can be no question on the part of anyone that such a recodification is urgently necessary, and it will be a great pity if Congress adjourns without putting its stamp of approval upon the work. I know, of course, how difficult it is to get attention for such matters in the closing days of a busy session; but, after all, a bill of this character is distinctly a work for committees rather than for either House as a whole, and the general body, I should think, would be willing to adopt with a minimum of discussion a bill which comes to it with a favorable report.

Believe me, very sincerely yours,

JOHN W. DAVIS.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein some further letters that I have, to which I direct attention.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ].

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, the Washington Post of Monday, January 15, carried an article of unusual interest, which was to the effect that it had been learned that Mr. Isadore B. Dockweiler, Democratic national committeeman from California, had been in Washington procuring a mailing list of members of the American Legion, and that it was assumed that the mailing list was desired for the circulation of a "bonus-tariff" speech alleged to have been delivered by Mr. W. Gibbs McAdoo at Fullerton, Calif., on Armistice Day, and which had been printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and was therefore available for circulation without postage. The same article that was printed in the Washington Post, a journal of wide reputation and responsibility, also, as I am informed, went over the wires of the Universal News Service, presumably to the large American dailies that depend upon that service. Furthermore, the Washington Evening Star exhibited on its front page a cartoon representing Mr. William J. Bryan and Mr. James M. Cox, and in the hands of each of them the news report to which allusion has been made, and upon their faces a look of astonishment and disgust.

In view of the wide publicity given this serious charge, I assumed that the same would be met by a vigorous denial upon the part of the Legion officials. Subsequently in the House of Representatives I took occasion to read into the RECORD the news article aforementioned, and at the time observed that Congress in the act which chartered the Legion had in the sixth paragraph thereof said:

That the organization shall be nonpolitical, and as an organization shall not promote the candidacy of any person seeking public office.

I might also have mentioned the fact that by a further clause thereof Congress expressly reserved the right to revoke the charter at any time it saw fit. This, of course, Congress would not do unless it were convinced that the Legion, as an organization, was being used as an instrument of political warfare or engaged in promoting the candidacy of some person for public office. Individuals, members of the Legion, act in political matters with perfect freedom, just as other members of society have the right, and as is their duty to act and do. If the principal officers of the Legion were permitted to exert pressure, using the corporate name of the Legion as a lever, in order to advance the political pretensions of men for nomination or for election to public office, then this would not be fair to other members of the Legion, for it may be assumed that within the ranks of the Legion, it having over a million members, there are to be found men of almost every shade of political opinion.

I further said on the floor of this Chamber at the time mentioned, that the officers of the Legion owed it to the country and to the great body of patriotic men belonging to the Legion to come forward and deny or admit the truthfulness of the charge so published against them. My object in thus directing public attention to the matter was to provoke a statement which would develop the facts, thereby to give to the officers of the Legion an opportunity to exonerate themselves from blame.

I now wish to direct your attention to a dispatch widely published in the newspapers of the country to the effect that Mr. Alvin Owsley, national commander of the Legion, in a public address made at Anderson, Ind., on January 12, denied that the Legion had entered politics in circulating the bonus speech of William G. McAdoo in California, and declared that he had no information that the California department was circulating the speech, and said that—

If the distinguished statesman from West Virginia would make a good speech favoring the adjusted compensation bill the American Legion would in all likelihood give it a large circulation; that the distinguished Congressman seems unable to read the difference between loyalty to political parties and loyalty to country.

In reply to Commander Owsley's statement, I must say that I have not charged the Legion with "entering politics by circulating Mr. McAdoo's speech in California." No one has, to my knowledge, made any such charge. The original newspaper article, which I read before the House, alleged that Dockweiler, Democratic national committeeman from California, had been in Washington procuring a mailing list of members of the American Legion, and that this was being done in an attempt to mobilize World War veterans for McAdoo for President. That is the charge, published broadcast in the newspapers and, so far as my information goes, never denied. If true, it represents a bad piece of business.

The commander's statement to the effect that if I will make a "good speech" on adjusted compensation it shall have Legion circulation is surprising, in view of the fact that I have made two speeches on the subject, one in the Sixty-sixth and the other during the Sixty-seventh Congress. Whether these were "good" speeches might be a matter of dispute. If they were to be tested by the opinion of those who opposed the compensation, they might not be classified as good.

The list of Legion members has been, I understand, uniformly refused to Members of Congress for official use in mailing to ex-service men speeches, documents, and departmental rulings that should concern the soldier. I may add that I have heard not a word of complaint against the Legion for having established the rule. It would seem to have its justification in the language of the charter, which I helped to frame, and which says the organization shall be nonpolitical and forbids the doing of any act calculated "to promote the candidacy of any person for public office."

The constitution of the American Legion, as adopted by the St. Louis caucus, May 10, 1919, expressly provides:

ARTICLE III—NATURE.

While requiring that every member of the organization perform his full duty as a citizen according to his own conscience and understanding, the organization shall be absolutely nonpartisan and shall not be used for the dissemination of partisan principles or for the promotion of the candidacy of any person seeking public office or preferment.

Thus it will be seen that the founders of the Legion wisely made provision in their fundamental instrument that the Legion should never be used for partisan political purposes.

That I have been a consistent friend and supporter of soldiers' legislation the records will conclusively show. The bill to incorporate the Legion under a Federal charter had my active support in the Judiciary Committee and in the House. The wisdom of Congress in granting this charter I have never doubted, for the Legion has stood as a great bulwark against Bolshevism and as a powerful force for law and order. The only thing that could bring about its disruption and disintegration would be its entry into partisan politics in violation of the organic law of its creation and establishment.

Whether the report mentioned be true or false, I have no means of knowing, but that such report has been widely circulated and never denied I do know.

If any official of the Legion has allowed the use of the mailing list of that organization for the circulation of the McAdoo literature the members of the Legion and the public generally are entitled to be informed. If no such improper use of the mailing list has been had, then a statement to that effect will operate as a denial of the damaging report published widely in the newspapers of the country.

The commander of the Legion before he speaks publicly of the record of a Congressman ought to inform himself as to what that record is. May I quote from a speech made by me in the House as early as May 20, 1920:

WORLD WAR ADJUSTED COMPENSATION BILL.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, I am for this bill without reservation or secret evasion of mind.

In the spring and summer of the year of our Lord 1917, in the hamlets, villages, and cities of this broad land the soldiers were being mustered in, leaving home, going to the war. The bands were playing and the local orators were haranguing the boys, telling them what great fellows they were. These orators, with eyes turned to heaven and swimming in tears, said: "Boys, when you come back there will be nothing too good for you. Everything is yours. We will stand by you through thick and thin."

Well, the boys sailed away, and when the war was over we found 50,000 of them were killed in battle, 50,000 more had died of disease, 100,000 additional were wounded and maimed. Many of them must suffer for life, and now, when we bring up this little bill, we find the profiteer trying to escape with the swag, moaning and groaning, and telling us that the bill is bad.

In America, "the land of the free, the home of the brave," all stand equal. All, irrespective of race or religion, are equals. No stockbroker or profiteer has a halter about my neck. [Applause.]

In the opinion of the commander this was not a good speech, but it was the best I could do—

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Is the reason that the gentleman is complaining because they did not circulate his speech?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. The complaint I make is that the Legion has refused to Members of Congress the right to a list of the members of the Legion in order that they might send them copies of bills and resolutions and regulations and other matters that concern the soldier, and yet has given out a list to a politician seeking the Presidency of the United States, at the same time not doing exact justice to William J. Bryan and James M. Cox.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I shall confine my remarks to the bill before the House. This bill is a very important one. It involves revenue amounting to somewhere from $20,000,000 to $50,000,000 a year, which is now being lost, or will be lost, to the Treasury on account of the manipulations of transactions on the stock exchange mostly, although the bill applies to some other transactions as it stands now.

The act of 1918 required that any amount which was made in the exchange of property should be assessed in the same manner as any other transaction—that is, that the property received in exchange should, for the purpose of determining gain or loss, be treated as equivalent to cash—to the amount of its fair market value. The result of this provision was both injurious to the Treasury and to the transaction of ordinary business. There were persons in business, corporations and individuals, who had a certain kind of property which they wished to exchange for similar property, to the benefit of themselves and the party with whom they made the exchange, and they would not make the exchanges as long as the law stood in this form for the reason that they would be liable to be taxed on the increase in value from 1913 up to the time of the exchange. On the other hand, the Treasury also lost, because any person who actually had a loss in property held by him could sell it at the loss and get that credited in having his income tax assessed. By reason of these matters, when the act of 1921 was passed, a provision was inserted in it to this effect—paragraph 1, subdivision (c), section 202:

For the purposes of this title, on an exchange of property, real, personal, or mixed, for any other such property, no gain or loss shall be recognized unless the property received in exchange has a readily realizable value; but even if the property received in exchange has a readily realizable value, no gain or loss shall be recognized—

(1) When any such property held for investment or for productive use in trade or business (not including stock in trade held primarily for sale) is exchanged for property of a like kind or use.

In inserting this provision Congress went too far in an attempt to rectify the conditions which were produced by the act of 1918. The door was open for anyone who had a large profit in stock to exchange it for other stock and receive the amount of his profit in cash, without accounting for that profit to the Government or paying any taxes thereon. The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury which accompanies the bill explains very clearly the purpose of the bill and the evil which it seeks to correct, and I will ask the Clerk to read it in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 13, 1923.

HON. WILLIAM R. GREEN,
Acting Chairman Committee on Ways and Means,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. GREEN: I have your letter of January 12, 1923, requesting any comment that I may care to offer with respect to a bill, H. R. 13774, "To amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to exchanges of property."

The proposed bill amends the existing revenue law and eliminates the provision which allows the exchange free from tax of stock for other stock and bonds for other bonds, except where any such exchange of securities is made in connection with the reorganization, consolidation, or merger of one or more corporations. It further amends the existing law to provide that where a person receives money in connection with an exchange which would otherwise be tax free, the amount of the money so received shall be taxable to the extent that it represents an actual gain. In connection with this matter it is stated in the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922, that:

"The revenue act of 1921 provides, in section 202, for the exchange of property held for investment for other property of a like kind without the realization of taxable income. Under this section a taxpayer who purchases a bond of $1,000 which appreciates in value may exchange that bond for another bond of the value of $1,000, together with $100 in cash (the $100 in cash representing the increase in the value of the bond while held by the taxpayer), without the realization of taxable income. This provision of the act is being widely abused. Many brokers, investment houses, and bond houses have established exchange departments and are advertising that they will exchange securities for their customers in such a manner as to result in no taxable gain. Under this section, therefore, taxpayers owning securities which have appreciated in value are exchanging them for other securities and at the same time receiving a cash consideration without the realization of taxable income, but if the securities have fallen in value since acquisition will sell them and in computing net income deduct the amount of the loss on the sale. This result is manifestly unfair and destructive of the revenues. The Treasury accordingly urges that the law be amended so as to limit the cases in which securities may be exchanged for other securities without the realization of taxable income to those cases where the exchange is in connection with the reorganization, consolidation, or merger of one or more corporations."

In accordance with this recommendation made in the annual report, I approve the proposed bill as to both form and substance and earnestly urge that this bill, amending the revenue act of 1921, be promptly adopted.

Yours very truly,

A. W. MELLON, Secretary.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, as the law now stands, the Treasury, to use the common expression of the day, is beaten both coming and going. If those gentlemen trading on the stock exchange have a loss in stock they have bought, they sell it and get an allowance for the loss on their income taxes, but if they have a gain instead of selling they make an exchange for other property, get the difference in money, and go "scott free" from paying any taxes, although they have realized their profit and got it in cash. The purpose of the bill is to prevent this kind of manipulation and the consequent evasion of taxes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Can the gentleman from Iowa tell us why it is that the Committee on Ways and Means has not reported out a bill to reach the profits paid out in stock dividends?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman will perhaps remember some two years ago I introduced a bill for that purpose.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes; I understand the gentleman was for a proposition of that kind, and since that time there has been, according to press reports, about $2,000,000,000 of profits paid out in stock dividends for the specific purpose of escaping taxation, and it has escaped taxation. I want to know why it is that the Committee on Ways and Means does not recognize the situation and report out a bill to reach that enormous amount escaping taxation.

Mr. BLANTON. The Secretary has not made that recommendation.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will say to the gentleman that the members of the Ways and Means Committee do not agree with the gentleman that a stock dividend is profit, that is why.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That is the reason it has not been reported out; that a majority of the committee were like the gentleman from Michigan, and I am very glad to have him make such a frank statement.

Mr. GARNER. I want to say in behalf of the gentleman from Iowa that his intentions are good but his execution is not very effective, and he has not been able to accomplish what he would like to accomplish in that particular as the gentleman from Michigan kind of overrides him, as it were.

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman from Michigan respects the decisions of the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court has said that stock dividends are not incomes. Is that enough for the gentleman?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes; and that is the reason I think we ought to change the law so that it can be reached in some other way. It can be done all right.

Mr. GARNER. Let me ask the chairman, if I may, if it would not be a good idea to give the Supreme Court another guess, since it stood only five to four; I am willing to let it guess again.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is not necessary; there is another way—

Mr. GARNER. I know, but even I am willing to let them guess at it once more on the direct question as to whether stock dividends are capital or profit.

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman from Texas understands me always generally to stand by the majority.

Mr. GARNER. When the majority goes the way of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. FORDNEY. When I do not I will declare myself a Bolshevik, which I am not.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I hope the gentleman will pardon me; I will not have time to finish my remarks on the bill itself, and this discussion is entirely extraneous.

The Members will perceive that the bill still preserves the principle in reference to exchanges of productive property of the same use, but it takes from the list of property which may be exchanged without a gain or loss being recognized all property held for investment, which would include stocks and bonds. The last part of the bill further provides that in cases of reorganization of corporations—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. May I have two or three minutes more?

Mr. GARNER. I yield the gentleman two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for two additional minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The last part of the bill provides that in case of exchanges of stock in reorganization of corporations that only the amount of the other property of a readily realizable value received in addition or as "boot" shall be taxed as gain. The reason for this is in the reorganization, where we simply have an exchange of stock of one for another, unless they get some cash or other property "to boot," as the common expression is, the gain has not been realized, and there is no change in the situation except in the method of carrying on the business. I think there is no objection to the main features of the bill, although the gentleman from Michigan may desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the members of the committee to the general purposes of this bill, just in a word. This bill is to keep New York brokerage houses from making exchanges of bonds and stocks at the last of the year and thereby cheating the Government out of from $30,000,000 to $100,000,000 a year, according to the estimate.

It is a very technical provision. I do not know whether it is true or not, but I have heard a gentleman say that the expert in charge at the Treasury Department remarked that it took him three hours to understand it after it had been drawn by experts to meet that particular situation. So you must understand just how difficult it is for the members of the committee or yourselves to understand the particular provisions of the bill. But remember this, that this bill would not ever need to have been passed if the Republicans had followed Democratic precedents. Democrats do not leave these kinds of loopholes in the laws they enact. [Applause.] Only Republicans do that. [Laughter.] The act of 1918 guarded against all that difficulty. But some shrewd gentleman—not a member of the committee of course, but some shrewd expert—can always get his hand into the arrangements under a Republican administration and all its legislation, whether it be tariff or internal revenue.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] says he is always with the majority. I want to call his attention to the fact that in this instance he is not. This committee made up this bill. It is perfect in form, perfect in substance. The Treasury Department says so in so many words, indorsing it in form and in substance. But the gentleman from Michigan was not here then. He was out in the West. Somebody discovered this bill and discovered that they were likely to get some coal and lumber lands in exchange, and immediately the gentleman from Michigan comes back to Washington post haste; and it seems there were some wise men that came with him, or at least behind him, and, lo and behold, you will have an opportunity in a few minutes, when this bill is read under the five-minute rule, to vote for an amendment.

And what is the object of the amendment? The object of the amendment is not to change the law as it is now interpreted by the Treasury Department. I think the gentleman from Michigan will agree that it is not to change the law as it is drawn in this bill, for I held that up to Mr. GILBERT and asked him if that would not be the exact law in this bill, and he said it would. But the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] is going to tell you that he is not willing that the ruling of the Treasury Department shall continue as it is, for he is afraid that a change will be made and that some other Secretary of the Treasury or some other Commissioner of Internal Revenue will change the law, and so he wants to put in an amendment so as to protect, as he says, the conditions existing in the West. What is the result of the change he proposes to make? Let us analyze it for just a moment. My friend from Michigan used an illustration which I thought was not a very happy one. Nevertheless it is an illustration. Under the laws of the country at the present time the Interior Department is exchanging lumber lands in the West with private individuals in order that these alternate sections may be blocked up and the land thereby become more valuable. There is no limitation on the Secretary of the Interior. It is in his discretion. For instance, he feels kindly, we will say, toward Mr. COLLIER, and he wants to favor him. I do not say he would do that, but I say if he knew the genial disposition and the good heart of the gentleman from Mississippi he would favor him all he could. Anyway, he makes an exchange of lands with Mr. COLLIER. Mr. COLLIER takes one of the Interior Department sections of land and in return the Department of the Interior takes one of Mr. COLLIER's sections of land, and in doing so Mr. COLLIER gains to the extent of $20,000. You say there is no tax to be paid.

I agree that under the interpretation of the law at the present time that there is no tax to be paid. But is there any reason why you should not let the Secretary of the Treasury look into it as well as the Secretary of the Interior? They are both Republican executive officers, under the Republican administration. Why not allow two Secretaries to look into the transaction as well as one?

The gentleman from Michigan was not willing to do that. The gentleman from Michigan cost this Government $400,000,000 by insisting upon this identical section. If you will turn to the revenue act of 1918 and the revenue act of 1921 and make a comparison, and turn to the identical page, you will find that this is the valuation clause and the exchange clause in the internal revenue act of 1921 that the gentleman from Michigan and myself have quarreled so much about; and I said on the floor of the House then, and I repeat now, that the enactment of that legislation which he insisted upon and which he honestly believed was to the best interests of the country and believed to be honest legislation—I say it to his credit—has cost this Government not less than $400,000,000 in the exchange of these properties.

Now, Mr. Chairman, you may say it is desirable to pass this bill, and it is desirable to pass it in this form. But if the amendment that will be suggested by the gentleman from Michigan is adopted, it will only put into the law the present interpretation of the statute, as I understand it. At least, that is the statement of Mr. GILBERT.

But I call your attention to the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury has said that this is perfect in substance and in form, and I call your attention to the further fact that the entire committee unanimously, Democrats and Republicans, reported this out, after we had had three different meetings with the Treasury officials. I believe it was three, was it not, I will ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN]? Yes; three. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], as I tell you, came back, reversed the decision, opposed the amendment, and the committee authorized a halt.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman and I agree in saying that the Treasury Department would make no different application of the law, so far as the illustration that he gave is concerned, but that would not apply to some other matters.

Mr. GARNER. I am in perfect agreement with the gentleman from Iowa, and here is a situation that you Republicans ought to stop—you, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER], included. Now, that the glove situation is over, I think you ought to make an appeal to your intellect and conscience, outside of the personal interest in the district which you represent.

Mr. CROWTHER. The gentleman from Texas poses as having all the intellect, so what chance is there for the rest of us? [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] does not believe this amendment ought to be adopted. Other Republican Members do not believe it ought to be adopted, but it will be adopted, and that is the criticism I have against Mr. GREEN. His intentions are good, and if you labor with him long enough his ideas will be all right, but he does not stand firm enough. He will not stand; that is what is the matter with him.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will at least always stand for what I say and the record I make. I do not take my speeches out of the RECORD like the gentleman from Texas. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. I know. If the gentleman from Iowa would only stand up on the floor of the House as well as he does in the RECORD and maintain his position with his party as well as he puts his speeches in the RECORD, the country would be better off. I have said that on the floor of the House before, and I repeat it now. The gentleman from Iowa has been acting chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. He reports this bill as acting chairman. He gets letters from the Secretary of the Treasury as acting chairman, but he does not act when it comes to asserting his power with reference to his own judgment, because, if he had done so, he would have told Mr. FORDNEY where he got off with reference to this amendment.

If I had been acting chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and the chairman had come back to me and said he wanted to offer this amendment, I would have said: "This is a unanimous report. This has been indorsed in form or substance by the Treasury Department. Now you come back and suggest this amendment, and here is where you are making a mistake, and here is where you get off." That is what I would say to him. Mr. GREEN will not do that. Maybe he follows the better course. Maybe that is better party harmony. When we passed the bonus bill, for instance, I heard him say on the floor of the House that in conference he intended to see that some of the things he was talking about became the law. Well, those things did not become the law. When the gentleman takes his hand off of a bill in this House and lets it go over to the Senate, the gentleman from Iowa does not know exactly in what shape it is coming back with the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Michigan as a part of the bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is not my fault.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, no; it may not be the gentleman's fault, but it is the gentleman's fault that he adopts this amendment.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, no.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Michigan knows that if the gentleman from Iowa had asserted his power—

Mr. FORDNEY. He did assert his power and he did vote against the adoption of the amendment, but the majority voted for it, and as a gentleman and a good Republican he acquiesces in the action of the majority of his own party.

Mr. GARNER. That is what I say. The result is that the gentleman from Iowa does not get what he wants, because the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] undertakes to attend to things for him. He not only attends to him in the committee but he attends to him on the floor of the House.

That is what I complain of. His intentions are good, his ideas are good if he has plenty of opportunity to look into them, but his execution is not what it should be.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If my friend wants to be fair, he would say that I have had more to do with this revenue legislation than anyone else, although I sometimes got overruled by the committee.

Mr. GARNER. Yes; as a usual thing I say I find myself in accord with the gentleman from Iowa, and as a usual thing I find the gentleman from Iowa in the minority of the Republicans on the committee.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no; the committee generally agrees with me.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph (1) of subdivision (c) of section 202 of the revenue act of 1921 is amended, to take effect January 1, 1923, to read as follows:

"(1) When any such property held for productive use in trade or business (not including stock in trade or other property held primarily for sale) is exchanged for property of a like use."

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Committee amendment: Page 1, strike out the matter in lines 6, 7, 8, and 9 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, my good friend from Texas [Mr. GARNER] always exaggerates. He is a big ear of corn in a little shuck. I am very fond of him. He is a dear, good fellow. We differ sometimes, and it is an honest difference of opinion. But as to this particular amendment, gentlemen, permit me to say that Mr. GARNER does my beloved friend from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] a great injustice, in my opinion. I was absent from the city when this bill was reported out by the committee, and on my return here I discovered—upon the best legal advice that I could get, I am not a lawyer—that the bill as reported is uncertain and ambiguous as to its real meaning. I called the Secretary of the Treasury and asked him if I were not correct. He called into his presence the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Gilbert, a very estimable gentleman, and, after considering the suggestion made by me, decided that I was correct. I have here a letter from the Secretary stating that the Treasury Department has no objection to the amendment which I submit to the committee, which was prepared by the Treasury Department and has been adopted by a majority vote of the committee.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa and some other gentlemen of the committee did not agree to the amendment, but all acknowledged that its adoption would make plain the fact that no change to certain provisions of existing law was intended by the bill as it was originally presented to the committee and reported before this amendment was agreed to. I am very much in favor of the bill. It should be enacted into law soon to enable the Treasury Department to collect taxes that by an evasion of the law by certain people it is now losing.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Why did the gentleman from Michigan so draw the law as to let these people escape from taxation?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, the gentleman from Texas is wrong, and, as a lawyer, he ought to know that he is wrong. The bill does not permit anybody legally to escape the payment of taxes. They escape by hook or crook by an evasion of the law. We are now trying by this bill to make it possible for the Treasury Department to collect every dollar of taxes it is entitled to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish the gentleman would tell us in a few words just exactly what it does do.

Mr. FORDNEY. If two corporations or individuals are exchanging land, to bunch up property or consolidate their holdings, to get it together where it is more valuable to both, and there is no profit made by either, then there shall be no tax. For instance, suppose up in Pennsylvania a man owns some coal lands in a certain township, a few scattered pieces, but in an adjoining township he owns the major portion of the coal lands. Suppose there is another party willing to exchange holdings for the purpose of better grouping both interests.

They exchange these lands in order to group up and make them more valuable to both. Where no profit is shown by this exchange, I want the law to be clear that there shall be no taxes due, and that is all this amendment does, and that is what existing law does.

Mr. MADDEN. What does the bill do?

Mr. FORDNEY. Through a propaganda, as explained by the Secretary of the Treasury in his letter, which will go into the Record, securities are being exchanged, not on the boards of trade but by brokers, where profits are derived, but on which profits the Treasury Department is unable to collect taxes, because of misrepresentation and violation of the law. However, if a loss is to be sustained, instead of exchanging through the brokers in a private office, they go onto the board of trade and there take the loss, and then use that loss in making out their tax statement and get the benefit of the loss; and this bill is to correct that practice.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. What about this sort of a case? Suppose a citizen had a lot of stocks and he did not want to pay the tax, and he sold the stocks to-day and bought them back tomorrow in order to avoid the tax. Does this bill correct that?

Mr. FORDNEY. I am not certain as to such a case, but he can no longer, through a stock broker, make such exchanges without paying a tax where a profit has been made. That is what the bill is intended to correct. It is to catch those transactions which are now escaping taxation through exchanges in a private office through brokers in the way the gentleman speaks of.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain what tax would be paid to this exchange of lands if the gentleman's amendment was not adopted?

Mr. FORDNEY. The Treasury Department says that they did not intend to draw the bill to make such exchanges of property taxable, but they admit it might be so construed, and if so, then the parties making the exchange, even though no profit has been made, if the internal revenue commissioner should so rule, must pay a tax, or go into court and fight the matter out. My good friend from Texas [Mr. GARNER] a few moments ago, in discussing House bill 13775, said that he was opposed to giving any one man such great power as that to which he referred. That is exactly what this bill will do, if you do not adopt this amendment. It will give more power to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Where persons exchange property with profit to neither he may insist that a profit was made and compel the payment of a tax. If one property is more valuable than the other, when that property is converted into money, then the profit shall pay a tax, but the amendment will not call upon the party making the exchange to pay the tax on a profit until that profit has been obtained.

Mr. MADDEN. Suppose he never sells the property. Suppose, for example, the gentleman from Michigan owns a piece of property and I own two pieces of property. The gentleman's piece is worth more than my two pieces. Suppose we traded them, and on the face of the record show that we traded them even, whereas as a matter of fact money passed between us to make up the difference.

Mr. FORDNEY. Then the profit is taxable.

Mr. MADDEN. But who knows about that?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, if you attempt to evade the law; if you make a profit and do not pay the tax, that is fraud, and the law forbids frauds. If a profit is made by one or the other, the law provides that the profit shall pay a tax, but if two pieces of property are exchanged, city property, farms, coal property or timber property and there is no profit made, then no tax shall be paid and this amendment makes that point clear.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the gentleman just now he stated in answer to the question of the gentleman from Illinois that you could not sell stock at the low price now and then buy it back and avoid the tax. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that recently I have read of many cases where they issued large amounts of stock and declared dividends, in one case as high as 900 per cent. Does this law stop that?

Mr. FORDNEY. This law is supposed to correct existing law in the exchange of personal property and collect taxes where profit is made—but does not deal with stock dividends—that is an entirely different matter—

Mr. SEARS. Perhaps the gentleman did not understand the question.

Mr. FORDNEY. At all events, if it is fraud, fraud can be always corrected.

Mr. SEARS. Now, the issuing of stock—

Mr. FORDNEY. Perhaps I did not get the gentleman's question fully.

Mr. SEARS. Now they are increasing the capital stock and issuing stock dividends in some cases up to 300 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. I am sorry that I have not more time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more; this is an important matter, and he claims to know more about his amendment than anybody else.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Michigan be extended five minutes. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose there is an exchange of properties, and the properties themselves are of equal value before the exchange, but after the exchange it enhances the respective properties of the parties making the exchange $100,000 apiece?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose the parties allege that there has been no profit to either of them. Will the amendment of the gentleman prevent the reaching of the profits in those properties?

Mr. FORDNEY. It does not. Whenever either piece of property so exchanged is converted into money, then that profit will be taxed.

Mr. BLANTON. Must be.

Mr. FORDNEY. Absolutely, and there is no escape from it.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. ARENTZ. For instance, I own a piece of land in Iowa—corn land, worth $200 an acre—or I will say a woman does. A man owns a piece in Texas, in the Panhandle, worth $5 an acre. He comes along to this woman and says, "I have 320 acres of land in the Panhandle section"—does not state what it is worth—"which I will exchange for 160 acres of your corn land." This woman thinks it possible they might strike oil down there, and makes the exchange; and she gives 160 acres, worth $200 an acre, for 320 acres of land in the Panhandle district, worth $5 an acre. He does not pay one cent—

Mr. FORDNEY. If the gentleman thinks that anybody is darn fool enough to give away $200 land for $5 land—

Mr. ARENTZ. I have seen—

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not want to argue the question. Pardon me, my friend, I did not mean to be sarcastic, but I want to say this much: In the exchange of property it is supposed that fair value will be given, one with the other. Now, I do not want to place it in the power of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to say one man has made a profit when he insists he has not, and make him pay taxes on supposed profit until he has converted that property into money. That is the point. Gentlemen, the only purpose of the amendment is to prevent the tax upon exchange of property where there is no profit made. If there is a bonus paid, if there is additional money paid in exchange, that money is taxable under the provisions of the amendment. This amendment is recommended by the Treasury Department, gentlemen, and I hope the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? Suppose the properties are not converted into money; then will the profits from the enhanced value be reached by taxation?

Mr. FORDNEY. That is existing law; but I do not want anybody to pay taxes if no profit is made.

Mr. BLANTON. But if you make the exchange and reap $100,000 profits thereby, you ought to pay the tax.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; and under the law you have to pay it. This will not relieve you in any way from the payment of such tax in that respect.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I think a sufficient answer to what the gentleman from Texas has said as to how much I have accomplished before the committee is to call attention to the fact that these Treasury bills have been referred to me, and that even under his own administration, when they wanted something done with nonpolitical matters in that committee, they appealed to the "gentleman from Iowa" to take care of the Treasury bills. I did take care of them and they went through, as these bills are going through.

Mr. GARNER. I agree with the gentleman, and I said in the beginning that the gentleman had been very valuable, and under his supervision he reported out these five bills and they are all good legislation. The only thing I regret is that the gentleman from Michigan came back and kicked him out. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to reply to that. This bill is altogether too important to be laughed at, because it means, as the gentleman from Texas stated in one of his various remarks that happened to be correct, that about $50,000,000 will be lost to the Treasury of the United States if it is not passed. The Treasury has already sustained large losses. The stockbrokers and dealers on the stock exchange are advertising that they can make these exchanges in such a manner that no tax will result, and practically no taxes will be collected on account of profits made in stock deals unless this bill becomes a law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman give his views as to the pending committee amendment, so that the committee may have them in determining whether or not this amendment should be adopted?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will answer the gentleman, going back to the very beginning. I fear that the members of the committee may have gotten an incorrect notion of the present law and of the amendment.

Under the present law neither gain nor loss is recognized on exchanges of property of like kind or use with the exception of stock in trade held for sale. Consequently there is no profit to be assessed or loss to be deducted thereon under the present law. The effect of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] would be merely to add to this exception stocks, bonds, and choses of action. The bill goes further and would make exchanges of all property not held for production use taxable the same as if the property had been sold. The reason I was not in favor of the amendment was this, that it restored the words "for investment" after the word "property." Now, property that is held purely for speculative purposes is held for investment, and consequently the amendment would take out of the operation of the bill property held purely for speculative purposes. I believe that on exchange of such property the ordinary rule should apply, whether it be city lots.

My own view of the case as it stands now is this: This bill must go over to the Senate in the last days of the session. If it is adopted there, it will have to go through practically by unanimous consent. The amount of transactions which would be included by the bill as it stands, over what would be included under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, is probably not very large, and the loss of revenue which it would cause would not be very great; whereas if this bill did not pass at all there would be an immense loss to the Treasury. Therefore, I would rather have this bill passed in its present form than not to pass at all.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to read two or three paragraphs in his time, so that the House may understand what the existing law is?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. The existing law, paragraph (c), page 6 of the comparison of the acts, reads:

(c) For the purpose of this title, on an exchange of property, real, personal, or mixed, for any other such property, no gain or loss shall be recognized unless the property received in exchange has a readily realizable market value; but even if the property received in exchange has a readily realizable market value, no gain or loss shall be recognized.

That is the existing law. I want to make it plain that we are not changing that law. That is all.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Of course, we do not change that part of the law, either under the bill as it stands or as it would be amended by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield in that connection?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that there never was a more intelligent report made to Congress than the one the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] has made on this bill. It points out not only what is the existing law but what the changes are.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. May I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. If any gentleman will get this report he will find the law as it is and the law as it will be if this bill becomes a law as reported. He will see exactly what the changes are. I think that ought always to be done when a law is changed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I want to say further in reference to the statement made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] that even as the law now stands it would bring in more revenue than the law of 1918, because people would not make these exchanges under the act of 1918 and be taxed for profit; but if there was a loss they would make the exchange or sell the property. Then they got the benefit of the allowance for the loss. This could be done under the act of 1918, passed by a Democratic administration. It was the intention of the Republicans in passing the law of 1921 both to facilitate business and also to bring in revenue to the Government from the profits on the sales that would be made of capital assets.

Another feature of this bill relates to "other property," either money, cash, or some other property that is received in what we commonly call "boot" in a trade of such property as is specified in the paragraph amended by section 1 of the bill.

The even exchange of these properties, neither under the present law nor under the bill as it is proposed, would be taxable, because when people make a straight exchange they do not give any boot one way or the other, and in that case it is presumed that neither has realized any profit in the transaction. They simply get property that they can handle or use otherwise to better advantage. But the provisions of the law as it stands has enabled stock speculators to effect an immense profit, and then, simply by an exchange and taking something as boot, realize on their profits without paying any tax to the Treasury.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this legislation in the last section of the bill, on page 2, is to tax the actual cash profits on exchanges of stocks and bonds, choses in action, or other securities, or certificates of indebtedness or interest—to tax the actual gain when any amount has been paid in such exchange in cash by one party to the other. Whenever stocks, bonds, or other obligations named are exchanged and money passes in the transaction the gain will be taxed. It is not now taxed.

Now, the amendment proposed to the first part of the bill is to accomplish the same purpose in the exchanges of property. Under the present law if John Doe exchanges a piece of property with Richard Roe and no money consideration is given by either no tax is paid until the one party or the other sells the property received by him in the exchange. These exchanges are confined to exchanges of properties of like kind or use.

When the property is realized upon the Treasury Department ascertains the value of the property as of March 1, 1913, which he gave in exchange, and subtracts that from the amount he received for the property he had just sold, and upon the difference between these two amounts he pays a tax. That is, it applies the same rule to exchanges of real property by taxing only the realized gain, when the gain has been realized, which we propose to do for stocks, bonds, and the other obligations named in the second section of the bill under consideration. The amendment in the first section of the bill as it now reads omits some words from the present law. It leaves out the words "for investment or" and the words "kind or." The omission of these words limits the exchanges that will not be taxed until the property is realized upon to property held for productive use. The Treasury Department found upon examination that it is often difficult to determine whether a piece of property taken in exchange will be held for productive use or for investment. For instance, a man has a mill. He exchanges some property. He obtains some timber which he intends to manufacture into lumber. His mill burns down. He has not the funds to rebuild. Then he must hold the land he receives in exchange as an investment, at least for a time. The Treasury suggests that if the words cited are stricken from the law then the Treasury must ascertain whether an estimated gain had been made, and assess a tax upon such estimated profit, even though no money had been paid as part of the consideration in the transaction. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] restores the language of the existing law, and add in the parentheses certain words excluding from the operation of this paragraph the kinds of property named in the second section of the bill, which is new legislation. We propose to relieve the taxpayers from paying taxes on transactions which may really result in a loss. John Doe and Richard Roe may have made an exchange, and Richard Roe may have been considered to have made a profit at the time the transaction was consummated. If when he sells the property received in the exchange he sells it for less than the value as of March 1, 1913, of the property he gave in exchange he really suffers a loss. If we retain the present law exchanges of property will be taxable only when the property is realized upon in whole or in part, and then to the extent of the profits made, and the taxes will be duly collected upon all profits, actual and realized, obtained from exchanges of property.

If we leave out of the law the words cited, the Treasury Department will be compelled to investigate every exchange to determine whether any profit has been made by either party or not, and if they find that any estimated profit has been made by either party they must assess the tax, providing it is also considered that the exchange was made for purposes of investment and not for productive use. How can the questions so raised be decided except by continuous litigation, which will accomplish no good purpose not accomplished by the law as it now stands?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Oregon be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. May I conclude this one statement? The Treasury officials will be compelled to investigate all exchanges, because no official of the Treasury would feel himself warranted in omitting to make an investigation and collect any possible tax. He might be held to have been derelict in his duty. Now, it may be that when John Doe and Richard Roe exchanged property John Doe was considered to have made a gain, whereas really he made a loss when he sold the property received in exchange for less than the value of the property as of March 1, 1913, which he gave in the exchange.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman is right at the point where I want to ask my question. If John Doe made a loss, then Richard Roe must have made a gain. Did not one of them make a gain if the other one was compelled to make a loss?

Mr. HAWLEY. No one making a gain in exchange of properties will finally escape taxation. He will be taxed when he realizes upon the property in whole or in part. The exchanges are limited to exchanges of properties of like kind or use.

Mr. STEVENSON. But that may never happen. Suppose they go on swapping with somebody else? Suppose Roe, after he makes his gain, swaps it to somebody else? When are you going to determine whether a loss is made?

Mr. HAWLEY. Under the present law a gain is made and becomes taxable when a man sells the property that he has received in exchange for more than the property he gave in exchange was worth on March 1, 1913. That gain is an actual fact, and should be and is taxed. It is not a supposed gain where eventually it may happen that the transaction really resulted in a loss.

Mr. STEVENSON. But suppose instead of selling it he swaps it again, where are you going to locate your gain? Suppose he never sells? He may bequeath it to his heirs.

Mr. HAWLEY. You can conceive of an endless chain under any circumstances, I suppose; but we are dealing with a practical situation where property is being exchanged and afterwards sold for cash. It is difficult to conceive of such an endless line of exchanges in which a money consideration would not be a part of the exchange at any time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are there not cases where the owners of large real-estate interests are trying to evade taxation by exchanging and holding it for years and years?

Mr. HAWLEY. That would be a difficult question to answer, since it would require an examination of each exchange to ascertain whether any money was given as part of the consideration. It is difficult to imagine a series of transactions extending over a period of years in which the property was so evenly valued that no money consideration was at any time necessary to adjust the differences.

There is a further factor of importance, and that is that the exchanges must be between properties of like kind or use.

Mr. STAFFORD. Exchanging it with holding corporations. I can see how taxation might be avoided entirely in the case instanced by the gentleman from South Carolina by keeping on exchanging and exchanging instead of receiving cash.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman knows that there are always persons who strive to evade the law and take wise counsel in order to do it.

Mr. STAFFORD. They try to evade taxation.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not think the situation that the gentleman cites could possibly arise, because sometime such property would be realized on, in whole or in part, or some cash consideration be a part of the exchange, and when either of these things occur a settlement is made and taxes or profits collected.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not necessarily; it could be handed down to a holding corporation.

Mr. HAWLEY. But whenever it was sold, in whole or in part, or any cash received in a transaction, a settlement would be made and taxes due collected.

Mr. STAFFORD. I should think you might permit them to exchange in one instance, but compel them to pay taxes on the determined valuation when exchanged in the second and following instances.

Mr. FORDNEY. When the attention of the Treasury Department was called to the ambiguity of the bill as reported the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury came up before the committee and recommended this amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In answer to what the gentleman from South Carolina said, any person who has a tract of real estate which has gone up in value has undoubtedly made a profit, but we do not tax him on that profit until he sells it. In the same way we preserve this principle through the law—that we do not tax him on the property exchanged unless he receives money or some other property of readily realizable value, so that he has actually realized his profit.

Mr. STAFFORD. If he receives other property, you do not tax him; it is only when he receives money that he is liable to be taxed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If other property has been received by him to boot, he is taxed.

Mr. STAFFORD. That contradicts the statement of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I want to ask the gentleman from Oregon a question. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] said that upon reconsideration of this matter the Treasury Department came to a certain conclusion. Then the gentleman from Michigan said that after the Treasury's attention had been called to the ambiguity of the language it came to a certain other conclusion. The Treasury Department has been administering this law since the act of 1921. It has made two annual reports. In these annual reports it points out this defect. The bill was considered, was prepared in the Treasury Department, was sent to the committee, and was introduced by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN]. We had hearings on the bill. This same Assistant Secretary of the Treasury was before the committee. We referred the bill to the Treasury Department, and the Secretary, Mr. Mellon, wrote a letter in which he said in form and substance that it was all right. When did they come to this reconsideration and what brought it about?

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes. I know the gentleman from Michigan can tell us.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, the gentleman does not know anything of the kind. Here is a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, dated the 25th, where he discovered the error in the first bill, which the gentleman helped to report out. The gentleman always makes a mistake of that kind until I help to correct him, and I did it in this case. I called the attention of the Secretary to the fact that there was an error, and he saw it. He saw the light of day before the gentleman did. Here is his letter.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I have got the information. I understand now when this reconsideration came about, when this wisdom came into the Treasury Department and Mr. Mellon was convinced. It was when the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] visited the Department of the Treasury and pointed this error out to him.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, let me read the letter to the gentleman.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, no; I have Mr. Mellon's letter here.

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman has not got the last one?

Mr. GARNER. Oh, I have the new letter.

Mr. FORDNEY. Then get right on the bill. The gentleman is wrong.

Mr. GARNER. That is a question for the House to determine. I merely wanted to call the attention of the House to the fact that this wise Treasury Department—and I believe it is wise in many respects, and is a wise administration of the Treasury Department—has gone along for two years urging Congress to stop up this gap, pointing out to the Congress that they had framed a bill which would reach the matter, and then when the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] visited the department he had an interview with the Secretary of the Treasury, it seems, who then writes a letter and says that he was mistaken, that the gentleman from Michigan had come up and told him wherein he was mistaken; therefore he recommends this amendment. Now, mark this statement. This is the first time that I have ever heard of a department of this Government saying, first, that a bill is perfect in form and substance, and then within 10 days writing a letter saying that an amendment is necessary. The department actually considered the matter for more than two years, actually had a hearing before the committee three times, after the Assistant Secretary had been there and prepared the bill. Then the Secretary of the Treasury writes a letter saying that it is perfect in form and substance, then the gentleman from Michigan

[Mr. FORDNEY] visits the department, and the Secretary of the Treasury writes another letter saying that he was mistaken, that there is an error, and that therefore they need this amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] will recall that during the hearings on the bill, with the exception of probably two or three lines, all of the time was devoted to the second part of the bill, and no question was raised upon the first part. The committee obtained no information relative to the proposed changes in that, no question having been raised. A question was raised later as to whether the proposed change in the first part of the bill was for the best interests of the country, and that question was submitted to the Treasury Department. The Treasury thereupon reported that the present language in the law, with the insertion of the additional language provided in the amendment offered by the committee to make it harmonize with the provisions of the second section, should be substituted in lieu of the matter now in the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. On what subject?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Principally upon the subject referred to in the speech of the gentleman from West Virginia a little while ago.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I shall not object if I can have five minutes in which to reply.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. But the gentleman has already made his speech.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ] some time ago rose on this floor and quoted a newspaper report from the Washington Post, in this city, in which it was stated that a gentleman from Los Angeles was in the city, and that it was understood he was trying to get a list of the American Legion members for the purpose of sending out through the mails a speech, according to the gentleman from West Virginia, quoting from the Post, of Mr. McAdoo in favor of a tariff soldiers' bonus.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Not out of five minutes; the gentleman has had his say.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I said, according to the newspaper interview. I want the gentleman to quote me correctly.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Here is the statement. I have got it here. Here is what the gentleman said, quoting a paper; the paper did not charge it as a fact, but it said it was understood that was the case. So the gentleman from West Virginia made his speech attacking the Legion national commander, not by name, although he said the national Legion executive officers.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Not now; the gentleman has had his day.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. The gentleman ought not to charge that I attacked the Legion when I merely called upon it for a categorical affirmation or denial. Deal fairly with me this afternoon.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. What is that?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I said, deal fairly and do not impute to me words that I never uttered.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. There is no intention of misrepresenting the gentleman. If the gentleman will sit down a minute, he may have the occasion later to get mad.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I will be here.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Here is what he said. He said if this charge were true that the Legion ought to deny it. The national commander a few days later gave out an interview and did deny it; he said the Legion did not circulate the speech of Mr. McAdoo, and National Commander Owsley, a gentleman from my State, said he had no knowledge that anybody connected with the Legion in California was doing so. The gentleman from West Virginia gets upon the floor this afternoon again and makes another speech. He makes one speech that is taken down by the reporters and has the reporters kill the speech he actually made on the floor, and hands in to the reporters what I now hold in my hand—the speech to be published. I agree with the gentleman from West Virginia that the Legion as such ought not to be used to promote partisan politics. I agree that politicians ought not to try to use the Legion for selfish political purposes. I agree with him that if anybody in the Legion gives out a list of the membership for the use of politicians that it is to be condemned, and I commend to a degree that part of what the gentleman from West Virginia says in that speech which is to be printed, which he did not deliver in its entirety. Now, he concludes.

Mr. McARTHUR. Is it an illustrated speech?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Illustrated in a way. Here is what he says. He quotes the commander of the Legion in which the commander of the Legion said that if the gentleman from West Virginia would make a good speech in favor of the bonus the Legion might circulate that.

The gentleman from West Virginia observes that he has already made two good speeches in favor of the bonus and the Legion has not circulated either one of them. Listen to how he concludes:

The commander of the Legion before he speaks publicly of the record of a Congressman ought to inform himself as to what that record is. May I quote from a speech made by me in the House as early as May, 1920?

And so he appends to his remarks a printed copy, copied from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, of a speech in favor of the bonus made by the gentleman from West Virginia, and it is a good speech. He says that the Legion commander says that if he made a good speech he would circulate it. But when I turn over this card upon which this speech by this gentleman—who thinks that no one ought to use the Legion for political purposes, no one ought to use the name of a Legion member in connection with politics—when I read here this eloquent speech and then look over on the reverse side I see the handsome face of the gentleman from West Virginia [WELLS GOODYKOONTZ], candidate for reelection to Congress. [Laughter and applause.] Turning over on the other side I find these words at the head of it: "Hon. WELLS GOODYKOONTZ, M. C., in the House of Representatives, on the World War adjusted compensation bill." Down at the bottom I find the language:

In America, the land of the free, the home of the brave, all stand equal. All, irrespective of race or religion, are equal, no stockbroker or profiteer has a halter about my neck.

Now, gentlemen, if the gentleman from West Virginia does not believe his position or my position on the bonus ought to be used for political purposes by Legion men, why has the gentleman circulated in his district the handsome photograph on this card and on the reverse side his speech on the bonus? There is nothing in it about any other kind of legislation. Was that meant for the purpose of circulating among those opposed to the bonus? Was that for the purpose of circulating among the profiteers and the stockbrokers who had halters around the necks of those who did not agree with the gentleman from West Virginia on that subject? Oh, the gentleman from West Virginia means only that he does not believe in anybody using the Legion for political purposes except himself. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HUSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13774) to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to exchange of property, had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, may we have a division on that?

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 29.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GREEN of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks made this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

SINKING FUND.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13827) relating to the sinking fund for bonds and notes of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13827. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13827, with Mr. HUSTED in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13827, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13827) relating to the sinking fund for bonds and notes of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (a) of section 6 of the Victory Liberty loan act is amended by inserting before the period at the end of the first sentence a comma and the following words: "and of bonds and notes thereafter issued, under any of such acts or under any of such acts as amended, for refunding purposes."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment unless somebody desires to debate it.

* Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman does not care to take time for debate, I will ask for recognition. I am trying to get the gentleman to understand that he ought at least to give us some information as to what we shall take up and what is the understanding as to the division of time in debate. The gentleman does not seem to appreciate that there are two sides to these questions. I thought the gentleman was going to take up the Hudspeth bill, because I know we do not have time to take up a matter of this importance this afternoon.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman desires, I will move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman will remember, and the members of the committee will remember, that in reference to this sinking fund bill there was quite a controversy in the committee.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am perfectly willing to move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. GARNER. I think the gentleman ought to, because he can not expect to dispose of that bill this afternoon.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in view of the controversy, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the committee do now rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HUSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13827) relating to the sinking fund for bonds and notes of the United States, had come to no resolution thereon.

PERMITTING ENTRY OF DOMESTIC ANIMALS.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Joint Resolution 422, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon calls up House Joint Resolution 422 and asks unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 422) permitting the entry free of duty of certain domestic animals which have crossed the boundary line into foreign countries.

Resolved, etc. That despite the provisions of the third paragraph of paragraph 1506 of Title II of the tariff act of 1922, horses, mules, asses, cattle, sheep, goats, and other domestic animals, which heretofore have strayed across the boundary line into any foreign country, or been driven across such boundary line by the owner for temporary pasturage purposes only, or which may so stray or be driven before March 1, 1923, shall, together with their offspring, be admitted free of duty, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, if brought back to the United States within 12 months from the time they so strayed or were driven.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, this joint resolution simply extends the time in the present emergency in the Southwest during which stock can be taken across the border into Mexico for pasturage purposes and brought back into the United States without the payment of duties. There has been a continued drought in the Southwest, extending over a period of months, and the cattle, sheep, horses, and other domestic animals are in serious need of food. They can obtain suitable pasturage in Mexico. The Mexicans require that leases be taken out for the period of 12 months. Even if rains come soon in that section and the grass begins to grow again, it should not be pastured for a time, that it may have time to obtain a vigorous growth. The Treasury Department recommends the passage of the bill and urges the emergency as a reason for it. The War Finance Corporation in a letter of January 25, 1923, states that not only the owners of the cattle and other stock are interested but that banks have loaned considerable money on this stock, which will be endangered if the animals are not provided with pasturage.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield to me just a moment?

Mr. HAWLEY. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this is an extremely important measure to the live-stock producer of the Southwest, especially to the cattle and sheep men of New Mexico and a portion of western Texas. I am especially lending my plea for those who have undergone a most disastrous drought in New Mexico. That splendid State has no spokesman on this floor at the present time. The mouth of Nestor Montoya, their faithful representative, was closed in death about three weeks ago. Owing to the range being denuded of grass, on account of this drought in New Mexico and a small portion of my district hundreds of cattlemen were forced to move their homes into Mexico, where sustenance could be obtained. They were compelled to execute a lease from the Mexican landowners for a period of 12 months. Under the bill that bears the name of my good friend from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], cattle and other live stock driven or straying across the line in a foreign country must be brought back within eight months or pay full duty.

Gentlemen, the cattlemen who have their herds in Mexico have met with too many reverses in the last three years to stand this duty. My bill, which you are now considering, provides for the return, duty free, of all live stock taken into Mexico in recent months—for 12 months from March 1, 1923. It is the duty of this House to pass this bill at once. When you do it you extend relief to as sturdy, as honest, and as patriotic a class of men as ever blessed this country with their presence and made it better by their having been a part of it.

I called on the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, and he readily indorsed it. I am attaching a letter as a part of my remarks from Hon. Eugene Meyer, chairman War Finance Corporation, to Mr. FORDNEY, strongly indorsing this measure, and the Ways and Means Committee has passed it and with a unanimous report.

The letter is as follows:

WAR FINANCE CORPORATION,
THE TREASURY BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1923.

Hon. J. W. FORDNEY,
Chairman Committee on Ways and Means,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. FORDNEY: The attention of the directors of the War Finance Corporation has been called to House Joint Resolution 422, introduced by Mr. HUDSPETH, and I am writing to you at their request to express the hope that the resolution will receive favorable consideration.

The resolution proposes to amend the third paragraph of paragraph 1506 of the tariff act of 1922 by extending temporarily from 8 to 12 months the period within which domestic animals may be returned to the United States duty free from a foreign country to which they have been driven for temporary pasturage purposes. A serious drought developed during the summer and fall of 1922 in the southern portion of New Mexico, and the situation became so acute that there was grave danger, on account of the lack of feed and water, of the loss of a considerable number of cattle pledged to the War Finance Corporation as security for some of its loans. It became necessary in order to save the cattle to move them out of the drought-stricken area to adjoining States and to sections of Mexico, where adequate feed and water were available, and the board of directors of the War Finance Corporation consented to the removal of the cattle by the loan company through which the loans were made.

We are advised that if the best results are to be secured from such movement the cattle should remain in Mexico for more than the eight months' period within which they may under existing law be returned duty free, and it would be a serious hardship if the owners of the cattle were compelled to pay an import duty upon them. The directors of the War Finance Corporation understand that the Secretary of the Treasury has already expressed the opinion that the adoption of the joint resolution would be desirable, and they concur in this view.

Very truly yours,

EUGENE MEYER, Jr., Managing Director.

I shall not consume your time further, as I wish to get it to the other side, where I trust it will pass before March 4, the close of this session. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry, if the gentleman will permit. When a bill which should have been considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is being considered in the House in lieu thereof, does not the five-minute rule apply?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ], when he understands the facts of a case, is one of the fairest men in this House. If he ever gets wrong it is only because of a misapprehension of the facts. His whole remarks concerning the attitude of the American Legion commander were based upon a misapprehension of the facts. If it had not been for that, there would have been no stricture here at all. If he knew the present commander of the American Legion—Col. Alvin M. Owsley—as well as some of the rest of us know him, he would have no complaint to make, because the present commander of the American Legion is one of the finest and fairest men in the world and will see to it as long as he holds that position that no improper use is made of the American Legion affairs. I am one of those in the House who are admirers of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ], and I am also a great admirer of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], with whom he had the stricture. If these two men just understood each other a little better there would have been no stricture. It is just a misunderstanding all around.

Now, so far as the names of the members of the American Legion are concerned, they are obtainable for proper purposes. It has no secret list. In the 64 newspapers that are published in my district I have noticed from time to time the names of the various members belonging to the different local posts in my district. They make no secret of them. If they made a secret of their membership, from my knowledge of the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ], who is as fair a man now as he was when he was a distinguished jurist in his State—if they should make a secret of their membership, the gentleman from West Virginia would be the first man here in the House to object to it. They make no secret of it. If the list is obtainable by one man, it is accessible to all. I just wanted to say this because I think there has been a misunderstanding between two of our Members here, both splendid gentlemen.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. If I have the time, I yield.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I want to say to the distinguished gentleman from Texas that while I spoke extemporaneously and substituted a manuscript, I am satisfied that I said almost precisely what was in the manuscript, and whenever Members who are interested in the subject have read that speech they will discover that I have not made the slightest charge against Commander Owsley. I merely charged that this newspaper report sent out by the Universal Press and published broadcast in this country has never been denied. On yesterday I spoke in conversation with the commander from Pennsylvania, Col. Joe Thompson. I asked him about Commander Owsley, and he said that Commander Owsley is one of the finest men from the South. All I want to do is to protect this Legion that I have helped to create from its charter all the way down.

Mr. BLANTON. My colleague from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is a member of it himself. He was in the service. He wore the uniform. And the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ] may rest assured of the fact that just as long as Col. Alvin M. Owsley is national commander of the American Legion he never need fear that there will be anything wrong about the transactions of that organization.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed. On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 4404. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to trustees to be named by the Chamber of Commerce of Columbia, S. C., certain lands at Camp Jackson, S. C.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] if we can not agree upon time with reference to the refunding bill? I was under a misapprehension, or the gentleman is surely aware that I would not have called it up.

Mr. GARNER. How much time does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. How much time would the gentleman from Texas like to have?

Mr. GARNER. I think we had better have an hour on a side on that proposition.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Very well, then, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GARNER. Not exceeding an hour on a side.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will ask unanimous consent that the general debate on H. R. 13827 be limited to not exceeding one hour on a side, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the gentleman from Texas wishes to have the House adjourn.

Mr. GARNER. Yes; I think that will be better.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that when the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 13827, there be not to exceed two hours of general debate, half the time to be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER]. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Does "not exceeding" mean that a Member may use only one minute of the time if he so desires?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. FUNK, for three days, on account of illness.

To Mr. CLARKE of New York, for four days, on account of business in his beloved hills.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Friday, February 2, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 2, 1923.

(Legislative day of Monday, January 29, 1923.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Curtis	Hale	Kendrick
Bayard	Dillingham	Harrell	Keyes
Brookhart	Ernst	Harris	King
Bursum	Fernald	Harrison	Ladd
Cameron	Fletcher	Heflin	La Follette
Capper	Frelinghuysen	Hitchcock	Lenroot
Caraway	George	Johnson	Lodge
Couzens	Glass	Jones, Wash.	McCormick
Culberson	Gooding	Kellogg	McCumber

McKellar	Norris	Robinson	Underwood
McKinley	Oddie	Shortridge	Wadsworth
McLean	Page	Smith	Walsh, Mass.
McNary	Pepper	Smoot	Walsh, Mont.
Moses	Phipps	Spencer	Warren
Nelson	Pittman	Sterling	Watson
New	Poindexter	Swanson	Weller
Nicholson	Pomerene	Townsend	Willis
Norbeck	Reed, Pa.	Trammell

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

QUESTION OF ORDER.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. For what purpose does the Senator rise?

Mr. ROBINSON. I rise for the purpose of discussing the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] made a motion to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, a point of order. The Senator from Massachusetts has not made a motion. He announced yesterday that he intended to do so.

Mr. LODGE. I made a motion to lay the appeal on the table, and called the attention of the Chair to it.

Mr. ROBINSON. The RECORD shows just as I stated. [After a pause.] Yes; the RECORD does show that the Senator said, "I make the motion."

Mr. LODGE. I move to lay the appeal on the table, and so notified the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask the Chair to state the parliamentary question. If a motion to lay on the table has been made, of course, debate is not in order. The Senate, however, ought to understand the question before the Senate. Few Senators were here yesterday afternoon.

Mr. MOSES. They can readily get it by reading the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Debate is not in order. The Chair will state the motion. The RECORD reads:

Mr. LODGE. I was just going to move to lay the appeal on the table. Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest, then, the absence of a quorum, if the Senator wants to do that.

Mr. LODGE. I make that motion.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to lay on the table the appeal made by the Senator from Arkansas from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON. I make the point of order that the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts was not in order at the time he made it. The Senator from Arkansas had suggested the absence of a quorum, and the Senator from Massachusetts announced that he was just about to make the motion. The Senate then proceeded with a call of the Senate, which was subsequently vacated. A motion to lay on the table is not in order after the absence of a quorum has been suggested. All I want in this proposition is fairness and justice. I want the Senate to understand what it is voting upon. I do not understand that the Senator from Massachusetts, the leader of the majority, objects to the Senate understanding the question that is before it.

Mr. LODGE. I made the motion, and I do not think we ought to take the whole day, with the unanimous-consent agreement governing us, to discuss the question.

Mr. ROBINSON. The point of no quorum had been made prior to the making of the motion, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator knows that by unanimous consent all those proceedings were vacated—

Mr. ROBINSON. That is true.

Mr. LODGE. Which left it where I made it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no; that vacated the motion. The whole proceedings were vacated.

Mr. MOSES. The Vice President had not directed the Secretary to call the roll.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, the roll call proceeded. The Vice President—

Mr. MOSES. The RECORD does not show it.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Vice President directed the Secretary to call the roll, and the calling of the roll was proceeded with, and by request of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], concurred in by myself, the whole proceedings were vacated. At the time the Senator from Massachusetts sought to make the motion to lay on the table, the absence of a quorum had been suggested. Of course, the Senator could have made his motion this morning if he had gotten the floor first, but he did not take the floor. I took the floor solely for the purpose of explaining to the Senate the question that is before it. I would have concluded my explanation long before this moment if it had not been interfered with. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Arkansas will proceed for five minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I want the Senate to understand the precedent that is about to be set. During the course of the debate yesterday the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] was called to order by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] for the use of these words:

I am here to represent the people, to represent, in part, my State; I am not here to represent the bond sharks, the big financiers of Wall Street.

The Senator was called to order and compelled to take his seat. I take the position that the language used by the Senator from Alabama did not contravene the rule of the Senate which provides that—

If any Senator, in speaking or otherwise, transgresses the rules of the Senate, the Presiding Officer shall, or any Senator may, call him to order; and when a Senator shall be called to order he shall sit down, and not proceed without leave of the Senate.

No Senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator.

Clearly, Mr. President, the language of the Senator from Alabama imputed no conduct, no motive, to any other Senator. It related solely to his own motives, to his own conduct. Under every precedent of the Senate, extending over a period of 100 years, the language employed by the Senator from Alabama was permissible. As a matter of fact, the objection to his statement grows out of his oft-repeated references to certain subjects. The objection, in fact, does not arise out of the language for the use of which he was called to order. The Senator from Massachusetts, in discussing the matter yesterday, said that he did not object to the Senator from Alabama saying "I am here to represent the people, to represent, in part, my State." He also said, "I do not object to his statement that 'I am not here to represent the bond sharks, the big financiers of Wall Street.'"

The Senator from Massachusetts declared that the coupling of those two sentences constituted a direct or an indirect charge against other Senators that they represented the gamblers of Wall Street and the bond sharks, that they did not represent the people. No such inference is justified, and under the precedents of the Senate the decision of the Chair should be overruled.

If the Chair would take the trouble to consult the precedents of the Senate, which are easily available for his consideration and which are found at pages 413 and 416 of Gilfray's Precedents, he would, in my humble opinion, find that the language used by the Senator from Alabama is permissible under the rules of the Senate. If a Senator can not say, "I am here to represent the people," if he can not say, "I am not here to represent bond sharks or gamblers," then I ask Senators what is the privilege of a Senator of the United States?

Of course, some one was sensitive about the matter because of something that he thought must have been in the mind of the Senator from Alabama; but I respectfully suggest that the question of orderly debate is confined to the language employed by the Senator. If Senators will read the whole paragraph in which the words "objected to" are found, they will find that there is not the slightest implication or imputation by the Senator from Alabama. Let me read it:

Mr. HEFLIN. I merely wanted to go on record as saying a word in behalf of some of the statements of my friend, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]—I did not hear all of his speech—and to speak for the American people somewhat about a debt that is due to them. Does Wall Street want to collect her money from Great Britain and have this whole debt held up until she can collect it? She did have it held up, it seems, until she collected $1,700,000,000 from France and Great Britain. Does she want to have this debt held up for 62 years so she can go on undisturbed and collect the other money due her from the various countries? I am here to represent the people, to represent in part my State; I am not here to represent the bond sharks, the big financiers of Wall Street. I want the American people to have a fair deal.

When the connection in which the language objected to which was used by the Senator from Alabama is considered one can not arrive at the conclusion that it constituted a charge that other Senators represented Wall Street or did not represent the people. It was a declaration that Wall Street had a motive to protect its interests; it was a declaration that the Senator from Alabama was here to represent other interests than Wall Street. However much they may dislike the arguments made by a Senator or the position taken by a Senator on any subject, if Senators write into the precedents of the Senate a decision that the representative of a sovereign State can not stand on this floor and declare that he represents or seeks to represent in part his State and does not represent interests which he thinks are obnoxious to the people of his State, then we shall have gone a long way toward suppressing free speech in the Senate of the United States. Senators on the other side of the Chamber have the votes to establish this precedent, but I make this declaration: If they will give a little thought to this question they can not escape the conclusion that they are being moved by some other consideration than the language used by the Senator from Alabama.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thank the Senate for its indulgence.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask that the decision of the Chair may be read—

Mr. LODGE rose.

Mr. CURTIS. But if the Senator from Massachusetts wishes to say anything, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. LODGE. For the benefit of Senators who were not present when this incident occurred, I wish to read what was then said. It was as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The notes will be read.

The Official Reporter read as follows:

"I am here to represent the people, to represent in part my State; I am not here to represent the bond sharks, the big financiers of Wall Street."

Mr. LODGE. That is a direct reference to other Senators, of course.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President—

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was an inference.

Mr. HEFLIN. I said I was not representing them here; that I was going to speak for the people.

Mr. LENROOT. And what about the other Senators?

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not say anything about other Senators. The Senator from Massachusetts will next make a point of order against what he imagines. That is all his present point of order is founded on. I did not make the charge—

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President—

Mr. LODGE. I thought the Senator would stand by what he said.

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes. The notes show what I said, and just what I said I do stand by.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, that means that the other Senators here do not represent the American people—

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not say that.

Mr. LODGE. But do represent the bond sharks of Wall Street. It is perfectly clear.

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not say that. The Senator can not put words in my mouth. He can think what he pleases, and I can think what I please.

Mr. LODGE. But I can put them in the RECORD.

That was the question which was submitted to the Chair. The Chair ruled the words out of order. An appeal from the decision of the Chair was taken by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and I now make my motion to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CURTIS. I now ask that the decision of the Chair may be read.

Mr. LODGE. The decision of the Chair may be read.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Chair state exactly what it is upon which we are to vote at the moment?

Mr. LODGE. The pending question is my motion to lay the appeal from the ruling of the Chair on the table. It is the usual motion.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is, to lay the appeal on the table?

Mr. LODGE. To lay on the table the appeal of the Senator from Arkansas from the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the decision of the Chair.

The reading clerk read as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is ready to rule.

The language of the rule is that—

"No Senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator."

If it were merely the words spoken by the Senator, the Chair would be inclined to rule that no such imputation was intended; but with the context, the attitude, and the expression that went with them, the Chair is of the opinion that they did contain an imputation to other Senators unworthy and unbecoming, and that the words were not in order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, there are several Senators who are not present, and I suggest the absence of a quorum in order to give those Senators an opportunity to reach the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Couzens	France	Harris
Bayard	Culberson	Frelinghuysen	Harrison
Brookhart	Curtis	George	Hefflin
Bursum	Dillingham	Glass	Hitchcock
Cameron	Ernst	Gooding	Johnson
Capper	Fernald	Hale	Jones, Wash.
Caraway	Fletcher	Harrell	Kellogg

Kendrick	McLean	Phipps	Townsend
Keyes	McNary	Pittman	Trammell
King	Moses	Poindexter	Underwood
Ladd	Nelson	Pomerene	Wadsworth
La Follette	New	Reed, Pa.	Walsh, Mass.
Lenroot	Nicholson	Robinson	Walsh, Mont.
Lodge	Norbeck	Smith	Warren
McCormick	Norris	Smoot	Watson
McCumber	Oddie	Spencer	Weller
McKellar	Page	Sterling	Willis
McKinley	Pepper	Swanson

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], and the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] are detained from the Senate because of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to lay on the table the appeal of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], and vote "yea."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] to the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). In the absence of my regular pair, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], and being unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote I should vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I am unable to obtain a transfer. Therefore I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ERNST (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]. He is not present, and I can not obtain a transfer. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 28, as follows:

YEAS—40.

Ball	Harrell	McNary	Poindexter
Bursum	Jones, Wash.	Moses	Reed, Pa.
Cameron	Kellogg	Nelson	Shortridge

Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Shields	Williams

So the appeal from the ruling of the Chair was laid on the table.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, in the colloquy which occurred near the close of the session yesterday I entered, for myself—speaking for myself alone at the time—a protest against one of the statements which came to my ears as I sat on the floor from the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] relating to the Chief Justice of the United States. In looking over the RECORD this morning to ascertain if that language could be identified and located, and in looking over the reporter's copy, I have come to the conclusion that it is rather difficult, upon reading the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as printed, to ascertain exactly what was said or what did happen.

I have before me portions of the reporter's record. Some of the changes which have been made upon that record, most of them, are comparatively unimportant. Some are amusing.

For example, I find on page 2831, at the conclusion of a paragraph commencing with the words "Mr. HEFLIN" and ending with the phrase "you stand on the housetop and crow like a rooster," that the word "Laughter" is inserted. The word "Laughter" is inserted upon the reporter's record in the handwriting of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. And there was laughter in the Chamber and in the gallery, too, at that time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, part of the acerbity of the debate of yesterday arose—and I think I am fair in making this statement—from the constant attacks by inference, perhaps, sometimes directly, by the Senator from Alabama upon the people of other States, including, I may say, the poor little old State of New York.

The reporter's record shows that in one of the utterances of the Senator from Alabama there appears this sentence:

New York does so much devilment I have no time to remember anything that she does.

Now, I heard that said. The reporter heard it said. The Senator from Alabama has stricken it from the RECORD.

Mr. HEFLIN. Now, will the Senator read the rest there?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I decline to yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama has been called to order. He is not entitled to the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. I thought that question had been disposed of, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been disposed of, and the Senator from Alabama stands called to order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not yield. I have the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. A point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON. On yesterday a point of order was made against the Senator from Alabama. He was called to order for disorderly language employed in debate. The point of order was sustained, and he was required to take his seat. Subsequently the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] took the floor in his own right. Does the Chair hold now that the Senator from Alabama, having been disciplined, can not in an orderly way interrupt the Senator from New York, having the floor in his own right? Does the Chair hold that the Senator from Alabama can never again take the floor in the Senate of the United States because of the very extraordinary proceedings had a few moments ago, when the Senate, in violation of every precedent that has ever existed heretofore, held that the Senator from Alabama was out of order for declaring that he represented the people of Alabama and did not represent the bond sharks and gamblers of Wall Street?

I ask the Chair if it is the ruling of the Chair, the Senator from Alabama having been required to take his seat and the Senator from New York having taken the floor in his own right, that it is not in order for the Senator from Alabama to address the Chair and ask the Senator from New York to yield?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, does the Senator from Arkansas deny that the Senator from New York has the floor?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly not.

Mr. LODGE. Then he can not be interrupted, except with his own consent.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why, certainly not.

Mr. LODGE. His consent has not been given.

Mr. ROBINSON. But the Senator from Alabama—

Mr. LODGE. On the contrary, it has been refused.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, Mr. President, that is not the question at issue.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. ROBINSON. One moment; let me state the point of order. When the Senator from Alabama addressed the Chair and asked the Senator from New York to yield, which is the custom and the proper proceeding, which he was entitled to do—

Mr. LODGE. He did not ask him to yield.

Mr. ROBINSON (continuing). The Chair voluntarily declared that the Senator from Alabama was out of order, because he had been required to take his seat. Now, you can not disabuse the minds of Senators who heard that procedure. I know what happened. The Senator from New York had the floor in his own right. The Senator from Alabama had the right under the rules of the Senate, notwithstanding the decision of the Senate that he was out of order on yesterday, to address the Chair and ask the Senator from New York to yield. The Senator from New York, of course, has the right to decline to yield, and if he refuses to do so that ends the matter; but the Chair has no right to refuse recognition to the Senator from Alabama when the Senator from Alabama rises in his place and, having addressed the Chair—

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to call the Senator's attention to the express terms of the rule, this same subject still being before the Senate:

And when a Senator shall be called to order he shall sit down, and not proceed without leave of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Alabama was not proceeding. He was required to take his seat. He was denied the right to proceed. The subject then before the Senate was disposed of. The Senator from New York took the floor in his own right, and proceeded to discuss another matter after it was decided.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator's speech is still before the Senate, and that is the subject the Senator from New York is proceeding to discuss.

Mr. ROBINSON. For that matter, the speech of the Senator from Alabama will be before the Senate for all time to come, for whatever it may be worth. Neither the Senator from Wisconsin nor any other Senator can deprive the speech of its place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, except by a vote to strike it from the RECORD.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, as a Senator from the State of Alabama I address the Chair—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I decline to yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not quite certain what the point of order is which the Senator from Arkansas raises.

Mr. ROBINSON. I did not catch the observation of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not quite understand the point of order raised by the Senator from Arkansas. What the Chair had in mind was the fourth section of Rule XIX, to which the Senator from Wisconsin referred, and it is as follows. I read the last part of it:

Which, if granted, shall be upon motion that he be allowed to proceed in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, no such motion was made. The Senator from Alabama was through; he was deprived of the floor. The Senator from New York took the floor and proceeded to discuss a new topic, whereupon the Senator from Alabama rose, addressed the Chair, and asked the Senator from New York to yield; and when he did that, the Chair voluntarily announced that the Senator from Alabama would take his seat, that he was out of order because he had been denied the right to proceed, and because no motion to allow him to proceed had been made. My point is that the Senator from Alabama had the right to do what the Chair just a moment ago recognized that he had a right to do. The Chair reversed its ruling in recognizing the Senator from Alabama, and asking the Senator from New York if he yielded to the Senator from Alabama. The incident is closed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I did not intend to discuss the point of order, and I did not intend to endeavor to prevent the Chair from ruling. I am ready to proceed with my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have called the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Senator from Alabama on yesterday, in the hearing of us all—and his language was taken by the reporter—made this observation:

New York does so much devilment I have no time to remember anything that she does.

That has been stricken from the reporter's record by the Senator from Alabama. Not that that is particularly important, but I simply desire to have attention called to these things in order that we may realize that it is difficult to judge from the printed Record what actually happened, unless we were here when it did happen.

On another occasion, in another paragraph, the Senator from Alabama uttered these words, in effect:

Three per cent and 3½ per cent, with 62 years time in which to pay it.

Then there is written in pencil in his handwriting:

The baby born to-day will be 62 years old when it is paid under your plan.

A remark that was never made upon the floor of the Senate. Mr. President, these are not serious, they are merely indicative; but I now call attention to the colloquy which occurred between the Senator and myself as it appears on page 2830 of the RECORD of yesterday, about two-thirds the way down, in the first column, and it was this colloquy, as it occurred upon the floor, which led me to believe that the Senator from Alabama had connected the Chief Justice of the United States with Wall Street interests. I read the stenographer's report, which, incidentally, coincides exactly with my own recollection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Has the Senator as much ground for that assertion as he had for the assertion that Judge Taft went over there on a private mission to cancel the debts?

Mr. HEFLIN. Does the Senator deny that Judge Taft went over there?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not that he went over there; no.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator admits that Judge Taft went over there?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator admits he represents Wall Street?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No.

The last inquiry addressed to the Senator from New York by the Senator from Alabama which the reporter caught as reading, "The Senator admits he represents Wall Street?" has been changed to read—and the corrections are made in pencil:

Does the Senator admit that he [Mr. WADSWORTH] represents Wall Street?

Mr. President, I will not state here that the Senator from Alabama actually intended to draw the inference that the Chief Justice of the United States represented Wall Street when he went abroad on that trip. I do not charge that, but I do say, in all fairness and in all sincerity, that the language which he actually used at that time, yesterday afternoon, upon the floor of the Senate, admitted of no other interpretation. He has seen fit to correct it to the extent of avoiding such an inference. I am willing to accept that correction, but, at the same time, contend that the protest which I made upon yesterday against the language as he actually spoke it upon the floor of the Senate was a valid and warranted protest.

I have risen to make these observations in order to complete the history, as far as I may, and add what I know of it to the history of the incident of yesterday afternoon. It had been my purpose to move to expunge from the RECORD the colloquy which actually occurred yesterday on the floor of the Senate between the Senator from Alabama and myself with respect to Judge Taft, and the inference that he was allied with Wall Street. The Senator, however, has made the correction in his handwriting, in pencil, upon the reporter's notes, and as the colloquy, as corrected, appears in the printed Record, I assume it is not necessary to move to strike out that sentence.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I move that the Senator from Alabama be now allowed to proceed in order.

Mr. HEFLIN. I object.

Mr. ROBINSON. I make a point of order that that motion is not in order, the motion not being made, under the rule, when the decision of the Chair was rendered to the effect that the Senator from Alabama was not in order. The Senator from New York having taken the floor and discussed other subjects, the motion is not now in order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I now address the Chair in my own right as a Senator of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. The Chair has always understood that when a Senator was called to order he could not then proceed except on motion. The Chair may be mistaken about it, but that has always been the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Chair is entirely correct, but that means to proceed at that time; it does not mean that when the Senate decides that a Senator is out of order on account of the use of disorderly words, he may never again take the floor. It means that he can not continue the address he is then making. According to every precedent in every parliamentary body on earth, when other business intervenes, the member has a right to take the floor just as if the former incident had not happened. Every Senator about me on both sides of the Chamber is nodding his head in concurrence with that conclusion.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the rule which the Vice President has in mind is applicable to the time when the decision is made that a Senator has violated the rule.

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. When a Senator is called to order in the midst of his address, then he can not proceed until a motion is made that he be allowed to proceed in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thought I had made that clear. That is exactly what I intended to say. When the Chair holds, and the Senate sustains the Chair, that a Senator is out of order and that he must take his seat, the Senator can not proceed with that address except upon motion that he be permitted to do so; but when other business intervenes the Senator who has been required to take his seat can proceed to take the floor just the same as if no such ruling had been made.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. MOSES. What other business has intervened? I understood the Senator from New York to be discussing the same subject, namely, the speech of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no; the Senator from New York discussed an entirely different question. The Senator from New York did not discuss the motion which had already been decided; he discussed other questions which he mentioned on yesterday and took the floor to deliver an address.

Mr. LENROOT and Mr. UNDERWOOD addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will first hear the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I was only going to say that the Senate has not considered any other subject. The speech of the Senator from Alabama is the only matter which has been considered by the Senate since the Senate acted upon the Chair's ruling. I quite agree that this can not go on indefinitely; but the Senator from New York secured the recognition of the Chair to discuss other features of the Senator's speech. The rule would mean nothing if the Senator now is allowed to proceed as a matter of right, because this is the first opportunity which has been afforded to bring the matter up. I desire to have the Senator proceed, but the same subject is still before the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I want to say only one word in connection with this matter. Of course, when there are words used in debate which any Senator concludes violates the rules of the Senate, he may rise to a point of order, ask that the language be taken down, and the Senator whose language is taken down can not proceed until the matter has been disposed of, unless pending the final disposition of the point of order as to whether he is in order or not a motion is made that he may proceed in order, which is often done, and a final decision avoided. It does not bring the matter to a point.

In this case the point of order was made, and it was decided by the Chair; an appeal was taken, and a motion to lay the appeal on the table was made. A record vote has been taken, and the vote is recorded. It closed the incident. There was no other question left. To hold that because a Senator of the United States made a remark in the Senate which was not in order according to the rule of the Senate, he should not be allowed to again address the Senate unless a majority of the Senate should thereafter agree to allow him to proceed in order would enable a majority of the Senate to deprive a State of its representation on the floor of the United States Senate. It would prevent a Senator from representing his constituency. I do not understand that that power rests in the breast of a majority of the United States Senate.

It is true that if two-thirds of the Senate conclude that the position of a Senator here is such that he is not warranted in sitting here, they can expel him and allow the governor of the State to fill the vacancy; but up to that point, Mr. President, it would be an outrage, under the fundamental principle of this Government, which gives the States of the Union the right of representation here and the right to be heard, to deprive a Senator of the right to address the Senate.

Why make so much of this incident? The Senate has voted its decision. It has declared what it thinks about this matter. It has settled the incident, which came over from yesterday. It is closed on the books of the Senate by a vote which has already been taken.

When that is done the junior Senator from Alabama is entitled to the same recognition as any other Senator and to proceed in debate or in making a motion on the floor of the Senate, so long as he proceeds within the ordinary rules of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Then, the rule being extremely explicit, I understand the Senator's theory is that the Senate having proceeded to other business, it conforms to the rule.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It does not make any difference whether we proceeded to other business if the incident is closed.

Mr. LODGE. There is nothing in the rule about the incident being closed, or "at that time." If I may proceed, the rule says—

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The rule is not going to put in the details. The rule considers, I have no doubt, that Senators have some imagination—that it does not have to give a detailed account of everything that may happen. It certainly could not mean because a Senator is called to order that for all time he is deprived of the privilege of the floor—

Mr. LODGE. Of course not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Unless a majority of Senators allowed him to proceed.

Mr. LODGE. Of course not; but let me read the rule:

And when a Senator shall be called to order he shall sit down, and not proceed without leave of the Senate which, if granted, shall be upon motion that he be allowed to proceed in order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly.

Mr. LODGE. Now, one of two things is true, either taking up another subject of debate and recognizing another Senator in his own right is equivalent to the leave of the Senate, or else the motion has to be made—one of the two.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, if it occurred within the debate, within the time of the incident.

Mr. SMITH. And on the subject.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And on the subject, and the subject was as to whether the language used by the junior Senator from Alabama was in order.

Mr. LODGE. That is the interpretation placed on it by the Senator, but it is not the rule.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is the only interpretation that can be put upon it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I know the rule. I asserted for myself, and I now assert for the Senator from Alabama, that the word "proceed" means exactly in this connection what it ordinarily means. When he is speaking he is stopped because he is speaking improperly; he shall not proceed; that is, he shall not continue that speech until leave has been granted. The Senator from Alabama has not asked to continue his speech; other proceedings have occurred; and he now has the right, by virtue of being a Senator, to discuss other questions and to secure recognition.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me Senators lose sight of the real point in the proposition. The question involved, and that which the rule seeks to clarify was, was whether the junior Senator from Alabama was entitled to the floor. The Senate decided that he was not. It would have been in order then for some Senator to move that he be allowed to proceed in order. That motion was not made. He lost the floor. No attempt was made to give him the floor. The Senator from New York took the floor, made a speech in his own right, and the right of the Senator to proceed by virtue of the motion was never tested. It was conceded he had lost it.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is not in order now to move that he be permitted to proceed.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course not. It is all over with. He lost the floor at the time and the incident is ended. He is now just the same as any other Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. NORRIS. He has lost the floor and another Senator obtained it, and he takes his chances on ever getting it again the same as any other Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada will state the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PITTMAN. What is the unfinished business before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senate bill 4287.

Mr. PITTMAN. Is the Senator from Alabama at liberty to discuss that bill without the permission of a majority of the Senate?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PITTMAN. Wait until mine is ruled on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. NORRIS. Is not the point of order made by the Senator from Arkansas against the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin the pending question? It seems to me that the Chair has not yet decided the parliamentary point.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am making the parliamentary inquiry whether the Senator from Alabama may be recognized by the Chair to discuss the pending measure without the permission of a majority of the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the question pending before the Senate which has not yet been decided.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I have been trying several minutes to secure recognition to state that, in my opinion, the rule is very explicit. It means that the Senator could not continue with the speech that he was making. When he was called to order and sat down, and there was an appeal taken, and the appeal was laid on the table, and that ended the question. Clearly, it having been ended, the Senator has a right to speak on any other subject he pleases. Of course, he could not continue the speech that he was delivering before, if he attempted it, without the consent of a majority of the Senate. But that has been ended, other business has been transacted, and it seems to me clearly he is entitled to the floor if he wants it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The discussion that has taken place on the floor has changed the mind of the Chair. The Chair had already stated that it had been the understanding of the Chair that the Senator could not proceed until granted that privilege by motion. That opinion has been modified, and the Chair is of the opinion that the motion made by the Senator from Wisconsin is not now in order; that the particular incident having been closed, the Senator from Alabama is again entitled to the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] declined to yield to me a moment ago. I was trying to state to him what I said yesterday when he asked me about New York, and I said New York had done so much devilment, and so forth. The notes show that I said I did not remember anything she did. I did not say that. I said I did not remember anything good she did. The stenographers are not to blame. There was so much laughter in the Hall at the colloquy of the Senator from New York with me that they did not catch all I said.

There was another place in the stenographers' notes which was incorrect. They had me saying to the Senator from Massachusetts that I did not care to yield, and I never said any such thing. I made no reference to the Senator from Massachusetts. I did not know what he wanted. He had a paper in his hand. I thought he was going to ask me to yield so that he could present some matter at the desk, and I was trying to finish what I was saying before I did that. I made no reference to him whatever then, but the notes show:

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not care to yield.

I did not use those words.

In response to the Senator from New York, where I said that New York had done so much devilment, I said I did not have time to remember the good things she had done.

I did make minor corrections in my speech. We do it every day here. We frequently say things in the heat of debate and when we come to revise our remarks we tone down those remarks somewhat. I made very few corrections last night—all minor ones—in the colloquy that took place between the Senator from New York and myself. When we were talking about those people going to Europe for the purpose of getting this debt canceled due to the people of the United States, talking about editors going over there, then I said that Mr. Taft went to London. I was not sure whether he was Chief Justice at that time or not. The Senator from New York asked me about my reasons for saying what I did about certain people going to Europe. I said I had my reasons for it. Then I asked him if he denied that Mr. Taft went over there. I said, "Does the Senator deny that he went over there?" He said, "No; he did not." Then I addressed this question to the Senator—I did not say the Senator, but meaning the Senator—"Does he admit that he represents Wall Street?" And he said "No." His answer indicated that he understood me to mean himself, and then I said I would have to accept that statement if he said so. That is what I meant in that connection.

Mr. President, the precedents that have been made this morning by the Republican Party will haunt many a Senator on that side of the Chamber next year, when a new declaration of independence will be presented to the American people. Strange, indeed, a Senator in this historic Hall, being here by reason of the fact that the Continental Army, half clad and barefooted many of them, endured the cold of winter, walked over the frozen ground and left their bloody foot tracks in the snow, fought for American independence, builded this Republic, adopted the principles of the Declaration of Independence, when they wrote the Constitution of the United States that Gladstone said was the greatest civic document that ever emanated from the brain of man, was on yesterday denied the right to proceed when speaking in the interest of the American people.

Mr. President, I am glad we got a roll call on that proposition; glad that it is recorded in the RECORD. I am glad there is a judgment bar to which we can go and appeal from decisions made in this Chamber. I am glad that we can confront Senators whose names appear in the column voting to take me off the floor for saying, "I do not represent Wall Street or the gamblers and big financiers of Wall Street. I am speaking for the American people." That is the offense I have committed in this Senate Chamber, in this morning of the twentieth century, in the greatest Government in all the world, whose liberties under Republican rule are little by little and bit by bit being taken away from her.

Mr. President, when our fathers adopted the Constitution they guaranteed two things that Thomas Jefferson said would preserve its life for all time if they were preserved unfettered and untrammelled—free press and free speech.

I have referred heretofore to how our press is censored and muzzled in Washington; how a decision of the Supreme Court reprimanding the Federal Reserve Board for undertaking to crucify a State bank, trying to put it out of business, was never sent out from here or printed in the daily papers of the country. I have already referred to how the press, or a part of it, is being bought up and subsidized. We are being hurt on that line. Some of the big moneyed interests are buying great newspapers and using them in an effort to crush every man who dares to stand for the right and speak the old-time American doctrine.

And now free speech is threatened in this Chamber. A Senator dares not rise in his place and say, "I represent my State in part. I speak for the American people. I do not represent the gamblers and bond sharks of Wall Street." The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], leader of the Republican majority, calls me to order. The Vice President, from New England himself, sustains the point of order, and I, having committed no other offense but to declare that I was not the agent or representative of Wall Street, but was trying to speak for the American people in the settlement of a debt due to them of $12,000,000,000, am called to order by the Senator from Massachusetts. The Republicans who cast their votes this morning to sustain that ruling are going to suffer on the hustings next year, and they are going to suffer at the polls. They ought to defeat every man who voted for such a rule.

Mr. President, the fundamental questions of liberty are involved here. This is our Government; we think it is, at least. Four millions of boys answered the call and were ready to go to the front to die for this country. They have been outraged and mistreated by some of the money changers of the Republic. The fact can not be disguised, Mr. President. There can not be taken out of my mind what I think. The roll calls of this body show where Senators stand. I do not care how progressive one of them may declare himself to be, when the show-down comes and Wall Street is attacked and the roll call is had his name appears in the column where it ought to be. The Bible says, "By their fruits ye shall know them." I am afraid the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] will call me down for saying that. It will get to the point where one can not now quote Scripture here during Republican rule. If it is in bad taste to ask for simple justice to the soldier who saved the life of the Nation, it is in bad taste now and an infringement of the rule, under a Vice President of the Republican Party, who stands by his own party, to say that one does not represent the corrupt interests of his country, but that he represents the people. I said I did not represent Wall Street, those gamblers and bond sharks. I said I represented the people. That is what I am trying to do.

Here was a debt due the United States being discussed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], and he was being taken to task for demanding that America have a fair deal in the transaction. Nothing like it was ever seen. I came to the Senator's rescue. He said that we were not in the British Parliament, but we were in the United States Senate. Why did not Senators on the other side of the Chamber call him down? Why did they not call down the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] when he characterized the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] as being like Lenin, of Russia, and put him in the class with the Soviets of Russia, though he was a United States Senator? But the Vice President never batted his eye, and no Republican Senator called the Senator from Wisconsin down. The old standpatters were sitting there with their faces wreathed with smiles while the Senator from Wisconsin was delivering his tirade against the junior Senator from Iowa. Nobody called him down.

Reflections were cast upon my friend the Senator from Tennessee; it was stated that he was tainted with pro-Germanism because he was pleading for America in this debt settlement; but nobody called to order the Senator who made that reflection. When I got up and put my finger on the sore spot, as I frequently do, when I am arraigning the reprehensible conduct of the Republican Party, then I stirred them. I did put my finger on the sore spot.

Wall Street boasted in the Wall Street Journal but a few months ago that the control of the Federal reserve banking system was not in Washington, but had come back to Wall Street, where it belonged; and when I dealt Wall Street a body blow yesterday I was called to order by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LONGE]. God forgive you for voting to sustain a point of order against a United States Senator coming from a sovereign State, speaking for his people, debt ridden and tax burdened, in the settlement of a debt with Great Britain, and asking that justice be done and that the farmers of America be allowed the same rate of interest that is being given to Great Britain, a foreign country. I have offended the leaders of the Republican Party and I am called to order; I am called to take my seat. I will bear these attempts at humiliation. It does not intimidate me in the least. You can not chill my ardor; you can not long halt me in the fight which I am making. I will make it so long as God gives me strength to make it in this body. I am a soldier in the service and I am trying to serve my country. I do not represent Wall Street; I do not represent the gamblers of Wall Street; I do not represent the bond sharks of Wall Street. Stop me again. That was my offense of yesterday.

No wonder the Senator from Massachusetts came over to this side of the Chamber this morning and stated to my good friend the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] that if I would apologize he would drop this thing. What am I to apologize for? For fighting the battles of my people; for representing America instead of Great Britain; for holding up the ideals of my own country? Apologize! I would see them further down yonder in the hot regions than a greyhound could run in a hundred years before I would apologize. Mr. President, I know my rights in this body.

I hope in the campaign of 1924 that God will give me strength to go into the States of these Senators, and I shall take that record, assemble the people, and read it to them. I shall say, "Ladies and gentlemen, let me read to you what occurred in the United States Senate under Republican rule. We were discussing the interest rate and debt settlement with Great Britain. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] was telling the Senate that we were giving the English a smaller rate of interest than we were giving to the people in our own country—the farmers and others. I came to his rescue. I said, 'our farmers ought to have as small a rate of interest as we are giving to a foreign country. If our people could collect these debts and get this money which is due to us it would lower the tax rate and relieve us of the tax burdens.' While saying that, I said, 'Wall Street wants to cancel the debt; Wall Street would like to postpone its payment at least so that Wall Street could collect what foreign countries are owing to Wall Street.' And I said, 'I did not represent Wall Street; I did not represent those bond sharks and gamblers; I am speaking for the American people; I was fighting for you, and here is what occurred: Senator LONGE, of Massachusetts, rose and called me to order. The Vice President, a Republican, Mr. COOLIDGE, from New England, held that the point of order was well taken. I was denied the right to proceed and requested to sit down. I said I was for the people of America and against Wall Street. That was my offense. The next morning the Senate roll was called and a majority of Republicans voted to sustain the Vice President in stopping my speech, taking me off my feet, and causing me to sit down. That is what occurred in the Republican Senate. Do you men and women want to vote for a party that will permit that? Do you men and women want to vote for a party that will suppress free speech in that fashion? Do you men and women want to vote for a party that will undertake to censure and reprimand, humiliate, intimidate, and coerce a Senator who is speaking for his own country against a foreign country? Do you? All of you who are going to vote for a proposition like that stand up." There will not be a man or woman to rise. Then I will say, "All of you who repudiate that conduct and repudiate the party that ordered it and repudiate the Senators who sustained it stand up," and they will get up in mass like receiving the benediction at church. [Laughter.] That is what will happen to you. I want the reporter's notes to show that there was laughter at that point. Let us not have any mistake about that hereafter, because I want all of those points to go in. Thank God there are people who come and sit in these galleries who are not bound and tied by any hard-and-fast condition. They know the American doctrine when they hear it. They like to see and hear Senators fight for the right.

For right is right, since God is God,
And right the day must win.

I serve notice on you that I am going to keep up the fight.

No, Mr. President; the lamented Lincoln, peace to his ashes, said on one occasion, "The crisis that I see approaching unnerves me, and I tremble for the safety of my country."

Mr. President, I regret to have to bring these things to the attention of the Senate and the country, but it is my duty to do so. There never was a time in the history of this Government when the corrupt money power of the Nation was more firmly entrenched than it is to-day. Lodged in the strongholds of the National Capital, the money power flourishes in rank luxuriance in every avenue of control in the Nation's Capital. The money power is in control of the Government. The soldiers are mistreated, disregarded, neglected, forgotten by many.

The farmers, bound up under a term of deflation, robbed, and all of their homes and farms are under mortgage. Hard times prevail among the masses of the people. All of this is the fruit of the Republican Party. A few men claim all the increase from ocean, soil, and air. Rich as Croesus, the man with a big purse is the man of power with the Republican Party. Why not tell the truth? And some Senators on the other side are going to hear from that next year. I invite the Senator from Wisconsin to the verdict rendered in his own State under the leadership of fighting Bob LA FOLLETTE, of Wisconsin. That vote means something. I am looking at one or two of them now whom I do not expect to see here any more. [Laughter.]

Talk about moving that I may proceed in order! When did the Senator from Wisconsin have the right to get up and move that I, a Senator from Alabama, after a question had been voted on, and he was one of the Senators to sustain the ruling of the Chair—when I rose he sought to halt me and humiliate me by rising and saying, "I move that the Senator from Alabama proceed in order"; but I said, "I object," for I do not have to proceed by the motion of any Senator who voted to sustain a ruling that outrages every precedent of the Senate.

Talk about my apologizing to them! I told my friend to tell Senator LONGE that I would not do it. I wanted a vote; I wanted a roll call; I would not take the world for that roll call. It is going to cut like a two-edged sword against you next year. I would just like to meet some of these gentlemen on the hustings. I should like to have one of these Senators discuss with me this matter on the stump. I would read the sentences that I used when called to order and the ruling of the Chair, and then his vote sustaining that ruling, and then ask him in the presence of the people if he thought that was Americanism and ask them there in his presence if they were with him or with me on that question.

How did the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] vote? He voted with me; he voted against outraging the rules of the Senate; he voted against denying free speech to a Senator. And NORRIS, of Nebraska, and LA FOLLETTE and LADD and CAPPER and BROOKHART—these men who really stand with the progressive element—how did they vote?

[At this point words were spoken which were subsequently expunged from the RECORD by order of the Senate.]

The VICE PRESIDENT rapped with his gavel.

Mr. HEFLIN. Oh, Mr. President, I thank God that this is one place where we can have free speech, even if we have to get it by main strength and awkwardness, although we are overruled by the Republican majority of the Senate for daring to speak the truth for the RECORD. Let the RECORD tell it. Forty thousand copies of this RECORD go out each day. We ought to send out 250,000. The more people who read it, the better off the country will be, because we can get the truth in here to-morrow when it goes over the country, and they all read it, and read the splendid, clear, and strong presentation of this situation by my able friend from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. Read what he said. Why, he said that if the Senator from Alabama did not represent the people, he would not be here long from a Southern State; that if he did represent Wall Street and the gamblers, he would not be in the Senate long from a Southern State. Then, they went on in their mad career and sustained the rape of the rule.

Oh, Mr. President, you know there is an old saying that when some people start to going wrong they just keep on going wrong, and it is just like falling down a hill; they get started to falling and rolling and they can not stop until they hit the rocks at the bottom; and that is what the poor old boss-ridden Republican Party is doing. I saw you in this Chamber stand up for profiteers. You made the soldiers get back. You voted $450,000,000 a year out of the purse of the Government into the pockets of these pompous profiteers of the Nation. I saw you stand up and give $90,000,000 annually to big income-tax payers. You gave that over to the mighty rich of the country, the men of all men most able to pay taxes. I saw you do that. I saw you vote $700,000,000 to pay war contracts left over, questionable contracts, hundreds and thousands of them, and you did it without batting an eye; and then I saw you drive the soldier from the door of the Capitol with nothing to eat, no good clothes to wear, no shelter to cover his head.

I saw the Republican Party do that, and then I saw you come with a ship subsidy bill, arranging to take from the people $50,000,000 a year. I saw you come with a proposition to practically give to the Ship Trust $3,000,000,000 worth of ships. You are going to give them to the Ship Trust and then pay them to operate them. All these things I have seen, and more; and on yesterday I saw the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKEILAR]—the rock-ribbed old State of Tennessee, the home of Old Hickory Jackson, on whose soil rests the Hermitage and the tomb of Jackson, who said, "By the Eternal, the people shall rule"—I saw him rise and protest against a debt arrangement that had been made behind closed doors, when nobody in the Nation was present but Republican partisan officials, to agree to a settlement that involved nearly $5,000,000,000 owed to the American people. The Senator from Tennessee, for protesting against certain plans, was terribly taken to task; and when I came to his rescue, replying to the Senators from Wisconsin and New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] reached the climax when he arose to stop me from saying that I represented the people of my country and that I was not representing Wall Street.

In that connection there is one other thing I want to say this morning. The Senator from New York asked me afterwards—it was an afterthought, too; of course it was—about whether I said Taft was representing Wall Street. I never said that. I had reference to the Senator from New York, and it was done in a very pleasant way. Laughter was ringing all around here, and I said, "Does the Senator"—meaning that—"does he represent Wall Street?" He said, "No." Then I said, "I accept the Senator's statement," meaning him. Then afterwards, thinking that the other proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts was feeble, he came to his rescue with the charge that I had sinned against the Chief Justice, and he said I said that, and they sent out for the reporter; and I saw the reporter, clever gentleman that he is, come in here and talk to the Senator from New York, and I saw him shaking his head, and I could almost hear him say to the Senator from New York, "No; he never said anything like that," and they did not ask then that those notes be produced.

I said the Chief Justice, Mr. Taft, went over to London, I believe, before he was appointed Chief Justice; and the ready man on the Republican side, Senator Moses, of New Hampshire, came to the rescue. He voted to sustain the Vice President this morning. We got a verdict in his State last fall. We elected a Democratic governor up there. "Coming events cast their shadows before." He comes up next year. May the Lord have mercy on his soul! He came to the rescue and said that Taft was Chief Justice at the time he went to London.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President—

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MOSES. Merely in the interest of historical accuracy, I do not come up next year.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator does not come up next year? He is fortunate, Mr. President [laughter]; but the Senator came to the rescue of his friend from New York and he said yes, he was Chief Justice, and then I said, "That makes the case even stronger." I meant to say "makes it more interesting"; I thought I had said it, but the reporter's notes show that I said "it makes it stronger."

Now, listen: The Senator from New York arose then and addressed the Chair as a boy would a school-teacher, and he said, "Why, Mr. President, he has offended again." Think of that! A United States Senator criticizing somebody about going abroad, drawing on this floor his own conclusions about the purpose of his visit. The position of the Senator from New York is tantamount to saying that I could not say that if I thought it. I could say it if I thought it. Why could I not say it if I thought the Chief Justice was interested in that proposition? Where are the rules in this body that close the mouth of a Senator so that he can not criticize any official of the Government, and do it to the limit, in this body? Where is it?

The Senator from New York may have thought that I did not know the rule. I know enough about it to know that; and the position of the Senator from New York will not intimidate me in the future—will not have the slightest effect upon me in saying what I think about any high official in this Government when I feel it my duty to do it.

I think I have said enough this morning, Mr. President, to get the facts pretty well in the RECORD, following what my good friend from Arkansas said. I want to make this suggestion: I demanded the notes myself. Now go read the RECORD. When the Senator from Massachusetts said that I had used that language—stopped me from speaking—I called for the production of the notes. I said, "I did not say that." "Oh, yes," he said; "I heard the Senator." I said, "Read the notes; I demand the reading of the notes." I am the man who did that. That is what occurred. He stopped me from making my speech and we adjourned for the night, and then they came in here the next morning at 11 o'clock and voted, and this outrage was perpetrated, the rules raped, the Chair sustained, and a record preserved against Republican Senators that will haunt them when they rise again for reelection. Then, when the Senator from New York was assailing me and was not giving the facts as I understood them, I rose as a Senator to ask him to yield, and the Vice President, a Republican from New England, denied me the right and told me that I could not proceed. Then the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] moved that I be permitted to proceed. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] objected. I objected. I wanted to keep the record straight. I want the country to know what the record is. An attempt has been made here by Republican Senators to destroy free speech in the Senate of the United States. Republicans intrusted here with commissions from sovereign States have voted to sustain the decision of the Chair that stopped a United States Senator from speaking when he was saying he did not represent Wall Street but did represent the American people.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker had appointed Mr. GALLIVAN in place of Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky as one of the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13926) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 13774. An act to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to exchanges of property;

H. R. 13775. An act to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to credits and refunds; and

H. J. Res. 422. Joint resolution permitting the entry free of duty of certain domestic animals which have crossed the boundary line into foreign countries.

RURAL-CREDIT FACILITIES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4287) to provide credit facilities for the agricultural and live-stock industries of the United States, to amend the Federal farm loan act, to amend the Federal reserve act, and for other purposes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I desire to be pending, to be inserted at the proper place in the bill now before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill, the following:

SEC. 14. That paragraph (b) of section 11 of the Federal reserve act be amended by adding after the words "Federal Reserve Board" the following:

"but in no case shall such rates of interest be in excess of 5 per cent per annum."

And wherever in said act Federal reserve banks are authorized, permitted, or required to discount the discounted paper of other Federal reserve banks, the rate of interest in no case shall be in excess of 5 per cent per annum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KELLOGG in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I inquire if that is the pending amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the pending amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Alabama whether he refers to the rate of discount or the rate of interest?

Mr. HEFLIN. Rediscount. I mean the rate charged by the 12 regional reserve banks to the thousands of member banks for rediscounting their paper. I am trying to fix it so that the regional banks can not charge the member banks more than 5 per cent for rediscounting their paper.

Mr. LENROOT. The rate of interest?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; rediscount. For instance, a regional bank rediscounts the paper of a member bank. When a member bank comes up with its paper and applies for money the regional bank can charge 3 or 3½ or 4 or 4½ per cent, but not over 5 per cent, to the member bank.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, of course if the Senate desires to permit banks to profiteer, I suppose that amendment would be perfectly in order; but I can not see anything else that it would accomplish. What do banks charge in the Senator's State?

Mr. HEFLIN. The legal rate is 8 per cent; but a member bank in Atlanta charged one of the banks in my town 8 per cent, and a national bank in north Alabama was charged 9 per cent. Now, my amendment would not permit that. The regional bank could not charge the member bank more than 5 per cent; and that would enable the member bank to loan to the farmer or the merchant, or whoever the borrower is, at a lower rate than if it had to pay 7 per cent to the regional bank for the loan.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, when the bank to which the Senator has so often referred charged, as I think he said, 87½ per cent, does the Senator know what rate was charged the customers of that bank?

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not get that question.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator know whether, in the case he has so often spoken of, where a bank charged, under the progressive rate of interest, 87½ per cent—

Mr. HEFLIN. Eighty-seven and one-half per cent.

Mr. LENROOT. Did the customers of that bank pay any such rate as that?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not know what they paid.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator know that in the Federal reserve districts which did not have the progressive rate of interest the rate of interest charged customers was just as high as in the districts which did have the progressive rate?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not. That was not the case.

Mr. LENROOT. I am very much in accord with the views of the Senator that, to say the least, a very great mistake was made in having any such rates, because wherever any such rates were imposed what ought to have been done was to cut off the additional credit to the bank entirely; but my question was whether the Senator knows whether any farmer, in the State of Alabama or elsewhere, suffered by reason of that high rate.

Mr. HEFLIN. Of course they suffered, and this bank was denied funds. It could not pay the high rate, and loans were stopped. The bank had to quit loaning; it could not get the money to loan; cotton was thrown on the market and cattle were thrown on the market and financial disaster followed.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the Senator know that in every case where any such rate was imposed the bank had had a great deal more than its share of credit, and that the entire credit ought to have been cut off from that bank?

Mr. HEFLIN. I also know that two banks in New York borrowed during that time six times more than their capital.

Mr. LENROOT. I did not catch the last remark of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Two big institutions in New York borrowed, during that time of deflation, six times more than their capital.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that in this case this bank had more than six times its capital loaned and, not only that, nearly all of its deposits, and no bank in New York ever did.

Mr. HEFLIN. That was just for a few days.

Mr. SMOOT. It was for 11 days.

Mr. HEFLIN. The fact that the bank did not fail shows there was no necessity for applying the 87½ per cent rate.

Mr. SMOOT. What the board ought to have done was to close up the bank.

Mr. HEFLIN. They closed it by the 87½ per cent rate.

Mr. SMOOT. For 11 days.

Mr. HEFLIN. It amounted, I think, to nearly 30 days.

Mr. SMOOT. Eleven days is what it amounted to.

Mr. HEFLIN. But whether it was 5 days or 11 days, it succeeded in choking the little bank down, and it would not let the little bank have the money, and the bank could not supply its customers with money, and the people of that locality suffered greatly.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator the amounts of the loans on which 87½ per cent was paid?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not remember the amount. I printed all the correspondence in the RECORD last July.

Mr. POMERENE. My information is that there was just one loan of $2,000.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is right.

Mr. GLASS. Six hundred and ninety-one dollars; and so far from the bank being choked down, the record shows that the bank had 1,700 per cent of its basic line of credit with the Federal reserve bank—1,700 per cent—and that it had been deficient in its reserve for 11 of the 12 preceding months, the reserve required being $9,485, and the reserve actually carried being $86.

Mr. HEFLIN. I can not agree with those figures. I will have to have the record produced.

Mr. GLASS. That is in the record; I can produce the record.

Mr. HEFLIN. Whatever it is, the 87½ per cent charge was outrageous. Nobody can defend it, I do not care whether he is a Democrat or a Republican. Nobody can defend an 87½ per cent interest rate, and the fact that the bank did not fail shows that there was no necessity for this thing happening. It may have been a few days—that happens frequently with people in overdrawing their own bank accounts just a few days—but this was part of a drive, a deep-laid plan to shut off loans in Alabama, as well as other Southern States and Western States, in order to carry out the drive of deflation. This was a part of it, and when it succeeded this interest rate was stopped.

Mr. GLASS and Mr. COUZENS rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield briefly to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I do not undertake to defend an 87½ per cent rate. My criticism of the Federal Reserve Board and the Government authorities in that case would be that they did not close that bank. Instead of making an 87½ per cent interest charge for a few days, my criticism of it would be that it loaned the bank seventeen times its capital and its surplus, and loaned 82 per cent of it to its president, and on notes indorsed by its president.

Mr. HEFLIN. And never lost a cent of it.

Mr. GLASS. The bank ought to have been closed, and any public official who had any appreciation of his duties and understands the banking business would have closed it.

Mr. HEFLIN. So the Senator would have had this little bank closed, which finally struggled through and did not break?

Mr. GLASS. It struggled through only because the Federal reserve bank at Atlanta loaned it seventeen times more money than it ought to have loaned it. That is the reason it struggled through.

Mr. HEFLIN. And the Senator says he would not have done it, that he would have closed it—

Mr. GLASS. Of course I would have.

Mr. HEFLIN. That reminds me of what happened once—

Mr. GLASS. If many more banks had been carried on at that rate, we would not have had many banks in this country. All of them would have gone to smash.

Mr. HEFLIN. I never heard any complaint about the big loans in New York at 6 and 7 per cent, never over 7 per cent. But the Senator from Virginia says he would have closed this little bank in Alabama. Eighty-seven and a half per cent did close it, in effect. It depends on which method you would employ.

Congressman Cushman used to be in the House, and he told this story: That a fellow had stolen a mule out there in the West, and they put a placard on his back, "This man stole a mule and we have hanged him. Beware! Profit by his example." Then one stole a horse. They caught him out in the woods one moonlight night, and they were about to execute him. About half the crowd said, "Let's shoot him," and the other half said, "Let's hang him," and they got into a discussion as to how they would dispose of him—whether they would shoot him or hang him. Finally, one of the fellows who wanted to hang him said, "Mr. Chairman, let's get his ruthers about the matter. Let's find out what he would rather do, whether he would rather be shot or hanged." They turned to the fellow and asked him, and he said: "I am more interested than any of you, but, by golly, I can't enthuse over any one of the plans you have suggested." [Laughter in the galleries.]

So 87½ per cent stopped it. The Senator from Virginia says he would have closed it. Whichever way it went, they were either going to lynch it, with the 87½ per cent rediscount rate, or hang it by closing it according to the plan of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. Senators, it is easy for some here to say that a struggling little bank in my State, trying to help cotton producers and cattlemen over a very trying time, ought to have been closed, that they ought to have denied it these loans; but when the speculators, the gamblers of Wall Street—if I may say that in a Republican Senate—when the gamblers of Wall Street borrowed six times their capital to speculate in cotton and grain, and buy Liberty bonds forced out of the hands of the people, none of these champions of deflation ever opened their mouths to condemn them—not one.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama is pretty free with his language with reference to other Senators. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, can the Senator do that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator yields he can call for a quorum.

Mr. HEFLIN. Very well. I will proceed, then, on the Senator when a quorum of Senators comes in. I am not quite through with him anyhow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harrell	McLean	Smoot
Ball	Harris	McNary	Spencer
Bayard	Harrison	Moses	Stanfield
Borah	Hefflin	Nelson	Sutherland
Brookhart	Hitchcock	New	Swanson
Bursum	Johnson	Nicholson	Townsend
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Norbeck	Trammell
Couzens	Kellogg	Norris	Underwood
Culberson	Kendrick	Oddie	Wadsworth
Curtis	King	Page	Walsh, Mass.
Fletcher	Ladd	Pepper	Walsh, Mont.
France	Lenroot	Philpps	Warren
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Pomerene	Watson
George	McCormick	Reed, Pa.	Willis
Glass	McCumber	Robinson
Gooding	McKellar	Shortridge
Hale	McKinley	Smith

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Sixty-five Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President—

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. HEFLIN. I had the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan rises to a point of order.

Mr. HEFLIN. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has risen to a point of order. The Senator will state the point of order.

Mr. COUZENS. It is a point of personal privilege, Mr. President. The Senator from Alabama has made special reference to other Senators in the speech just made. I desire to have the reporter read the record as he has taken it down, because after the Senator from Alabama gets a chance at the record, the good Lord knows what it will read like.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President—

Mr. COUZENS. I want the record as he stated it settled right now and not after he has changed the record to-night.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President—

Mr. COUZENS. I want the record read as the Senator spoke it in relation to myself, of course.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I was addressing the Senate and the Senator from Michigan asked me to yield to him and I did so.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the point of order.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator made a point of no quorum and I yielded to him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey has risen to a point of order and will state the point of order.

Mr. HEFLIN. He never could have taken me off the floor in that way.

The VICE PRESIDENT rapped for order.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Has not the Senator from Michigan a right to have the record read before any further reference is made in the Senate to the incident?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has. Let the record be read.

Mr. HEFLIN. Those remarks were made 30 minutes ago or an hour ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan has a right to have the record read. Let it be read.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have no objection to the Senator having it read.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair that it is in order for the record to be read at the present time.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Michigan rose to a point of order of special privilege, and he has a right to have the record read, as the Chair has ruled.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has so ruled.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. WILLIS. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. ASHURST. I beg the Senator to withhold the appeal.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope the Senator from Florida will not insist on the appeal, because we do not want to be in the position of not sustaining my colleague, and clearly the Chair is right.

Mr. ASHURST. Undoubtedly; and I hope the appeal will be withdrawn.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I withdraw my motion, then.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the stenographic record.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

How did the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] vote? He voted with me; he voted against outraging the rules of the Senate; he voted against denying free speech to a Senator. And NORRIS, of Nebraska, and LA FOLLETTE and LADD and CAPPER and BROOKHART—these men who really stand with the progressive element—how did they vote? And how did some of the others vote who have been classifying themselves as progressives? I have been looking at them, and I doubted it all the time. I was told one of them was a progressive, but he is a millionaire many times over. I said, "Say that to me again, and say it slow"; and they said it again. I shook my head and said, "It will crop out on him; mark what I tell you; he will vote some time; when the big interests are attacked you will see him go over and take his place among the bellwethers of the standpat party."

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President—

Mr. HEFLIN. I demand the right to proceed. There is nothing in those remarks.

Mr. COUZENS. I have the floor, I hope.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan, the Chair understands, is rising to a point of order.

Mr. HEFLIN. The notes have been read.

Mr. COUZENS. I am rising to a matter of personal privilege.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the personal privilege.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, we went through something of this character yesterday when the Senator from Alabama made free to make reference, in the minds of Senators, to Senators from other States in which the Senator apparently imputed improper motives to Senators from other States, and it is just fresh in the minds of the Senate as to how the matter ended.

[At this point words were spoken which were subsequently expunged from the Record by order of the Senate.]

Mr. President, I want to say that I voted to sustain the Chair because I object to any Senator getting up on the floor and impugning the motives of any other Senator. I think the Chair ruled properly to sustain the point that was raised yesterday by the Senator from New York. If Senators are free to get up here and tell the galleries and the American people that the motives of a Senator from any State are to be questioned, and that they are aligned with some special interests, then we might just as well stand up here and call everybody thieves and liars. I want it understood now that the Senator from Alabama can not get up on the floor and impugn the motive of my vote to sustain the Chair as to the matter he was discussing at the time. I want the Record clear as we go along, and not let any man in the nighttime go around and change the Record and have it read as he may choose.

I now request that the statement with reference to myself be expunged from the Record.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I want to say that I think the remarks of the Senator from Michigan are wholly justified. I think the remarks of the Senator from Alabama were wholly unjustified. I voted as I did this morning upon the record that was presented in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on page 2831. I read that Record with great care. I did not think on that Record that the Senator from Alabama had transgressed the rules of the Senate or that he had indulged in the imputations that were attributed to him. Because I am so tender of the rights of any man to express himself on this floor, I voted this morning against sustaining the Chair and because the Record demonstrates, in my opinion, that there was no transgression of the rules yesterday.

In the language of the Senator from Alabama, which has been read, concerning the Senator from Michigan I believe there is transgression of the rules. I believe that the remarks were wholly unjustified and that the Senate ought not to sit supinely by and permit such remarks to be made by one Senator concerning another Senator upon this floor.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield?

Mr. JOHNSON. I have concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to ask the Senator from California a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to yielding.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, is a point of order pending?

The VICE PRESIDENT. A motion to expunge is pending.

Mr. HEFLIN. I was going to ask the Senator from California a question.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield for that purpose if the Senator from California is willing.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to say, since the Senator from California has made the statement he has—

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not yield for any remarks. If the Senator wants to ask the Senator from California a question I have no objection, but otherwise I prefer to say what I have to say and then let the Senator say what he has to say.

There is a part of the Record that was read at the desk that does not apply to the Senator from Michigan, and to that nobody can object; but there is some of it that did refer to the Senator from Michigan which I think was objectionable. I heard the Senator from Alabama say it. I felt like making the point of order against it then, but let it pass. The Senator from Michigan himself was here. I have heard similar things said about other Senators at other times that were just as bad, but nobody called attention to them.

But, regardless of how we may disagree at times, it seems to me that with the idea of doing any business or transacting the business of the country we must agree upon some rule, upon some regulation, by which our work shall be governed. Until we change the rules we must take them as they are. The rules provide—and I think rightly—that no Senator has the right to impute improper motives to any other Senator. If we adopt any other rule or if we do not enforce that rule God only knows what would become of us. We would never get anywhere. We would have a lot of fighting men here instead of a lot of gentlemen trying to legislate. We would become an irresponsible mob.

I have no right to criticize somebody else because he does not vote as I did. That is what the Senator from Alabama was doing this morning. I thought it was out of place when he did it. I myself thought that the Chair's ruling this morning was wrong. I voted with others to overrule the Chair—that is, I voted against laying the appeal on the table—and I have no apology to offer for that vote.

I think the Senator from Alabama, as shown by the Record, was in order, and that his words in debate were not objectionable. So at least no one can ascribe to me any idea, I think, of being partial as against the Senator from Alabama. But later this morning, after the vote had been taken, the Senator from Alabama spoke of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS]. Before reading the record of his remarks I wish to say that while the Senator from Michigan did not vote as I voted I have just as much respect for his vote as I expect him to have for mine. I have no doubt whatever that he was conscientious in his vote; at least, he had a right to vote as he did, and he had a right to vote that way without anyone condemning him. I have had my motives condemned many times for votes which I have cast in the Senate, though not always here. So it may be that I am tender about that proposition, but unless we preserve the right to vote freely we shall not be doing our duty as Senators or to the American people. It is because I wish to see that right entirely and completely preserved that I have now taken the floor.

The Senator from Alabama stated—now this is the language, it seems to me, which is clearly objectionable and is a clear violation of the rules:

And how did some of the others vote who have been classing themselves as progressives? I have been looking at them, and I doubted it all the time.

That far I would not object to the language as I have read it, and I have read it because it has got to be read in order to introduce the language which I think is objectionable. The Senator from Alabama continued:

I was told one of them was a progressive, but he is a millionaire many times over. I said, "Say that to me again, and say it slow"; and they said it again. I shook my head and said, "It will crop out on him; mark what I tell you; he will vote some time."

Now, I desire Senators to listen to this language—when the big interests are attacked you will see him go over and take his place among the bellwethers of the standpat party.

The point in that language is that it contains a clear intimation, I think, clearly expressed, that the Senator referred to is here in the interest of big business; that he will not perform his duty properly, but that he will go over to big business whenever the big interests are attacked. It is an intimation that he is a representative here of special interests. I do not believe that any Senator ought to be thus charged unless the charge is coupled with an offer to furnish the evidence to prove the statement. Then it would be all right. It seems to me, Mr. President, in the interest of orderly debate, of fair and honest consideration of matters, that the imputation of a wrongful motive to the Senator from Michigan contained in the language is unwarranted and is a violation of our rules.

I wish to say before I close that later on—the language is not before me—the Senator from Michigan interrupted the Senator from Alabama and made the point of no quorum. He also said something about the Senator from Alabama being free with language as applied to other Senators. The Senator from Alabama made another remark which standing alone I should not think anything of, but coupled with what transpired I think it means something. He said, "I am not through with the Senator yet"; in other words, that would seem to imply that in connection with what the Senator from Alabama had said about the Senator from Michigan representing big interests here he had something more to say about it.

I think it is conceded that the conduct of the Senator from Michigan in the Senate has been respectful and honorable, and that nobody has had any cause or reason whatever to say that he is not conscientiously and honestly doing his duty as he sees it. I have had great admiration for him, for his independence in doing what he thinks is right, although I have not always agreed with him. So until something does happen to justify such an imputation it seems to me it is out of place—and I want to say, Mr. President, that I regret it much more than I can express—that any Senator shall make that kind of a reference to a Member of the body whose record stands unblemished and unsullied.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] in calling attention to the remarks of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] also used some unparliamentary language, in my opinion. If the language used by the Senator from Alabama is to be expunged from the Record, then the language of the Senator from Michigan should also be expunged. Among other things the Senator from Michigan said that he wanted the record brought before the Senate before the Senator from Alabama had the opportunity to slip out in the nighttime and change that record.

The country does not quite understand the custom here, but every Senator understands it, that a Senator has the privilege of revising and altering, in a minor way, of course, his remarks. There is not a Senator on the floor who is without guilt so far as the matter of altering his speech at nighttime or any other time when he sees proper to correct it is concerned.

I do not care to have that aspersion rest upon the Senator from Alabama because he made some minor alterations in his speech. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] this morning, when he brought that matter to the attention of the Senate and attempted to elicit some criticism of it, did not frankly state that it was the custom of Senators here to do that. I think that he should have then done so.

Now, Mr. President, I suggest that if the Senator from Alabama sees proper to withdraw any reference to the Senator from Michigan that the reference of the Senator from Michigan to the method of the Senator from Alabama in the matter of making some corrections in his remarks should also be expunged.

The Senator from Michigan also indulged in the statement that the Senator from Alabama played to the galleries, and so on. I think those remarks were just about as severe as were the remarks which were made by the Senator from Alabama.

What I object to, Mr. President, is the fact that there is an effort here to muzzle and halter the Senator from Alabama in making speeches, but when many other Senators indulge in really as harsh and as unparliamentary language upon the floor no Senator corrects them or makes any objection. As I see the situation, it depends upon the utterances and policies that are being advocated by the Senator as to whether or not he is to be called to order for his utterances upon the floor.

Mr. LODGE and Mr. LENROOT addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I shall yield in a moment. Yesterday the Senator from Wisconsin used certainly more unparliamentary language in regard to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] than has been used by the Senator from Alabama in regard to other Senators, but nobody said anything about it; the Senators then just laughed.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. First, I wish to say that the Senator from Wisconsin used no unparliamentary language in reference to the Senator from Iowa. He ascribed neither by inference nor directly any improper motive, or anything but sincerity of motive, in what the Senator supported. The Senator from Wisconsin referred to a proposal made by the Senator from Iowa, which he himself admitted he had made, and the Senator from Wisconsin then discussed that proposal and likened it to the soviet system of Russia.

Now, the inquiry I wish to make is this: The Senator does not mean, does he, that it is the custom of Senators so to alter remarks as entirely to change their meaning?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly not, Mr. President. I did not say that that was the custom. I do not think that the Senator from Alabama altered his remarks so as entirely to change their meaning. Now, since the Senator has injected that interrogatory, I should like to ask him if he did not alter his speech that he made yesterday upon this floor? Did he not make some changes or alterations in the speech which he made yesterday?

Mr. LENROOT. I did in two or three places. I will be very glad if the Senator will examine the manuscript of that speech. I want to say, however, that I do not know of any other Senator on this floor who has ever changed his speech to alter its meaning and intent.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, so far as that is concerned, the Senator from Alabama made some little minor corrections of his speech, which is permissible under the rules, and which is indulged in and is the custom on the part of every Senator upon this floor. I make no exception whatever.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to say to the Senator—and it seems to me it ought to be said by one who feels as I do about this matter—that, although I do not think that it is any defense in this case, I agree with the Senator as to the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] yesterday about the Senator from Iowa. I heard those remarks. I have not read the RECORD. Perhaps on careful examination I might change my mind, but I thought at the time that they were very much out of place. I felt then, too, that if I were doing my full duty I would object to them. It seems to me that the Senator from Wisconsin made a reference that was not justified by even the speech from which he read as the basis of the statement, and that he went clear out of his way to do that. I agree with the Senator from Florida on that point, but I should like to say that if we are always going to violate the rules because it can be proved here that they have been violated before, we might just as well abolish the rules. If the point made by the Senator from Florida had been brought before the attention of the Senate yesterday, unless on careful examination of the language I thought differently, I would have been willing to do just what I am going to do in this case. We can not any of us deny that the rules of the Senate have often been violated; I have, in my judgment, seen them violated many times, and cruelly violated in the very respect about which we are talking; and unless we make an effort at some time to secure some correction in that kind of procedure, we will become a howling, fighting mob instead of a deliberative Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I did not rise for the purpose of making a speech. I merely rose for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that, as I see it, there is a good deal of discrimination in the enforcement of the rule. I think that it would be probably proper for the Senator from Alabama to withdraw his remarks and also for the Senator from Michigan to withdraw his remarks in which he questions the conduct of the Senator from Alabama. I make that suggestion.

Mr. LODGE and Mr. HEFLIN addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. LODGE. I thought the Senator from Florida had yielded the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have heard the suggestion of my friend from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], of my friend from California [Mr. JOHNSON], and of my friend from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. I did not say what the motive was of any Senator; I was simply describing the situation as it appeared to me. I know but very little about the Senator from Michigan, and probably when I came to revise my speech I would, if I had discovered any personal sting in it to him, have taken it out. I objected to the Senator saying what he did about me as to changing my speech. All Senators do that, as the Senator from Florida suggests, but I am willing to withdraw my reference to the Senator from Michigan, provided he withdraws his reference to me.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to say one word with regard to the custom of the Senate, it is understood and it is the unwritten law that any Senator may change his own speech, but may never change what anyone else says and may never change in a colloquy his own words so as to completely affect the colloquy and thereby another Senator's remarks. I do not believe that is ever done.

Mr. HEFLIN. And it has not been done in this instance.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts has impugned the motive of the Senator from Alabama in following the precedent in making corrections of his speech, and I move that the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts be expunged from the RECORD.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. WILLIS. A point of order, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a motion already pending.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I will object to the Senator from Alabama withdrawing his remarks concerning myself and will require a vote on my motion that his remarks be expunged from the RECORD; and in connection with that, I will not withdraw my remarks concerning the RECORD being changed in the night because the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] says that is a custom, and a custom that has been practiced by all of the Senators, to change the RECORD after the remarks have been made upon the floor of the Senate. I want to deny that. I never changed a record, and I never will. Whatever I say on the floor of the Senate will stand as the RECORD of the Senate. I will not in the heat of passion say something, and then sneak around in the nighttime and change it to mean something else, or even change the language; and I do not propose to let any other Senator do it, so far as my record is concerned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, am I going to be denied the right to speak while the Senator from Michigan is permitted to assail me? Have I the right to speak or have I not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have tried to do what was right in this matter. I will not permit the Senator from Michigan, either in this Chamber or anywhere else, to say that I change my statements in the nighttime so as to affect their meaning. I have my rights in this Chamber and out of it.

The Senator came over here, and I yielded to him—I thought he wanted to ask me a question—and he made the point of no quorum; took advantage of my yielding to him, the courtesy that I extended, to make the point of no quorum to take me off my feet as I was speaking in the Senate. Then when the quorum was obtained the Presiding Officer recognized him and would not let me proceed. Such parliamentary procedure can not be defended.

In reference to what the Senator from California [Mr. JOHN-SON] says, that he thought probably the language I used was not altogether parliamentary, and the suggestion of my friend from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and my friend from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] that I withdraw my reference to the Senator from Michigan, I said, in response to those suggestions, that I was willing to do that. The Senator from Florida suggests that the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan about me be withdrawn. The Senator from Michigan says he will not withdraw it.

He wants my language expunged. If my language is expunged, we will have a roll call of the Senate to see whether or not his language will be expunged. We will have another record vote on this historic and record-making day for free speech in the United States Senate.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President—

Mr. HEFLIN. What is the pending question, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to expunge. The Chair was about to inquire where the Senator desired to have that begin, and where he desired to have it end.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think myself, Mr. President, it ought to be specified. The motion appears to be rather indefinite.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the motion was specific, Mr. President, as it was made. It applied to the reference that was made to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to propose a unanimous-consent request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I was not on the floor last evening when the discussion took place which started this controversy. I was not here when the Vice President ruled the Senator from Alabama out of order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, we can not hear what is going on. I want to hear at least what Senators are saying.

The VICE PRESIDENT rapped with his gavel.

Mr. CAPPER. When the question was presented to us this morning as to sustaining the ruling of the Vice President putting the Senator from Alabama off the floor, I formed the opinion on the face of the record as it appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that the remarks of the Senator from Alabama did not justify the ruling that he was out of order, so I voted against sustaining the Vice President; but the remarks addressed by the Senator from Alabama this afternoon to the Senator from Michigan, or at least his comment as to the vote cast by the Senator from Michigan, I think is an entirely different matter. I believe the Senator from Michigan was wholly warranted in taking exception to the remarks of the Senator from Alabama, and I hope his request that the remarks shall be expunged from the RECORD will prevail.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, my colleague has indicated that he is prepared to ask the Senate to withdraw the remarks he made against the Senator from Michigan. Of course, I do not justify the remarks that the Senator from Michigan has made in reply, although there may be some warrant for them in what my colleague said in regard to him; but that does not justify his position, and I am sure that when the Senator from Michigan has had more experience on the floor of the Senate he will realize that this is a place where difficulties among gentlemen should be settled in an amicable way, and not by trying to drive one into an unenviable position. The Senate can not proceed with business, it can not attend to the public affairs of the Nation, if we are to lug before the Senate personal disputes and settle them by votes of the Senate.

I hope my colleague will give me permission, as his friend, to act for him in this matter, and, regardless of the position of the Senator from Michigan, let his position go to the country. If he feels he is justified in what he said, let him be justified before the country. If he feels that he was justified in his remarks, let their justification stay in the RECORD; but as my colleague has indicated that he felt he was too hasty in what he said against the Senator from Michigan and has indicated, as he should in the matter, his desire to do what is right and justify himself, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that the remarks of my colleague, in accordance with his wishes, may be expunged from the record of the Senate now, without proceeding further in this matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. COUZENS. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I desire to make a motion, and I hope the Senate will sustain me in the motion, because I think this matter has gone as far as it can.

I move to amend the motion to expunge the remarks of my colleague from Alabama by adding to that motion that the remarks of the Senator from Michigan in reply thereto shall also be expunged from the RECORD. If that is adopted, it will eliminate the whole matter, as it should be eliminated, and as we have been anxious to do by unanimous consent.

I appeal to the Senate to sustain this position. We have public business to attend to. I do not justify Senators reflecting on each other. This is no place for that, no matter who the men are. They should have a regard for the public affairs; but I know that in the heat of debate, when men are moved by their inner feelings, the situation often runs away with them, and they do things that upon calm consideration would not be done.

We do not want to start a rough-house in the United States Senate. I want to see this incident closed; and I hope the Senate will sustain me in my amendment to the motion to exclude the remarks of the Senator from Michigan at the same time that the remarks of my colleague are excluded, and let the incident be closed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Michigan that if the remarks of the Senator from Alabama are expunged his own remarks would not be intelligible to any reader of the RECORD, and there would be nothing from which anyone could find out to what they referred. It seems to me that the way out of this is to expunge all of the colloquy.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I will concur in the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], as amended.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand, the amendment offered by me is agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. It is agreed to; yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not see that there is any necessity for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ASHURST. It is too late for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the parliamentary situation to be that the Senator from Michigan amends his motion in accordance with the request of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And that the question is now on the motion as amended.

The motion as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, what is the pending amendment? What is before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may the amendment be stated?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill, the following:

SEC. 14. That paragraph (b) of section 11 of the Federal reserve act be amended by adding, after the words "Federal Reserve Board," the following:

"but in no case shall such rates of interest be in excess of 5 per cent per annum."

And wherever in said act Federal reserve banks are authorized, permitted, or required to rediscount the discounted paper of other Federal reserve banks, the rate of interest in no case shall be in excess of 5 per cent per annum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment, because if the amendment is adopted we might as well pass a joint resolution abolishing the Federal reserve banking system. It would no longer be a banking system.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, before we have a vote on the amendment I want to reply to the Senator from Virginia.

The Senator says that if we adopt this amendment, which provides that a regional bank shall not charge a member bank more than 5 per cent, we had just as well abolish the Federal reserve banking system. I do not see how that position can be sustained. This rate of interest, this rediscount rate, ran up to 4 per cent and $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent before this deflation drive was brought on.

I do not know of a bank in my section of the country that ever had to pay as much as 7 per cent rediscount rate before that time. The Senate adopted my amendment to the pending bill to repeal the progressive interest rate provision in the Federal reserve act. We have simply put a limitation on the rate of interest which the regional bank can charge to a member bank; and I submit that this is in the interest of legitimate business—it is in the interest of the farmer, of the merchant, of everybody engaged in any kind of business. If they have to have money and go to a member bank, the member bank has to go to the regional bank; and the regional bank should not be permitted to charge over 5 per cent. The member bank has to go back and loan that money to you or me, or somebody else. They have to make a reasonable per cent. It looks to me as if it is entirely fair. These regional banks ought not to be permitted to charge the member banks these high rates of interest.

It was said by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], one of the authors of the Federal reserve banking system, one who had more to do with its constructive provisions, probably, than anybody else in either branch of Congress, that we were not creating this system for the purpose of making big money, but that we were creating it for the purpose of serving the legitimate business needs of the country and preventing panic. Now, opposition rises here to limiting the rediscount rate. Why not limit it? Have we not seen that power in the law abused by the Federal Reserve Board? Have we not seen the rate raised from $3\frac{1}{2}$ and 4 to 7 per cent and higher? We certainly have.

My purpose is to limit that rate so that the people who borrow from the member bank will not have to pay such a high rate of interest to get the money they need to carry on their business. If the regional bank charges as much as 5 per cent to the member bank, surely that is enough; then the member bank has to add something to that when it loans to the business man, whatever the business may be. I think it is fair and just that we should have a limitation on it, and I ask for a vote upon my amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, there seems to be misconception as to what the Federal reserve banking system is. The Federal reserve banking system was never intended to be a discounting banking system in normal times. It was intended to be and is a reserve banking system. That is to say, when the normal loaning power of the 10,000 member banks of the system shall have been exhausted, which rarely occurs, then these banks may be privileged, because of their membership in the system, to resort in emergency to this reservoir of credit.

It was never intended that any member bank should essentially make a profit out of its rediscounting operations with the Federal reserve bank. The great Bank of England, which is the reserve bank of the British Empire, nearly always carries its rediscounting rate a shade above the money market, rather than many points below the money market, as has been done by our Federal reserve banking system. The same may be said of the Bank of France. They are emergency rediscounting systems.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Virginia how long he thinks the system would stand up in time of stress if we fixed the discount rate at 5 per cent?

Mr. GLASS. This amendment means the wreckage of the Federal reserve banking system.

Mr. McLEAN. Instead of helping legitimate accommodations—

Mr. GLASS. It would throw everything into financial chaos and confusion. It would break down the Federal reserve banking system of the United States.

There has been a good deal said here about the necessity of member banks making a profit on rediscounts. Why should member banks be permitted to make a profit out of their rediscounting activities? That is not primarily what the system is established for. However, I want to say that the member banks do make a profit. At times the difference between the discount rate and the rediscount rate amounts to a subsidy to the member bank to make loans indiscriminately in order that it may make use of the Federal reserve bank in its rediscount operations and make inordinately high profits.

The Senator from Alabama says he wants the farmer to get the benefit of the low discount rate of these regional banks. I have heard that talk before from the professional friend of the farmer. I have in mind right now another patriot in the crusade for better rates to the poor farmer. I have in mind another friend of the farmer who stands high upon the watchtower and fills the air with his lamentations at the distressing condition of the poor farmer.

Some time ago he wrote to Senators urging them to go down to the Federal Reserve Board and bring pressure there to have the rediscount rate reduced from $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent to 4 per cent, "in the interest of the distressed and suffering farmers" in his district. Knowing that this great "friend of the farmer" was himself a national banker, the Federal Reserve Board wired to the Federal reserve bank in his district to ascertain the extent of his rediscounts with that bank and what interest rate he was exacting of the poor, distressed farmer at home. I want to read the official record. This was the answer which came by wire:

The ——— National Bank, of which Mr. ——— is president, has rediscounted paper with us as of July 27 amounting to $246,000. The normal or basic line of the bank would be $44,000. We are therefore lending the bank 559 per cent of its normal line, based upon its average actual reserve, for the customary period. This average reserve for the month of July was $17,043. The amount of the paper discounted for the bank is therefore between fourteen and fifteen times its average reserve deposits for the month of July * * *. The rate of interest which the bank is charging its customers is uniformly 8 per cent, as reported to us in connection with the paper offered.

The Mr. ——— is the gentleman who urged Senators to go down and have the rediscount rate reduced from $4\frac{1}{2}$ to 4 per cent. In other words, the bank of this fellow was borrowing from his Federal reserve bank 459 per cent more of its funds than he was properly entitled to get on his basic line, or, as the report says—

Between fourteen and fifteen times the average deposits with its reserve bank.

Was he at his bank reflecting this low $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent rediscount rate in his loans to the poor, distressed farmers of his community? Let the record speak:

The rate of interest which this bank is charging to its customers is uniformly 8 per cent.

In other words, this professional "friend of the farmer," who wanted the farmer to "get his money cheap," was borrowing 459 per cent more than he was entitled to from his Federal reserve bank and making a profit on his distressed farmers of nearly 100 per cent! That is typical of these vehement protestors against the Federal reserve discount rate. Oh, their hearts bleed for the poor, distressed farmer at home, but when they come to loan the farmer the funds of their depositors, when they come to deal with the distressed farmer, they help him out of his distress by profiteering on him to the tune of 100 per cent!

Now it is proposed to wreck the Federal reserve banking system, to transform it from a Federal reserve system, with its assets and facilities mobilized to minister to the commerce and agriculture and industry of the country in time of momentous need, into a bank with a rigid rate of interest, which may not be exceeded, no matter what the state of the money market. Money on call in New York might be 30 per cent, as it was at the time this little bank in Abbeville exceeded its basic line by 1,700 per cent; and yet those people could come to the Federal reserve bank and rediscount their paper at 5 per cent and loan the funds on exchange at 30 per cent.

Mr. President, it is to be regretted that when a proposition of this serious import is projected, which, as I firmly believe, actually involves the wreckage of this great banking system, there are not more Senators in the Chamber to listen to an exposition of the amendment and to hear what its consequences may be.

To-day, with the rediscount rate $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, it is a profitable business for any bank in the State of Alabama to rediscount with the Federal reserve bank; and if it can get the sort of consideration which Alabama banks did get in 1920 and exceed their basic line all the way from 100 to 1,700 per cent, any bank in Alabama can make a handsome profit out of its rediscount dealings alone with the Federal reserve bank, because the legal rate of interest in Alabama is 8 per cent, whereas the rediscount rate of the Federal reserve bank is only $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. In other words, there is a net profit of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent on the rediscount margin of any Alabama bank with the Federal reserve bank of its district.

It never was intended on earth that a member bank should make undue profits out of its rediscount operations with its Federal reserve bank. Indeed, it never was intended, Mr. President, that the member banks should at all resort to the Federal reserve banks until they had exhausted their resources in attending to the commercial demands of their community in emergent times.

Therefore, Mr. President, I sincerely hope that, the Senate understanding the question, the amendment will be voted down.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the unanimous-consent agreement goes into effect, and the Senate now proceeds under that agreement, with the limit of five minutes upon speeches in the discussion on each amendment. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I just want to say a word in reply to the Senator from Virginia. The Senator thinks the adoption of the amendment would mean the destruction of the Federal reserve bank. I do not agree with him. The Federal reserve bank was instituted for the benefit of the American people. That was my purpose in helping to create it. I want it to help serve the business needs of the American people. The Senator from Virginia said the amendment would destroy the system. It would not. I can not see how any Senator can take that position. I know that the administration of the Federal reserve system during deflation destroyed property values to the extent of $15,000,000,000 and more. I know that it destroyed the business of thousands and hundreds of thousands of people. I know that it took the farms and the homes away from thousands and tens of thousands of farmers. I know that ruin followed in the wake of the administration of that system during the deflation period. It was not run in the interest of legitimate business then.

I mean, of course, the administration of the regional banks of the Federal reserve system; thousands of the member banks were not to blame.

Mr. President, I am trying to legislate for the benefit of my State and the whole American people, if I may be permitted to say that in this Chamber. I am trying to legislate for the benefit of the people who are engaged in every kind of business in the country. I submit that when a member bank goes to a Federal reserve regional bank for money to take back home to supply the business needs of the community, 5 per cent is enough to charge. How much higher do you want them to go? If we give them authority to charge more than 5 per cent, they would charge 9 or 10 per cent, no doubt, to the member banks.

Then the member bank would have to tell the local customer, "We have to pay such and such a rate at the regional bank; that is why we have to charge you more."

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. Do not the banks of Alabama now charge 8 per cent when they are getting their funds from the Federal reserve bank for 4½ per cent?

Mr. HEFLIN. They are not getting their funds for 4½ per cent, all of them. I think they charge as high as 5 per cent in the Atlanta district.

Mr. GLASS. In the Atlanta district the rate is 4½ per cent; but suppose it were 5 per cent, does the Senator think a member bank should make a charge of an additional 3 per cent on a mere rediscount proposition?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not think it ought to make more than what is fair and reasonable. I know that a national banker in north Alabama, a member bank, told me the system charged him 9 per cent. I am trying to stop such a thing as that from happening in the future. I want to put a limitation upon it of 5 per cent.

Here is a chance for Senators to vote in accordance with the best interests of the American people, the people who have business and need money to run that business. Of course the system will prosper. It will continue to prosper. But I do not ever want the regional banks to again accumulate money like they did under the high rediscount rates when they could build a bank palace in New York costing $25,000,000 in Wall Street to the hurt and injury of the American people.

The system has got to survive, but it must be run in the interest of the American people and not in the interest of Wall Street. We may just as well get that clearly in our minds. I want the people who have to have money to get it at reasonable rates, just like they would go to get a tool to work with. They have to have the money, and if the regional bank can put the rediscount rate high, the member bank has to put its rate high in order to loan the customer at home. I am making a fight in keeping with the best interests of business all over the country.

Mr. GLASS. Does the Senator think the member bank ought to profiteer on the farmer then to the extent of 100 per cent, as I explained it a while ago?

Mr. HEFLIN. No.

Mr. GLASS. That they ought to borrow money at 4½ per cent and loan it to the poor distressed farmer at 8 per cent?

Mr. HEFLIN. I know that the lower the member bank gets the rate at the regional bank, the lower rate it will charge to the customer at home. That is common sense. That is what I am fighting for. I feel that I am right in this matter, and I ask for a roll call on my amendment.

Mr. GLASS. There is not a bank in Alabama to-day that is not charging the extreme local limit of 8 per cent, although

It is getting its money from the Federal reserve bank at 4½ per cent, and it is making profiteer's compensation on its rediscount operation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, before the amendment is voted on I want to call attention to the fact that I think that Congress ought to put some limitation upon the rate of rediscount that may be charged, because we have put discretion in their hands as to the kind of paper that would be eligible for rediscount. I think every Senator will bear me out in the statement that when we were enacting the legislation and limiting the amount of profits or dividends that the stockholders in the regional banks might make, namely, 6 per cent, we were clearly convinced of the fact that we did not intend that the regional banks should make money, but that they should be the clearing house for the great circulating medium at a reasonable return for those who under the law were required to put up the capital.

There are two reasons why they have insisted upon the right to change the rate of discount. One was to discourage the volume of applications for loans that would come with an inviting low rate of discount. The other was that it did interfere with the lending of private capital. We have nothing to do in a legislative way with the use of private capital except it must comply with our usury laws. It is known that a regional bank made, under an average rate of rediscount of less than 6 per cent, something in excess of 100 per cent profit. Of course, that was extracted from the business of the country. I maintain that the governors of our regional banks and the governors of our entire Federal reserve system should see to it that the rate of discount should be predicated upon the rate that would encourage the greatest possible use of money in commerce and in the development of our country.

Fellow Senators, we must understand now as well as any other time that money is an instrumentality to encourage enterprise, thrift, and industry. It is the great means by which we can accelerate those matters. We must not fall into the habit of thinking that we must legislate for the protection of money for money's sake. I will go as far as any Senator in trying to protect and safeguard the medium of exchange known as money. We have that safeguarded in this system by which we give the board of governors and the regional bank board of governors the right to fix, in their discretion, a proper rate of rediscount. I maintain that where we have ample reserve for the purpose of doing the business of the country we ought not to charge a rate of rediscount in excess of what we would term the dividend and an accumulation of a reasonable surplus and the maintenance of it, not for the purpose of discouraging loans or for the purpose of building up an unwieldy reserve, and to pay as a franchise tax an inordinate sum into the Treasury.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. Does my friend from South Carolina seriously think that the Federal reserve banks make money under their high rate of discount?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; I do.

Mr. GLASS. Why, as a matter of fact, the high rate of discount was intended to curtail the business of the Federal reserve bank and to reduce its earnings, and it did that. To-day there is scarcely a Federal reserve bank in the system that expects to make more than its actual expenses for the ensuing year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. GLASS. The money made by the Federal reserve bank was made upon the great volume of business and not by reason of the high rates. The high rates reduced the profits. It is the low rates that make the money.

Mr. SMITH. As a matter of fact it did, but the board went on in spite of the high rates and added that much to the volume of its earnings.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. Being unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to state that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to state that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is necessarily absent and is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS].

Mr. TRAMMELL (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. ERNST. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] and vote "nay."

Mr. FERNALD (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], which I transfer to the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 9, nays 64, as follows:

So Mr. HEFLIN's amendment was rejected.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I desire at this time to offer an amendment to the pending bill, which is in the nature of a substitute. The amendment is the so-called farmers' union measure, to which I have heretofore referred and which has been before us for a year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. New in the chair). What is the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. NORBECK. The amendment I propose is in the nature of a substitute for the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota propose to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill?

Mr. NORBECK. That is my amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NORBECK. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest to the Senator that under the parliamentary practice it will be necessary to perfect the text of the pending bill before a substitute would be in order; otherwise, if the substitute should be agreed to, there would be no opportunity to offer amendments to the text of the pending bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield to me?

Mr. NORBECK. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. The substitute will be in order; but amendments perfecting the original text will have preference. The Senator from South Dakota, however, may now offer his substitute and have it pending.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no disposition to displace the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I shall not ask that the amendment may be read. It is rather long. I think nearly every Senator is familiar with it. I shall briefly state the question which is involved.

I wish to say that it is not so much a question of whether we shall have a big fund or a small fund as it is a question of whether we shall have a practical plan in the hands of a board that is sympathetic with the idea. The objections to the so-called Lenroot bill as I see them are very brief. I object to the bill because it is proposed to put the administration of the law under a board which is not in harmony with the theory of the proposed law.

I object because the capital has been apportioned arbitrarily between 12 different districts. It is proposed under this bill, for instance, to put $5,000,000 in the land bank districts, where the demands of agriculture have required approximately only half a million dollars. It is proposed to put ten times as much capital in some districts as is required, while in other districts, where there is a big demand, there will be an inadequate supply provided. For instance, it is proposed to go out to the Omaha land bank district, where under the stress $50,000,000, approximately, was advanced, and say to them: "You can have the same amount made available for loans as is made available in some other district which does not need any money." A little improvement was made yesterday by the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], whereby there is a possibility of increasing the capital of some of the banks, but not in proportion to the needs of the country.

I have met this argument time and again, "Well, we really do not need it." I have heard that stated time and again by Senators here. There are 26 Senators on this floor representing States that did not borrow one dollar from the War Finance Corporation for agricultural purposes. So there are States represented by 26 Senators that do not need it at all. The Senators from those States may say: "We are not worrying about the matter at all, for we feel we have plenty of credit available." This bill fails to recognize the fact that certain sections of the country have surplus capital. The purpose of any credit legislation is to make it more easy to transfer capital to those places where there is a greater demand for it. That is what the War Finance Corporation was established for, and that is one of the things they succeeded in accomplishing.

I object to the bill because of the lack of mobility of the fund after it has been provided. I know it will be argued that this bank over here can lend money to the bank over there. It can, that is true; but it does not have to do so. Under the Federal reserve banking system that is one of the things that was made sure of, namely, that the mobility of funds should be taken care of by a central board. The Commission on Agricultural Inquiry commended that plan very much when it referred to the Federal reserve banking system. If it was commendable in connection with credit afforded the business man, why is it not a commendable thing in the case of credit for the farmer? Whatever we do, it is not so important, perhaps, that there should be very large amounts provided, but it is more important that it be easily obtainable. Farm organizations have expressed themselves fully and frankly on this matter. They have said: "Whatever you do, give us a central board, a board in sympathy with the plan, a board that will take hold of it and work it out in a satisfactory manner." The Farmers' Union stands for it, the Farm Bureau stands for it, and have asked for it time and again; but we are met with the suggestion: "You do not know what you want; we will save a little money if you will just let us do it our way."

There have been a great many changes made in the bill. I am not questioning the motive of any Senator here, and I think the Senator from Wisconsin is entitled to great credit for having tackled this question and brought it up. There was first a special committee, consisting of Senators on both sides of the Chamber. They are committed to the bill. The appeal in the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin was to the effect that men over on the Democratic side helped draft the first bill. There is an appeal to both sides of the Chamber, but the main features of the bill which they brought out and which they recommended have been thrown into the waste basket—by themselves.

The original proposition was for a million dollars capital at Omaha to fill a $50,000,000 demand. That was all that was in the bill in the first place, but it was along the right line. I have spoken to several Senators about this matter and they reply: "You are right, NORBECK, but I was a member of the committee; I was tied up before I realized what was being done."

What I am pleading for, Senators, is not for my bill because it is my bill. We will put the name of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] at the head of the legislation; it belongs there. I am pleading with you merely for a practical plan; that is all, and I am willing to accept any reasonable amendment to the amendment I propose if it may be accepted as a substitute for the pending bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I propose an amendment to the so-called Lenroot bill and ask that it may be stated by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, it is proposed to strike out lines 2 to 5, inclusive, and insert:

SECTION 1. That this act may be cited as the "Federal farm loan and credit act." The administration of the act as set forth in Title I shall be under the direction and control of the Federal Farm Loan Board hereinafter created, and the administration of the act under Title II shall be under the direction and control of the Federal Farm Credit Board hereinafter created.

It is also proposed to insert, immediately following the words "Title II," on page 2, the following:

SEC. 201. That there shall be established at the seat of government in the Department of the Treasury a bureau charged with the execution of Title II of this act and of all acts amendatory thereof, to be known as the Federal Farm Credit Bureau, under the general supervision of a Federal Farm Credit Board.

Said Federal Farm Credit Board shall consist of five members, including the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall be a member and chairman ex officio, and four members to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Of the four members to be appointed by the President, not more than two shall be appointed from one political party, and all four of said members shall be citizens of the United States, and shall devote their entire time to the business of the Federal Farm Credit Board; they shall receive an annual salary of $10,000, payable monthly, together with actual necessary traveling expenses.

One of the members to be appointed by the President shall be designated by him to serve for two years, one for four years, one for six years, and one for eight years, and thereafter each member so appointed shall serve for a term of eight years, unless sooner removed for cause by the President. One of the members shall be designated by the President as the Federal credit commissioner, who shall be the active executive officer of said board. Each member of the Federal Farm Credit Board shall within 15 days after notice of his appointment take and subscribe to the oath of office.

The first meeting of the Federal Farm Credit Board shall be held in Washington as soon as may be after the passage of this act, at a date and place to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

No member of the Federal Farm Credit Board shall, during his continuance in office, be an officer or director of any other institution, association, or partnership engaged in banking or in the business of advancing loans or credits of any character. Before entering upon his duties as a member of the Federal Farm Credit Board each member shall certify under oath to the President that he is eligible under this section.

The President shall have the power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to fill any vacancy occurring in the membership of the Federal Farm Credit Board. If such vacancy shall be filled during the recess of the Senate, a commission shall be granted which shall expire at the end of the next session.

The Federal Farm Credit Board shall be authorized and empowered to employ such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, laborers, and other employees as it may deem necessary to conduct the business of said board. All salaries and fees authorized in this section and not otherwise provided for shall be fixed in advance by said board and shall be paid in the same manner as the salaries of the Federal Farm Credit Board. All such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, laborers, and other employees shall be appointed without regard to the provisions of the act of January 16, 1883 (volume 22, United States Statutes at Large, page 403), the amendments thereto, or any rule or regulation made in pursuance thereof: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the President from placing said employees in the classified service.

Every Federal land bank shall semiannually submit to the Federal Farm Credit Board a schedule showing the salaries or rates of compensation paid to the officers and employees of its farm credits department.

The Federal Farm Credit Board shall annually make a full report of its operations to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who shall cause the same to be printed for the information of the Congress.

The Federal Farm Credit Board shall prescribe a form for the statement of conditions of farm credit departments in the Federal land banks under its supervision, which shall be filled out quarterly by each such farm credits department and transmitted to said board.

It shall be the duty of the Federal Farm Credit Board to prepare from time to time bulletins setting forth the principal features of this act and through the Department of Agriculture or otherwise to distribute the same, particularly to the press, to agricultural journals, and to farmers' organizations; to prepare and distribute in the same manner circulars setting forth the principles and advantages of this credit system, and the protection afforded debtors under this act; instructing farmers how to take the best advantage of the merits and advantages of debentures or bonds sold under this act; and to disseminate in its discretion information for the further instruction of farmers regarding the methods and principles by the application of which they can take the best advantage of this credit service. Said board is instructed to lay before the Congress at each session its recommendations for further appropriations to carry out said objects.

That the Federal Farm Loan Board and the Federal Farm Credit Board are hereby authorized to sit in joint session to solve problems that are of mutual necessity in carrying out provisions of both Title I and Title II of this act; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby empowered to call such joint session of the Federal Farm Loan Board and the Federal Farm Credit Board at his discretion, or at the request of three members of said boards.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, under the limitation of debate now applicable it will be difficult to explain this amendment in great detail. Let me say, however, that the substance of the amendment is, in contradistinction to the provisions of the pending bill which it seeks to amend, to create in Washington a separate agency to administer the provisions of this act.

The amendment proposed, instead of authorizing the administration of the act under the Farm Loan Board, creates a new board to be known as the farm credit board, with powers over intermediate credits analogous to those exercised by the Farm Loan Board over subject matter at present under the law within the jurisdiction of the Farm Loan Board.

There are some reasons which justify or seem to make necessary this amendment.

The Federal Farm Loan Board has been functioning since the passage of the farm loan act. Its duties under the present law are entirely distinct from the duties which will be imposed by the provisions of the pending bill. The Farm Loan Board now has important functions to perform that are not closely analogous to but in many respects are widely different from the acts to be performed by the Federal supervising agency under the provisions of the Lenroot bill.

Since the agitation for intermediate rural credits began, the question has been repeatedly discussed as to what agency should administer such legislation if enacted. At first it was thought by some legislators and other students of the subject that the act should be administered by the Federal Reserve Board. That policy, however, has been abandoned as impracticable, principally for the reasons that I am urging now in justification of the pending amendment.

The Federal Farm Loan Board now has jurisdiction over long-time loans based upon lands as security. The object of the pending bill is to furnish a credit system occupying a position in a sense intermediate between commercial loans, which are for short periods, and land-bank loans, which are for long periods. The training and the experience of the Federal Farm Loan Board will make it difficult for that agency effectively to administer the intermediate credit system proposed to be created by the pending bill.

As strongly supporting the conclusion which I now urge, I cite the testimony of Mr. Lobdell, of the Farm Loan Board, who stated before the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate that in his opinion some other agency than the Federal Farm Loan Board should be designated to administer the provisions of the Lenroot-Anderson bill if it becomes law.

His opinion, as I recall it, was to the effect that the powers and duties reposed in the Federal agency proposed to be created to supervise the execution of the act had best be vested in the Federal Reserve Board; but, as I have already stated, the advocacy of that policy has been abandoned by everyone, and the question now is whether the Senate of the United States will commit itself to the policy of adding to the present duties of the Federal Farm Loan Board tasks which are widely at variance with those which that board has been trained to perform. The board already has more duties than it can successfully execute. To impose upon the Farm Loan Board the obligation to administer this act—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the Senator in my own time whether, if the amendment he proposes is adopted, the local administration will still be in the Federal land banks?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; the local administration will be substantially as provided by the Lenroot-Anderson bill under the terms that we are now considering.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then let me ask the Senator if his argument will not equally apply to the directors of Federal land banks? Will not their training equally be along other lines?

Mr. ROBINSON. The argument has, of course, considerable force; but it is true, Mr. President, that the Lenroot-Anderson bill contemplates the establishment of a division in each farm-loan bank, one to take care of farm-land loans and the other to take care of farm-credit loans, and each division in the farm-land bank will have its separate agencies and administrative officers, and each of these divisions will have agencies and officers who in time, at least, will become specially informed and trained for the performance of the duties imposed by the respective acts governing them.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then let me ask the Senator whether this is not the situation: The Federal land bank now has its subordinates trained in the business of making loans in accordance with the provisions of the Federal land law. It will be obliged, will it not, to have subordinates whose particular business and training will be in connection with these personal-credit loans? In other words, does not exactly the same argument apply? It is true that the directors of the bank will be obliged to have agents and assistants who have skill and experience in banking of this character; but why should not the Farm Loan Board have exactly the same kind of assistants?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is harmonious with other provisions of the Lenroot-Anderson bill. Nobody claims that the agents and individuals who pass upon farm-land loans shall pass upon farm credit loans.

The object is to separate as widely as may be these two agencies, to intrust the credit board with the supervision of the execution of the provisions of the pending bill, to leave the powers and duties of the Federal Farm Loan Board as they now are provided for by law. Of course, it is not deemed advisable or desirable to create two separate boards of directors in the various land banks, nor is it deemed necessary; but for the purpose of making the act a success I maintain that it is advisable and desirable to place its supervision under a board especially organized for the purpose of enforcing this act, and that is the substance of my argument.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, it is perfectly obvious that the Federal farm credit board contemplated by this amendment must have under it assistants and a general force. The expense of maintaining the force of the organization will, of course, be in addition to the $40,000 salary to which the members of the board will be entitled under the provisions of the amendment. That probably should not be added to the expense, because if the administration of the act is placed under the control of the Farm Loan Board the same expense, or a greater portion of that expense, will be incurred; but we would be paying $40,000 a year, under this amendment, for the opportunity to have the administration of it in the hands of a board which is not biased or set in its views about these loans by reason of its experience in connection with farm-land loans.

I must confess I do not really see any reason whatever for the creation of a new organization, at a cost of $40,000 a year, for the administration of this act, particularly as the loans are to be made in either case through the Federal land banks and through the directors of those Federal land banks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I make the same objection to this proposal as that noted by the Senator from Montana. It seems to me it would be confusing matters here to undertake to have two boards, namely, the Farm Loan Board, and now another board, the farm credits board, supervising the operations of the same Federal land banks and their directors; not only that, but it would mean the incurring of additional expense, which it seems to me is wholly unnecessary. This system ought to be administered either through the Federal Reserve Board or through the Farm Loan Board. We have concluded that it had better be administered through the Farm Loan Board. I think that is correct, because it is so related to agriculture that it properly belongs there, and the Farm Loan Board has supervision and control over the Federal land banks, names a temporary organization, all the directors of those banks, and until some system of permanent organization has been agreed upon will name three of the directors of those banks, and I can not see but that you complicate and confuse matters, besides burdening the whole plan, with this enormous expense of an additional board. I think, therefore, that I can not support the amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I only wish to emphasize what the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Florida have said. If this new bureau is organized, the only powers it can have will be with reference to restrictions and limitations provided for in the bill. Whether these banks shall be successful or not depends upon the policy of the banks. That policy will be determined by the district directors, and those directors will be under the control, not of this new board, but of the old board, and all of their officers and all of the employees will be under their management and general control.

I have gone into this; I have gone over the matter, and spent a good deal of time on it with representatives of the Farm Bureau, and while I appreciate what their motives are in this, yet they have not devised any plan, and the Senator's amendment does not give to this board which it is proposed shall be created, with five members at $10,000 each, any real control over the credits department, or the policy that shall be pursued, but merely power to make the limitations and restrictions which are provided for in the act, and it does not seem to me that the expense would be warranted. It would lead to endless confusion in the administration of the act.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in legislation for the relief of farmers in connection with rural credits, and from the inception of the legislation there was a desire on the part of the farming section that there should be an entirely separate department created, as separate as the Federal reserve system and as separate as the farm loan banks, to administer the system when created.

I can see some reason why they would desire to have a separate department administering this law. It is a new kind of credits into which we are venturing, intermediate credits, as was well said by the Senator from Arkansas, credits midway between the short-time and long-time credits. It does seem to me that the Senator from Arkansas has in a very able way gotten rid of the objection that was urged on account of merging this with the Farm Loan Board. If the Farm Loan Board administers this law they will have subordinates, costing about as much as is provided to be spent for a board. This department will fix policies and make suggestions, and the suggestions of the central board are usually followed. The Federal reserve system has a board here which has only suggestive authority; yet everybody knows how potential it is.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SWANSON. I have but five minutes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I would like to ask the Senator just this question, if he will permit it. Suppose the directors of the local bank pursue a policy that is unsatisfactory to this rural-credits board. What could they do to coerce the local directors into observing a policy which they do not want to follow?

Mr. SWANSON. It is precisely the same with the Federal reserve system. You can not coerce member banks, or regional reserve banks, but I have not yet known of a suggestion from the central board of the Federal reserve system which has not been followed. It does seem to me that the people of these 12 banks would rather deal with the head of a board than to deal with subordinates in Washington, and report any action to be taken by the Farm Loan Board. If this bill prevails, the effect will be that when these banks want to get some suggestion from Washington they will go to the subordinates of a bureau, and that subordinate will take it to the Farm Loan Board. This amendment of the Senator from Arkansas would make it possible for them to deal directly with an independent board, and it does seem to me it would not cost any more money, but it would be more efficient, and it would be administered, as far as the central board is concerned, by people who are favorable to the system. I can see no objection to it, and I can see a good deal of advantage that would accrue from having this amendment, which has been very skillfully drawn by the Senator from Arkansas, added to the bill.

The system would, under the amendment, cost nothing except for the bureau created in Washington, and this bureau will not be a bureau of subordinates but a bureau under four men, costing no more; but the local banks would then deal directly, as far as the system is then concerned, with the people who are in charge and in control, and not deal indirectly, through the bureau, with somebody else who is in control. As was well said by the Senator from Montana, I do not think that the $40,000 could be properly charged up. They would hire four men, probably, as subordinates, to do the work that would be done by the chiefs of the bureau. I think this amendment would get rid of a great deal of objection this bill occasioned, because it is not administered by an independent body in accord with the purposes sought to be accomplished.

I understand, further, that the Farm Loan Board is not desirous of having this work. I think they appeared before the committees and implied as much.

Mr. LENROOT. They wanted the Federal Reserve Board to have it.

Mr. SWANSON. Because they thought the paper was nearer Federal reserve paper than land paper. The Federal Reserve Board do not want to administer the law. I do not know whether they expressed themselves or not, but the paper provided for it is not in accord with their paper. We are creating intermediate paper and, as the Senator from Arkansas very forcefully and strikingly said, all that is asked is that a board be created with a knowledge of that kind of paper to administer the law, and administer it successfully. I believe if we have this independent board, in sympathy with the law and in accord with it, devoting their time to it, this measure will bring great relief to the rural sections of the country. I believe this is a material amendment and ought to be adopted.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, under the Federal reserve system special privileges were given to the farmer's paper when it came to rediscount; the national banking act was amended so as to permit the making of loans on real estate, and in those two respects greater advantages were given to the farmer than he had had theretofore. But those of us who had studied this problem felt that these provisions did not go far enough, so we established the Federal farm land banks for long-time credit, and I think those of us who favored that legislation have been more than gratified at the very great degree of success it has met with.

Again, we felt, at the time we had up for consideration the farm loan act, there was a necessity for further relief along the line of rural personal credits. Now we present a scheme in the form of the Lenroot bill. A few of its provisions I am not in accord with, but I think we have gone a long way forward, and I believe it will afford genuine relief. But does it not seem a little bit strange to Senators to contend that one board can not administer satisfactorily the financial needs of the farmer? Why should we say to him, "If you want to avail yourself of the form of credits which are provided for under the Federal reserve system, you shall have your securities administered by the Federal reserve system. If you want a long time loan on your real estate, you shall have your financial affairs administered by the Farm Loan Board. If you want longer personal credits, you shall have your affairs in that behalf administered by another system provided for in the amendment offered by the distinguished senior Senator from Arkansas." In other words, if we adopt this amendment, we are going to say to the farmer, "You must have your affairs financed by three different systems, or three different boards." For my part, I see no necessity for it.

I recognize the fact that when Judge Lobdell appeared before our committee he suggested that the supervision of the rural personal credits would more properly address itself to the Federal Reserve Board than to the Farm Loan Board, but this whole scheme of personal credits and farm credits addresses itself to a board that is to administer the finances of the farmer, and it seems to me that if we were to adopt this amendment, it would render "confusion worse confounded." It would add nothing, in my judgment, to the relief of the farmer, and it would embarrass him very much.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the entire financial and banking history of the world, if it has proven anything at all, has proven this, that a commercial banking system is one thing, and a land banking system is another, and that you can not work the two together as one. From the "Mississippi Bubble" down to now, there have been constant efforts to convert a commercial banking system, founded upon quick and live assets, into a convenient source of credit for people who want long credit, with slow assets, and whenever it has been attempted, it has been followed by the destruction of the system to which it was applied. You can start a system of rural or agricultural credits with slow assets and long credits, founded a good deal upon the same principles as a land mortgage scheme, and it can be perfectly sound and will be perfectly successful, but if you attempt to engraft that sort of a system upon an ordinary commercial bank, which at any moment may be required to call for every dollar that it has that is available in cash, you will condemn any commercial system upon which you engraft that sort of thing.

That goes back not only to the Mississippi Bubble scheme, to Law's scheme, but it goes back to the union planter's bank scheme in my own State of Mississippi which led to what was called the Mississippi repudiation, although it was not repudiation.

The two things must be kept distinct. One answers a certain purpose and the other another purpose. As the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] said a moment ago, it will not do to say merely that the farmer wants all three. When the farmer wants one he must go to one source. When he wants another, based upon an entirely different principle, he must go to another source. When he wants the third, based upon yet another principle, he must go to a different source. It is not a question of the occupation of the man. It is a question of the collateral to be deposited and the question of the quickness or the slowness of the assets that can be converted into cash.

There is nothing more clear to any mind that has ever studied the financial history of the world than the fact that we can not engraft a land system upon a commercial banking system. We could have a land-banking system which would be perfectly safe, founded upon different principles or different security, with different foundations, but not at all identical with the other and not workable with it, and that we have attempted to supply in the farm-loan banks of the United States. We can carry that system still further if we will.

But, Mr. President, the most remarkable achievement of the last 10 years has been the foundation of the Federal bank system. There are only two things that threaten it. One is to convert its live assets into slow assets, prevent it from being a commercial banking system, and the other is to have Congress intervene every now and then to instruct the directors as to their rate of interest and as to what and how much and when they shall lend. Now, if we want to convert the Federal reserve banking system into a board of directors to be directed from day to day by the Congress of the United States, with little half-baked financial intellects here and there who want to be able to tell them just what they ought to do and when they ought to do it and whether they ought to do it, then we might just as well damn the system now and put it out of business. A banking system directed by the Senate and by the House, or by either body, as a board of practical directors, is doomed and damned already. We can not make anything more out of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I do not want to let one point go by without calling attention to it. I listened with great interest to the argument of the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. He worked hard upon the committee and has been very helpful in bringing the legislation into better shape, but I can not agree with one point he made. He said it might lead to confusion if we asked the farmer to go one place for personal credit and to another board for land credit. Mr. President, the bill does not propose to lend any money to the farmer. He does not connect with this proposed plan. This is a plan to lend money to the bank, and the bank may lend it to the farmer. Therefore, there is no chance of confusion on account of separate boards.

I want to support the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas that there should be a separate board, a board that has not the same viewpoint in this matter as the Senator from Wisconsin, a board which believes there is a real demand for a little longer time credit—from nine months to three years—a board which will carry that idea uppermost in their minds. I think it is very important, and that is one objection to putting it with the present Farm Loan Board. Commissioner Lobdell is a man for whom I have the highest respect. He is a man of great ability and wide experience, absolute frankness and honesty, but he has the same viewpoint that is held by so many commercial bankers, and that is the viewpoint to which the Senator from Wisconsin objects. Judge Lobdell stated that if it was put under their control, they would not under any circumstances make a single loan of more than nine months.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, the Senator is mistaken. He said he would not make a single chattel loan for more than nine months.

Mr. NORBECK. Chattel loans are all we are dealing with.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no.

Mr. NORBECK. There are no real estate loans in the matter.

Mr. LENROOT. But to lend on chattel security is very different.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator from Wisconsin will bear me out that practically every farmer's note has chattel security behind it.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it is admitted that it is necessary to use the 12 Federal farm-loan banks as a means of making the loans, and the only question really involved in the amendment now before the Senate is whether the Federal farm-loan banks shall have two separate bureaus here in Washington to supervise them and direct them and control them, or only one bureau. It seems to me, inasmuch as we have to use the existing banks through which the loans are to be made, that it is much to the advantage of all to have only one authority in Washington to lay down the rules and regulations under which they are to operate.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will yield briefly.

Mr. NORBECK. I merely wish to say that I do not think it is confusing if we have to do it through the farm-loan bank.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So far as the amendment to the bill is concerned, it is. I knew the Senator had another bill.

It seems to me the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas simply means the creation of a new lot of supervisory machinery here in Washington. The real work has to be done by the farm-loan banks. That is admitted under the bill and under the amendment. The bill as presented by the committee to the Senate provides that the Federal land banks shall create a new department to carry on a new business.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] makes the argument that we can not unite two classes of business in the same bank. They are going to be united whether the amendment is adopted or whether the original bill is adopted. Nor is it an unusual thing. There are to-day hundreds of national banks in the United States doing a commercial business and also lending on real estate. Not only that but there are hundreds of national banks that have established, in addition to their ordinary commercial business, savings departments where their assets are not mobile. They are doing two classes of business under the same management. So I think that neither of the objections can apply to the original bill.

To my mind none of the criticisms and none of the arguments made in favor of the dual supervision here in Washington can stand the test of examination. The 12 Federal land banks scattered throughout the country, which must be used in this proceeding, are as a rule under the control of boards of directors composed of men who have had banking experience. Not only that but the necessities of the farm loans involve the investigation to some extent of the personal credit of the farmers who make the loans.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator realizes that the Lenroot-Anderson bill on the subject gives an entirely separate and distinct proposition from the Federal land banks, and it is only under the proposal of the Lenroot-Anderson bill when the matters reach Washington that they are merged into the Farm Loan Board. It is a mere incident that the Federal land bank is utilized to administer the act locally.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I can not yield further. The directors of the Federal land banks at the present time are selected by the Federal Farm Loan Board in Washington, and as long as they are selected by that board they are going to follow the instructions of the board. We know from experience that it is quite within the possibilities that there may be a dispute arise between the Federal Farm Loan Board, already organized to conduct the banks, and the proposed new board which the Senator from Arkansas desires to organize. What if such a dispute should arise? It would not only be an unseemly dispute but it is inevitable that the authority which would be recognized by the directors of the Federal land banks would be the authority to which they owed their appointment.

So I think it would be very inadvisable, in my opinion, to attempt to create two authorities here in Washington to direct the affairs of the 12 Federal land banks which are operating successfully and, for the most part, are in the hands of able men, and in the hands of men closely associated with agricultural credits at the present time.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I am moved to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that it is not at all uncommon to have divided authority. Under the Federal reserve system we have it, and in a certain measure under the Federal farm loan system we have it. If that be the only objection to the amendment, I think it has really no substantial reason to support it. There is no more relation between the personal credit which we seek to establish under the pending legislation and the Federal land bank than there is between the Federal reserve system and the Federal land banks. There is no kindred idea that underlies the two.

I want to remind the Senator from Nebraska that it is the belief of the farmers, who have sought long and constantly to have some kind of personal credit law enacted for their benefit, that it needs separate and distinct administration. They believe, and the testimony that was taken warrants the belief, I think, that the Federal land bank system is not friendly to this system. If it is adopted with their control, it is going to have to make good, if it does at all, in spite of an unsympathetic administration because they do not believe in the system.

The divided authority does not support the Senator's position. There is not any more divided authority there than there is between the Federal Reserve Board and the Comptroller of the Currency, not a bit. There is no more divided authority there than there is between the present administration of the Federal land bank system with its regional boards and its central board, and therefore I do not think that the Senator, if he stops to study it a moment, would find that that was any real objection to the proposed system. If Congress believes that the farmers ought to have redress, then they ought to give the farmer that kind of redress that he thinks he needs, unless they find that the farmer either is not entitled under the law to that redress or that he is too ignorant to know what he wants.

If we concede that he knows what he wants and that what he wants is not wrong, then we ought to give him what he wants and not give him something that he says he can not administer and which will not be administered sympathetically.

I hope Senators will bear in mind that this is a tremendous experiment; it is a big thing. There are billions of dollars of credit that must be administered. The Federal Farm Loan Board has now all that it should be required to administer. I am sure, without criticizing the board—for I think it is composed of good men—that they have not always been sym-thetic, even in administering the present system; but they start out with the declaration that they do not sympathize with this and do not intend to follow the spirit of it. The Senator from South Dakota has called attention to the fact that Mr. Lobdell stated that if he were required to administer this system no chattel loan would be made for more than nine months. I know and every man who knows anything about the system under which the farmer must use credit knows that if credits are to be really helpful, to deny the farmer a longer credit is just as effective as to deny him any credit at all. Therefore, if we really believe that the farmers are entitled to relief, if we believe that they are honest when they ask for it, and if we believe that they have intelligence enough to know what they want, I can not understand the spirit which would make Senators want to give them something which they say they can not successfully operate and which they can not successfully use. Let us either give them what they think they can use or else postpone any legislation at all.

I sincerely hope that merely the pride of opinion will not induce Senators to deny to this very large class and, all admit, a very hard-pressed class of our citizens that kind of redress to which they think they are entitled and which they believe they want and can administer.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, there is very little that is new under the sun, and I think the questions involved here, although they may be new in our country, are not new in the world. Our Federal reserve system was adopted from a system of finance that had existed in Europe for more than a half century before we adopted it. The plan of a Federal land bank was found in Europe before we adopted it here. At the same time under their system they had a plan of extending personal credits to the farmer, secured, in whole or in part, by chattel mortgages. I can not pronounce the names of the systems which have been established in Europe, but with their experience they guided the ships of finance in different channels. They maintained one course for loans which were based on land and another course and another organization for loans which were based on chattels and personal obligations.

I am anxious that this system of credit, which is not new in the world, shall be established in this country. It is a system which was worked out successfully in the old conservative banking circles of Europe long before we ever entered the field. There is nothing radical in the proposition. It has been proven in the past that it is along the lines of sound business finance.

As to whether or not the system here shall be administered soundly or administered radically and unwisely is another question which is not now before the Senate. The President of the United States will be charged with the responsibility of appointing men who must administer this proposed law; but to say that the law and the system are wrong we must deny the record of the past; we must deny what we find in the financial system of Europe. With all their experience they found that it was better and wiser to work out these two loan systems in two different columns. I think the safer course is to follow the track of experience and to accept what the experience of mankind has already proven to be a safe and sound way to administer these difficult questions of finance. For that reason I shall support the amendment.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). Announcing my pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] as on the previous vote, and being unable to obtain a transfer of that pair, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. As I am not able to obtain a transfer of that pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] which I transfer to the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FERNALD (after having voted in the negative). I note that my pair, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] has not voted. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. HALE. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] to the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] and vote "nay."

Mr. ERNST. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] to the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 53, as follows:

YEAS—21.

Ashurst	George	Myers	Swanson
Brookhart	Glass	Norbeck	Underwood
Broussard	Harris	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Caraway	Heflin	Robinson
Couzens	King	Sheppard
Culberson	McKellar	Smith

NAYS—53.

Ball	Hale	Moses	Spencer
Bayard	Hitchcock	Nelson	Stanfield
Brandeggee	Johnson	New	Sterling

So Mr. ROBINSON'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. At the end of line 8, on page 4, it is proposed to insert the following:

On the majority vote of the members of the Federal Farm Loan Board any Federal land bank shall be required to rediscount the discounted paper of any other Federal land bank at rates of interest to be fixed by the Federal Farm Loan Board, and may be required to sell debentures for that purpose.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, one objection made by my colleague [Mr. NORBECK] to the pending bill, the Lenroot bill, was that the discounting or rediscounting by other Federal land banks of the notes of one Federal farm land bank was simply permissive, and not required, under the terms of the bill. I appreciate that objection made by my colleague to the pending bill, and I think the bill can easily be amended; and I believe that the Senator from Wisconsin would be willing to accept an amendment framed after a provision in the Federal reserve bank act. I call attention to that provision, found in section 11 under subhead (b), which provides:

To permit or, on the affirmative vote of at least five members of the Reserve Board, to require Federal reserve banks to rediscount the discounted paper of other Federal reserve banks at rates of interest to be fixed by the Federal Reserve Board.

If the Federal Reserve Board can require or should be authorized to require the rediscount of discounted notes of the different Federal reserve banks, why should not any farm-land bank be required to rediscount the discounted notes of any other farm-land bank, the same as in the Federal reserve system?

The amendment is submitted with this in view and with this, I think, as a precedent for it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, there is this great difference between the law which compels a Federal reserve bank to discount the paper of another Federal reserve bank and the amendment which the Senator has offered: In the law which requires one Federal reserve bank to discount for another it is not required to borrow money for the purpose of doing it, and it is assumed that the Federal Reserve Board will require the Federal reserve bank to discount the paper of another bank only when it has surplus funds; but the Senator's amendment goes so far as to require one farm-loan bank possibly to discount the paper of another farm-loan bank even though it has to borrow money in order to do it. That is manifestly impossible.

Mr. STERLING. It may sell debentures in order that it may raise the money for the purpose of rediscounting these discounted notes. Why should it not have that power and why should not that be the requirement, Mr. President?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, why should a bank be required to go in debt itself in order to relieve the necessities of another bank? That is an entirely different proposition from the Federal reserve process.

Mr. STERLING. The objection made by my colleague is that very little benefit will be conferred upon certain sections of the country under the system as it is provided in this bill; that there should be that elasticity in the system which would be covered and provided for by an amendment like this.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, aside from the fact that I do not think that it is at all practicable as proposed by the Senator, I will say that that feature of the system has already been taken care of by an amendment offered here yesterday by my colleague [Mr. SWANSON], which proposed to mobilize the contingent total sum of $60,000,000 with permission to the administrative board to loan as much as $10,000,000 of this additional amount to any one of these banks which really might need it. In other words, that amendment was intended to provide authority to the administrative board, not to subscribe necessarily $5,000,000 additional to all of the 12 banks but to mobilize the entire additional capital of $60,000,000, with permission to the board to make the loans where they are needed, so that one of these banks might have a capital of $15,000,000, instead of but $5,000,000. That, I take it, was taken care of by that amendment; and that amendment is workable, and I do not think this one is.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I was not aware of the amendment now mentioned by the Senator from Virginia. It may be, and yet I can not help but think that this is workable and that it is but a reasonable requirement under the circumstances.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will strike out the last clause of that amendment, because upon reflection it might take from one land bank the resources that it needs in the future to take care of its own customers; but wherever they do have available funds on hand that are not being utilized, I do not know of any reason why they should not be used to rediscount.

Mr. GLASS. I know, but they should not be required.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, acting on the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin, I strike out the words "and may be required to sell debentures for that purpose."

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I should like to offer an amendment to the amendment, if I can get the language of it. I want to fix the rate of interest there. I do not know whether this amendment refers to the rate of interest or not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The reading clerk read as follows:

On the majority vote of the members of the Federal Farm Loan Board, any Federal land bank shall be required to rediscount the discounted paper of any other Federal land bank at rates of interest to be fixed by the Federal Farm Loan Board.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move to amend by adding "not exceeding 6 per cent per annum." I think it is important to determine the rate of interest here, because there is no provision otherwise to limit it, and it ought to be limited.

I discussed that matter yesterday, and I shall not take up the time now to refer to it. These are debentures which are made tax free. The system is based upon capital furnished by the Government. The operation is in the control of Government officials, and there ought to be a limitation on the rate of interest which these obligations shall bear, and for which they may be rediscounted.

I am going to follow that with an amendment, on page 5, after line 12, to fix that rate at not exceeding 5½ per cent per annum. In other words, the debentures ought to be limited as to rate of interest to 5½ per cent or 5 per cent, I am not particular which, but one or the other—I am willing to make it 5½ per cent—and this discount should be limited to 6 per cent.

I offer that amendment.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I am afraid there has been confusion in the minds of some Senators as to the similarity between a Federal reserve bank and one of these land banks in the method of obtaining their capital. I think it is very dangerous to require one of the farm-credit banks to discount the paper of the others when its resources are based entirely upon local affairs, for we might in that way make it possible for one of these banks to absorb all of the resources of a given regional land bank, to the detriment of the people whom it is supposed to serve.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] introduced yesterday an amendment to make the measure flexible to meet local conditions. In that amendment he provided that the $60,000,000 of capital that would be allowed in addition to the primary $60,000,000 might be apportioned according to the needs of different localities up to an amount of $15,000,000.

That would enable them to issue debentures on that increased capital, plus the business done, and accommodate the local needs of the community. It is not on all fours with the principle involved in the Federal regional banks at all, and my opinion is that it would be very dangerous and subversive of the very object that we have, because in this we do not look for any degree of profit to accrue either from the local banks or from the cooperative societies that might utilize this money. We are setting up here an instrumentality to meet the short-time credits, so called, that are necessary for the farmers within a given community and attaching and accommodating it to the principle involved in the land-bank system, one for a 30-year period and one for not exceeding a 3-year period.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, is not the principle underlying each essentially the same?

Mr. SMITH. No.

Mr. STERLING. Do they not differ simply in scope, as it were?

Mr. SMITH. No. The very principle that is involved in our regional banks is to be the clearing houses for the great commerce of the country. This plan is designed to provide a system of credit, under certain conditions, for agriculture. I maintain that when agricultural interests have gotten their assets in liquid form the Federal reserve system can serve them as well as or better than any other system. There is an attempt here to take care of a certain character of paper that does not fall readily within the category of what is known as commercial paper. It is because of the radical difference of the two that we are forced to try to set up this system, and we have localized it and made the volume of business dependent upon the local assets that may be gotten; and therefore if we force one to rediscount the paper of another, it may result in its absorbing all the resources of the other.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. It seems to me—and I want to ask the Senator the question—that this would assist the very purpose underlying the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] to enable the community whose need was most to draw upon the community whose need was less.

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. If a bank located in one section of the country has a large amount of money with a small demand, and another bank in another section, having large demands made upon it, has small resources, under this proposed amendment it could call upon the other bank.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; but the danger there is this: If we had the same flexibility and the same daily shifting of the great volume of credit under one unified system that we have in the Federal reserve system, we could draw credit where there is a plethora and carry it to where there is a scarcity; but this provides a uniform basic credit, and this provides that with the remaining permissible $60,000,000 a community may enlarge its capital stock, and upon that issue for local use certain debentures and obligations which would meet the requirements, whereas human nature being human nature, which I have not time to go into, and this law restricting the local resources as it does, an occasion might arise where a community which needs credit less will absorb the community which needs it more, and I think as the law now stands it is infinitely better than the one proposed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I would like to suggest to the Senator from South Dakota an amendment so as to make his amendment read:

Shall be required to rediscount out of any unemployed funds on hand.

Here is merely money that is idle, we will say, which may be used, and it may be used, but if there is a demand for it in the district, I quite agree with the Senator from South Dakota that it ought not to be taken away.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator is speaking in his own time, and I will ask him if I may propound an inquiry to him.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. Of course, we have to avoid legislating for exceptions.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. We must have a general rule, and I think the general rule involved here is that you are trying to accommodate the local situation. It is a dangerous thing to set a precedent by making it general. The exception may be one that appeals to us all, but what about the general policy that you intend to inaugurate as applying that principle?

Mr. LENROOT. I am frank to say that I think of but one land bank in the United States where there will not be a call for these loans. Perhaps the Senator from South Dakota can indicate some land bank in the United States where there is no necessity for this amount and which will not use the $5,000,000.

Mr. SMITH. Exactly. It is a dangerous precedent.

Mr. LENROOT. Can the Senator from South Dakota indicate what banks he thinks will not employ this $5,000,000?

Mr. SMITH. That is the danger. That is the very principle I am trying to enunciate.

Mr. LENROOT. At the same time, I am perfectly willing to provide that if they do not use the funds they may be used for rediscount purposes.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator from Wisconsin sees at a glance the danger of opening that door to all sorts of complaints, because it may be temporary. The Senator from Wisconsin must admit that the amount of surplus one of these banks may hold may be temporary, and then if they exchange their ready cash for obligations of another bank, there would arise a sudden call for this money and it would be exhausted. I think the plan we have in force now possibly is better than trying to take care of exceptions which we imagine may arise.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, if we are to have the Lenroot bill, I should like to see the amendment of my colleague accepted. It would be helpful in a small way.

I have contended from the beginning that there was lack of mobility. We have met with the argument that here is $60,000,000 of capital which you can debenture 10 to 1, which means that $600,000,000 will be available. That seems large, in one way, but very small when you keep in mind that the total banking capital and funds of the United States are about $50,000,000,000, or nearly a hundred times that much. But the point I have been contending for all the time is that we are not dealing at all with any such possibility as that these debentures could not and would not be sold. Who would expect a bank in one district, where there is no particular demand for money, to go and borrow for the help of another one? You would hardly expect that.

In answer to the question as to whether there are land-bank districts which do not need money, I will state that I think the experience of the last two years is a full answer to that, when in State after State and State after State they have told the War Finance Corporation, "We do not need a dollar—we do not need a dollar"; when the Senators from those States say they have only one peculiar problem, and that is to get their money out earning, that they are loaning in other States. At the same time we propose to go into the United States Treasury and take $5,000,000 and put it into each district. You might as well start a Federal reserve bank over in the western sand hills of Nebraska. The demand would correspond.

The amendment of the Senator from Virginia was right as far as it went. It proposed to equalize things by making it possible for one land bank to have three times as much funds as another one. Is that the ratio of equalization we need, when you have the land bank up in Springfield, Mass., with $5,000,000, and the whole demand of the district was a little over a half million right at the peak, not a single loan asked for by Maine, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Rhode Island? Come down to the southern district, if you like, and take the States of New Jersey, Delaware, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and there is not a dollar asked, and yet it is said they need $5,000,000 to be put in there. Out in the great West, the borrowing country, as I said, the Omaha land-bank district got $50,000,000, and you say they need 15. The ratio asked is 100 to 1, and the ratio of capital you provide is 3 to 1, and you tie a string on it and do not say they can have 15, but say it is possible, if everybody agrees, it may be brought up to 15.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, in the pending bill the Federal reserve act is amended, in the second paragraph of section 13, which deals with actual transactions or notes, drafts, and bills of exchange issued or drawn for agricultural purposes, or based upon live-stock and commercial transactions, and the time is extended in that part of paragraph 2 to nine months. We are here setting up a system in conjunction with the Federal land banks, which has a period of 30 years, ostensibly a system to meet the peculiar needs of agriculture in the ordinary turnover of the business.

Every Senator on this floor knows that it takes 12 months to produce a commercial asset by the process of farming. Everyone has been convinced, even the proponents and drafters of this bill, that six months is inadequate to meet the needs of agriculture, and that time has been extended to nine months. Everybody knows that nine months is three months short of the requirements of agriculture, as six months is short. If it takes a pole 12 feet long to reach the fruit, 9 feet is as inadequate as 6 feet. A great many have discussed this afternoon the fact that you can not mix the commercial and agricultural features of banking. Under our Federal reserve system you can not. When we make the commodity produced the basis of the issuance of Federal reserve notes, then every dollar of farm produce becomes the basis of the issuance of circulation, and if it takes 12 months to produce it and 12 months to dispose of it, why not accommodate the farmers with 12 months' credit? It takes the manufacturer 30 days to buy the raw material, convert it into the finished goods, and meet the bills of exchange, and they have 30 days. They can have Federal reserve notes issued on 30-day, 60-day, and 90-day paper. The agricultural interests of this country produce the basis of the wealth upon which is to be issued circulation, liquid capital; and yet the farmer is denied the use of his products. Every Senator here knows that when the farmer has produced his crop and it is gathered and put into commercial form it has taken 12 months to produce it, and takes 12 months to dispose of it. Somebody holds it, somebody gets the capital upon which it is to be distributed through the 12 months.

I propose to amend, on the page indicated by my amendment, so as to change 9 months to 12 months, just giving 90 days additional, which will meet the requirements of agriculture so far as its yearly business is concerned. It is just as embarrassing to have your note renewed three months before you have the assets in the proper shape as to have to renew it in six months, and why do we come here and amend inadequately an inadequate provision? The amended inadequacy is as inadequate as the original inadequacy.

Therefore, if we are going to provide a law to meet the necessities of agriculture, and have it now set up, why mock the farmer with 9 months, when every farm organization and every man who has had experience knows that 12 months is absolutely essential? It does not jeopardize anybody's capital. The farmer can get capital based on the product he produces. It takes him 12 months to produce it. Why not give him 12 months' credit in the form of Federal reserve notes upon it? It takes him 12 months to produce, and why not take the basis of his wealth, which he has produced, and make it the basis of accommodating, as on 30-day, 60-day, and 90-day paper?

Mr. President, I believe there is not a man here, unless he objects to having the volume of currency enlarged, who would seriously object to the extended time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). The time of the Senator from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I must oppose this amendment. It is adding another inch to a nose that is already an inch too long. The Senate understands that the basic purpose of the Federal reserve system is to furnish an elastic currency, a currency that will automatically expand and contract to meet the needs of commerce. These notes must be short-time notes, and they must represent actual transactions; that is, they must meet the needs of the legitimate exchanges and sale of goods, and when in the fall of the year there is an unusual demand for credit the reserves of the Federal reserve system must be liquid and able to meet any demand that is required.

The minute you add a day to the time limit of these notes you add to the quantity of paper which the Federal reserve banks may hold in a time of stress, and to just that extent it tends to expand the credit and the currency of the country.

Mr. SMITH. Will the Senator yield for just a question?

Mr. McLEAN. I can not yield for a question. The Senator from South Carolina said that these notes are good, and that is true. They are secured by agricultural products. They are good; but when you permit them to be rediscounted by a Federal reserve bank—and they do not represent an actual transaction, but represent a loan for the retention of goods—you are putting into the system investment paper, finance paper, and you can not do that without endangering the efficiency of the system in a time of stress.

Cotton is no better than a United States bond or the bond of a State or municipality. Agricultural products are good, but they are no better than a real estate mortgage. But all of that class of securities were intentionally eliminated from the securities which should have the rediscount privilege, and the minute you extend the time and let in this investment paper the man who may buy a thousand bales of cotton can go to his bank and give a note and have that note discounted, and it may be used as a basis for the issuance of Federal reserve notes, when the man who makes the loan has no idea of selling the cotton. It may be a purely speculative transaction, entirely contrary to the purposes of the Federal reserve system so far as the rediscount privilege is concerned. If the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina be agreed to, it would merely invite speculative banks to accommodate speculative middlemen, and it seems to me a very dangerous thing to do.

I know that about once in 30 years the inflationists of the country get their heads together and make up their minds that the volume of credit and currency must keep pace with prices, that prices can be offset by easy money. That was the situation in 1920, and we had a very serious lesson at that time. It seems to me that we ought to take every precaution to avoid a recurrence of the crisis that we had in 1920. The complaint that comes from the South is that when the buyers' strike was inaugurated there were not sufficient credits to carry the crops until they could be sold in an orderly market, as the term is used in the law. The trouble then was that there was too much cash.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Connecticut has expired. The Chair will state that the Chair is advised by the clerks at the desk that there is no amendment pending.

Mr. SMITH. It is the amendment I sent to the desk. I thought I had offered it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed it was not actually offered.

Mr. SMITH. Then I offer it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 18, after the word "grace," in line 17, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

That the Federal reserve act, as amended, be further amended by striking out the word "six" in the proviso in the second paragraph of section 13 and inserting in lieu thereof "12," so that the proviso, as amended, shall read: "Provided, That notes, drafts, and bills drawn or issued for agricultural purposes or based on live stock and having a maturity not exceeding 12 months, exclusive of days of grace, may be discounted in an amount to be limited to a percentage of the assets of the Federal reserve bank, to be ascertained and fixed by the Federal Reserve Board."

Amend section 13a, in line 4, page 17, by striking out "9" and inserting "12."

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, if it had not been heralded throughout the country that this was a farmers' relief measure, providing farmers' credit, then we might with some wisdom, some justice, probably, from the standpoint of the commercial bank, object to giving the farmer a credit in excess of that which he enjoys at the present time. Under the present law the securities based upon agricultural products are eligible for rediscount for a period of six months. Now, it is proposed in this measure that the restriction shall be continued except upon the condition that the borrower furnishes, in addition to the security which he has heretofore been required to furnish, a chattel mortgage upon live stock or a warehouse receipt upon nonperishable products.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President—

Mr. TRAMMELL. I decline to be interrupted. I only have five minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida declines to yield.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The Senator can answer in his own time.

It is only proposed that the period shall be extended for three months upon condition of the furnishing of a chattel mortgage or warehouse receipt covering nonperishable products. It is proposed in the bill that he shall be given that three additional months' extension only when he furnishes that security.

As argued by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], anyone who is familiar with the carrying on of farming operations knows that it takes more than six months or nine months to produce the crops; that is, considering the time from the period of preparation for planting to the harvesting of the crops. We have endeavored to provide for a system of banking that accommodates commerce, generally speaking. At first it was on the idea that we could only furnish credit for 90 days. But a certain character of commerce said, "We need more time to meet the conditions surrounding our business," and in consequence Congress amended the law and allowed them six months' credit, making their paper eligible for rediscount with a six months' limit. But when agriculture knocks at the door of Congress and asks for a system which will suit and be applicable to the conditions surrounding agriculture, then we hear the old argument that commercial banking is best suited to commercial facilities and so he shall not be granted any longer than the present six months' limit, with a possible additional three months if he deposits the collateral security to which I have referred.

Now, if the authorizing of credit for a period of 12 months instead of nine months would jeopardize the stability of the banking institutions or would interfere with the farm-loan banks, or with the Federal reserve banks not being maintained upon a safe and sound basis, then it might be suggested logically that Congress should seek some other way in which to provide a system of credit for our farmers. But I have not heard anyone yet present a logical reason that would sustain the contention that if we give a credit for 12 months to our farmers it would in any way impair the safety and the stability of our banking institutions. We provided for the stock to be secured through the farm-loan bank. We provided a system of rediscounting that could amply take care of conditions, and provide the necessary facilities. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, it is to be regretted that the Senator from Florida should attempt to tell the Senate what the provisions of the bill are, with respect to the subject to which he has referred, without having read that provision. It is very certain the Senator from Florida could not have read the provisions in the bill which he has been discussing. He stated repeatedly that we propose to extend the eligibility of agricultural paper from six months to nine months only in case there be furnished warehouse receipts or a chattel mortgage upon live stock. If I mistake not, he repeated that at least three or four times. Let me read the language of the bill:

SEC. 13a. Upon the indorsement of any of its member banks, which shall be deemed a waiver of demand, notice and protest by such bank as to its own indorsement exclusively, any Federal reserve bank may discount notes, drafts, and bills of exchange issued or drawn for an agricultural purpose, or based upon live stock, and have a maturity, at the time of discount, exclusive of days of grace, not exceeding nine months.

There is not one word, Mr. President, with reference to security. There is a provision with reference to security, and what is it? Only that Federal reserve bank notes can not be issued upon any discounted paper extending beyond nine months unless it is secured. It would seem that before Senators discuss the provisions in the bill they would acquaint themselves with what the bill contains. We hear it repeated constantly that the farmer is entitled to this credit, and that there is no reason why he should not be given it. The committee thought it had gone to the limit of safety in making it nine months.

I want to repeat what I said the other day. The whole purpose of short-time paper for discount in the Federal reserve system is to keep the assets liquid and afford a protection to the depositors in the bank. It is just as much for the protection of the farmer who deposits money in a member bank as it is for the protection of the commercial man, merchant or otherwise, who deposits money in a member bank. It is believed, however, that the time can safely be extended to nine months, as the bill does, but there is no requirement, as every Senator can ascertain if he will but read the section, that nine-months paper be secured. The only time security is required is where it is attempted to issue additional currency, Federal reserve notes, upon it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he himself concedes that 12 months' paper is much more dangerous than nine months' paper?

Mr. LENROOT. Three months more, that is all.

Mr. PITTMAN. There was a time, of course, when most banks considered 90-day paper the only liquid paper. Yet they got it to six months, and they now get it to nine months. I remember when it was just as vehemently argued that no longer period than six months constituted a liquid paper as it vehemently argued that nine months would not be liquid paper. As a matter of fact, when we consider the equities of the case, is the danger in increasing it three months as great as is the danger in not allowing the security to mature? It seems to me that the greater danger is in not allowing the security to mature.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I would like to submit to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] the suggestion that the necessity for his amendment, even from his point of view, is more apparent than it is real. If that be true, I submit that it is not necessary at all. There has been a good deal of confusion in discussing the question of maturity and of the time for which the note is originally made out. To say that a member bank or that one of the farm loan banks may rediscount with a Federal reserve bank the notes of farmers having nine months' maturity does not at all suggest that farmers are precluded from making a note for a period of 12 months and having them discount it without any trouble whatsoever at the member bank, and for this reason: In ninety-nine cases out of one hundred, in four out of five years, the member bank in its primary discounts does not at all contemplate calling on its Federal reserve bank for a rediscount of this paper. So, far from it, the individual member bank hopes to retain that paper in its portfolio to the time of maturity, in order that it may reap the entire profit of the transaction and not in any measure share it with the Federal reserve bank. That is not true to only a limited extent but it is almost invariable. The rediscount is only made in time of stress when the primary bank has not sufficient funds to meet the requirements of its community. There is no banker doing business in normal times who does not make his discounts with the idea that he will retain that paper in his own portfolio to the date of maturity in order that he may reap the entire profit and not share it with any correspondent or rediscounting bank.

That being so, the process is this: The farmer's turnover, say, is 12 months; and he makes his note for 12 months. He takes the note to a member bank and has it readily discounted for 12 months, because the idea of the member bank is to retain the note until maturity. After three months shall have elapsed that member bank knows full well that if it should require additional funds with which to respond to the demands upon it, it may take the 12 months' note of the farmer to the Federal reserve bank and have it rediscounted, because it has reached the maturity of nine months.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Virginia a question?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am not a banker, my sole experience along that line having been to borrow and draw to the limit.

Mr. GLASS. My experience has been so, too.

Mr. CARAWAY. But here is the question: Does not the very fact that the rediscount privilege which is given to paper of not exceeding nine months require the banker always to compel the borrower to make the maturity of his note for the same length of time?

For instance, if I go to a commercial bank whose period for loaning is three months and say to the banker, "You know that I can not pay in three months," he will say, "Well, you may renew, but we can not handle paper with a longer date of maturity than three months."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Virginia has expired.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. In my own time I desire to say a word further. The farmer, we will say, wishes to borrow for 12 months. The bank will say, "Make the note for nine months, and you may renew." There is, however, always a feeling of insecurity as to whether the maker of the note will, in fact, be permitted to renew. Does it not always leave the borrower with a sense of uneasiness?

If the bank really contemplates carrying loans for 12 months, what objection could there be to writing into the law that the banker may legally carry and discount 12 months' paper? These are merely practical questions which appeal to me, based upon a very large experience in trying to borrow.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the practical fact is that the commercial bank which wishes to keep its assets liquid is not apt to discount paper of this description at all. Any bank which is willing to discount paper for a period of nine months, in my judgment, would be willing to rediscount it for a period of 12 months, because such paper is essentially a nonliquid loan, and the banker would rediscount it for 12 months, in my judgment, just as readily as he would rediscount it for 9 months.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President—

Mr. SMITH. Why not make it for that period, then?

Mr. GLASS. Just wait a minute.

Mr. CARAWAY. I happen to have the floor, but, of course—

Mr. GLASS. I beg the Senator's pardon; I was trying to answer his question and the Senator from South Carolina propounded another question to me from his chair. I can not answer the two questions at once.

Mr. CARAWAY. Well, if the Senator does not want to answer either—

Mr. GLASS. Yes, I do; I want to answer the Senator's question. I wish to say in answer to it that I think a bank would just as readily rediscount a 12 months' note as it would a 9 months' note, because it would primarily desire to carry the discounted note in its portfolio to the date of maturity; and it would know perfectly well that at the expiration of three months, if the bank should be in stress for further funds, it could take the note to the Federal reserve bank and there rediscount it, because the note then will have reached the maturity of 9 months.

Mr. CARAWAY. The question, then, which I would again ask the Senator is—and I have more respect for the Senator's knowledge of the Federal reserve system than I have for that of anybody else in the Senate.

Mr. GLASS. It is very kind of the Senator from Arkansas to say that.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the bank would not object to 12 months' paper, then what real objection, what substantial objection, is there to giving such paper the rediscount privilege? Is it not true that wherever paper is subject to rediscount it is liquid?

Mr. GLASS. I am not saying that the reserve bank would not object to it. I am saying that the primary bank of discount would not object to it, because that bank expects to carry the paper to maturity. I have not said that the reserve bank would not object to it, because I think the Federal reserve bank would object to it, and there is very much more necessity for the reserve bank—meaning the bank that is simply carrying bank reserves for an emergency—carefully to keep its assets liquid than it is for the primary bank to do so.

Mr. CARAWAY. I think that is true, but if there is any real expectation that banks will carry 12 months' paper, I still believe, based, as I have said before, upon a rather active effort to find banks which were willing to carry paper, that a sense of security comes to the borrower if he may have his paper run for a longer time. There is always a fear, and sometimes a substantial loss. The rate of interest is, we will say, 6 per cent—in my section of the country it is often 10; I have paid that much—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I hope that this amendment will not be adopted. I think the Lenroot bill goes to the limit of safety; in fact, I think it goes too far in extending the time of discounts in the case of the Federal reserve banks. I know the pressure is constant for the rediscount of longer-term paper by the Federal reserve banks; but we must remember that the Federal reserve banks are not only banks of rediscount, but they issue notes as the currency of the country, and there is nothing more dangerous than unreasonable inflation. The Federal reserve notes ought to be secured by the shortest-term paper, by the best security the banks may deposit with the Federal reserve banks. Such assets ought to be the most liquid the reserve banks have.

Some one has asked why is not a 12 months' note just as good as a 6 months' or a 9 months' note? The Senator from Wisconsin answered, and I think very aptly, when he said it is not so good by three months. Nobody would think of taking a farm mortgage running 5 or 10 or 20 years to rediscount with the Federal reserve bank as a basis of issuing temporary currency. I think one thing we ought to do is to keep the Federal reserve system a safe and conservative system for the rediscount of notes on which to base the currency of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH and Mr. HEFLIN called for a division.

On a division the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH subsequently said: Mr. President, I wish to give notice that when the bill shall be reported to the Senate I shall ask for a record vote on my amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator will have to reoffer the amendment.

Mr. SMITH. Very well. I will reoffer it.

Mr. McLEAN. I desire to offer an amendment to the text of the bill on page 17. I send the amendment to the desk and ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 17, line 4, after the word "months," to strike out the colon and insert a comma and the following:

and such notes, drafts, and bills of exchange may be offered as collateral security for the issuance of Federal reserve notes under the provisions of section 16 of the Federal reserve act as amended.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, the bill as it reads in the proviso admits these notes for rediscount, but they are not qualified in this bill as eligible for note issues. Section 16 of the Federal reserve act provides that collateral security offered by the notes described in section 13 shall be eligible as collateral security for notes, but this is section 13a, and unless we put in the amendment I have proposed the notes will not be qualified at all. This is an important amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move, on page 5, at the end of line 12, to strike out the period and insert the words "not exceeding 5½ per cent per annum."

The object of that proposed amendment is to require that the debentures issued under the bill shall be issued at a rate of interest not exceeding 5½ per cent per annum; otherwise there will be no limitation as to the interest rate on the debentures.

In the farm loan act it was provided that farm loan bonds should not bear a higher rate of interest than 5 per cent. We amended that act here in order to meet the situation regarding the joint-stock land-bank bonds and made the rate 5½ per cent, but that provision expires in July, 1923, at which time we go back to the provision of the original law that farm loan bonds shall not bear a higher rate of interest than 5 per cent.

There is another provision in the farm loan act that the rate of interest charged by the bank to the borrower shall not exceed 6 per cent. The debentures under this bill are to be issued on the same basis as the farm loan bonds. They have back of them the capital put up by the Government; they have back of them the provision that they are tax-free, and I see no reason why we should not put into the law a limitation as to the rate of interest they shall bear. Unless we do, then the farmer is not going to get any real benefit out of this measure. If he will have to pay the same rate of interest when these debentures are put in circulation as he has to pay to-day if he goes to a commercial bank, namely, the State rate, he will not receive any advantage.

This measure intended to afford to him credits on a basis and upon terms that he can meet and that his industry can bear, and 5½ per cent is as high a rate as these debentures ought to be permitted to bear.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President—

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORBECK. I quite agree; but I was wondering if the better way to get at that would not be to change the law so as to compel some of these men to lend their money at a low rate of interest. How otherwise will it be effective?

Mr. FLETCHER. We can limit the rate of interest that the debentures shall bear.

Mr. NORBECK. Yes; but if the money goes into other channels, then where is the farmer?

Mr. FLETCHER. He has to take his chances, of course; but if there is no limitation on the debentures, then the debentures can be issued at 7 or 8 per cent, or, in some States, 10 per cent. We have, to begin with, limited the rate on the debentures, and then there is another provision in the bill which provides that the rate of interest shall not exceed 1½ per cent of the discount rate of the Federal land bank; but that applies only to interest, and there may be other charges, commissions, and all that sort of thing, that will run the amount which the farmer must pay or the borrower must pay far in excess of any 1½ per cent above the rediscount rate of the Federal reserve bank. There ought to be in this law—just as we put in the farm loan act—a limitation as to the amount of interest that the securities issued in this way shall bear, and I think 5½ per cent is enough. That is all that we have allowed the joint-stock land banks or the farm-loan banks to charge, even in the emergency that existed last year; and we have come back, as to both banks, to 5 per cent as the basis. I think we could safely provide that these debentures shall not bear a rate of interest exceeding 5 per cent, or, to meet all possible objection to it to my mind, I have proposed that it shall be not exceeding 5½ per cent. I think unless we do that we will make a very serious mistake, and not provide the facilities to meet the needs of agriculture that we are intending to provide.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, no Federal land bank and no Farm Loan Board would issue any debentures at any higher rate than is necessary to sell the debentures. That goes without saying, as a matter of course. The only effect of the Senator's amendment, it seems to me, would be that under given conditions debentures might be absolutely unsalable. There might be a demand in certain territory for the rediscounting of this paper for the benefit of agriculture, but because of the Senator's amendment it would be impossible to assist agriculture and discount agricultural paper. I can not see any possible good to come out of the amendment. I do see possibility of great harm.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator name some other rate? I have named $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Perhaps the Senator would suggest 6 per cent. I am willing to make it that.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, I am certain that it never would exceed 6 per cent, because they could not employ the money at a rate higher than 6 per cent and do the business; but I do not know why the Senator is not willing to trust that to the Farm Loan Board and the Federal land bank. It must be approved, and they will get money just as low as they can.

The Senator, of course, understands that these securities are not going to be as attractive, generally speaking, as farm-loan bonds. I do not expect them to sell at the same low rate of interest that farm-loan bonds will sell for. I think farm-loan bonds will sell at a less and less rate, because they are, if the system is properly managed, security of the very best class for that kind of investment capital that seeks long-term investments.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is the reason why I made it $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The farm-loan bond rate is not to exceed 5 per cent.

Mr. LENROOT. But the Senator makes only one-half of 1 per cent distinction between that kind of an investment and this kind of a debenture. I am very sure that the interest of the farmer will not be subserved by this limitation, and I am very sure that no debentures will be issued under this bill at any higher rate of interest than is necessary to sell the debentures at par.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am in sympathy with this amendment. This issuance of tax-free securities is enough of an evil as it is; and in my opinion it certainly would be a serious mistake to give to these banks power to issue debentures at an unlimited rate of interest and have them enjoy the tax-free privilege.

It must be remembered that these debentures probably will be used by the banks as a secondary reserve, and there might be a disposition upon the part of the banks that would probably buy them to use their influence to have them issued at a high rate of interest. I believe, however, that inasmuch as at the present time the Federal farm loan bonds are selling on a basis of $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, it is safe to say that under almost any conceivable circumstances these debentures, which will be in strong demand by banks, ought to find a ready market at not over $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. It certainly would be a great mistake to allow these debentures to be issued at any rate of interest, without any limit, and enjoy the tax-free privilege.

Here are United States bonds that sell at par on a $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent basis, even subject to taxation, at the present time. We are authorizing the issue of these debentures for a certain purpose, and only proposing to limit the rate of interest to $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. I can readily see that they will be availed of by banks, and they will find a ready market in the banking field, and many banks will desire to buy these debentures and keep them as a secondary reserve. They will always be marketable; but the Congress which is authorizing their issue on a tax-free basis ought to say what the point is at which the interest shall be limited. I believe in the end it is going to operate to give cheaper interest to the farmers. I believe it will require the banks to do their business on a closer basis.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator is aware that this bill has been bitterly attacked, and its chief point of attack has been that the debentures would not be salable at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the testimony before the committee was all to the other effect—

Mr. LENROOT. I think so.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That these three-year debentures would find a ready market, particularly among banks. These farm-loan bonds find no such market. We have in this country 15,000 or 18,000 State banks and something like 8,000 national banks. They are always ready to buy Government certificates; and, given the opportunity to buy these tax-free debentures which they can hold as a secondary reserve, I have not any doubt in the world that those thousands of institutions will buy them; but it seems to me that Congress, which is authorizing these tax-free debentures, owes it to the country to fix some limit above which the interest rate shall not be allowed to go. The fact that they are tax free makes them more valuable than the ordinary 7 or 8 per cent investment, and that ought to be sufficient.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nebraska—I am not just clear in my recollection of the incident—but, as illustrating the contention that these things are usually governed by the state of the money market, is it not a fact that either by administrative act or by an amendment to the Federal farm land bank act the Farm Loan Board not so very long ago was either authorized to issue or did issue farm-loan bonds at as high a rate of interest as 6 per cent because they could not sell them otherwise?

Mr. FLETCHER. Never. They could not do it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent was the limit; but there is a difference, Mr. President.

Mr. FLETCHER. We authorized the joint-stock banks to issue bonds at $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

Mr. GLASS. Did they not issue a series of bonds at the limit?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the power was never used.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; they did—5 per cent. That was the limit.

Mr. GLASS. I said I could not clearly recall.

Mr. FLETCHER. The limit was 5 per cent originally.

Mr. GLASS. But my recollection was that we added one-half of 1 per cent.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We made the limit $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, but they never exercised the power.

Mr. GLASS. Because the investment market was such that they could not sell them below that.

Mr. FLETCHER. That expires next July.

Mr. GLASS. Just as was suggested awhile ago by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], is it not conceivable that the investment market at times may be such that these debentures can not be sold at the limit now proposed to be put upon them? If that should happen to be the case there would be a stoppage altogether of the activities of the system. It could not get anywhere. Although farmers might be in distress and in emergent circumstances, they could not borrow anything at all if that should happen.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it is possible to imagine all sorts of possibilities; but the fact is that with these 15,000 State banks and 8,000 national banks desiring securities of exactly this sort it is almost inconceivable that there would be a great impairment of the market at any time. I am very sure that a large proportion of these institutions will be in the market to buy these securities. It may be that in the future we shall find it necessary to raise the limit. While we ought to place a limit somewhere, if the time comes when it is necessary to raise the limit we can do it as we did on a former occasion with the Federal farm-loan bonds; but in that case the emergency disappeared before they exercised the power.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I move to strike out " $5\frac{1}{2}$ " and insert "6."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, that appears to be about the best rate we can get, and I am not disposed to contest it.

Mr. LENROOT. All right.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am willing to accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida, as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment that I failed to offer some time ago. It is with reference to the question raised by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] in his minority report, wherein he took the view that the $5,000,000 could not be used except as a guaranty fund.

While I am very clear that the language is not susceptible of that construction I am perfectly willing to remove any question concerning it; so I move, in line 7, page 7, to strike out the words "and losses, if any," so that the language shall read:

Shall be applied solely to meet obligations incurred in the operation of that department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I wish to offer at the proper place. The Senate has just adopted an amendment providing that the interest rate on these debentures shall not be more than 6 per cent, and I desire to offer my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to add, at the end of the amendments heretofore agreed to, the following:

SEC. —. That paragraph (b) of section 11 of the Federal reserve act be amended by adding, after the words "Federal Reserve Board," the following: "but in no case shall such rates of interest be in excess of 6 per cent per annum."

And wherever in said act Federal reserve banks are authorized, permitted, or required to rediscount the discounted paper of other Federal reserve banks, the rate of interest in no case shall be in excess of 6 per cent per annum.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word. It does seem to me that the Senate should take into consideration the interest of thousands and hundreds of thousands and millions of people who must borrow money. These member banks throughout the country, who have to go to the Federal reserve regional banks, 12 in number, certainly will be happy if they can get money to loan to their customers at not exceeding 6 per cent. They may be able to get it for $3\frac{1}{2}$, 4, $4\frac{1}{2}$, 5, or $5\frac{1}{2}$.

Certainly there ought to be a limitation on the interest rate these regional banks can charge these 10,000 member banks. When we limit this rate of interest to 6 per cent, we enable the member banks to get the money at a low rate of interest and the ultimate borrower to get it at a lower rate of interest because of the low rate of interest charged to the regional banks or to the member banks.

I hope no Senator will oppose this amendment. The member banks all over the country would like to have the amendment adopted. It would be beneficial to all business in the United States, and surely Senators do not want to leave this proposition with no restriction on it. It just leaves it to the judgment of the Federal Reserve Board as to what it shall do under the bill as drawn. That should not be. We are putting limitations on this farm-banking proposition. Why not put a limitation on the commercial-banking proposition? I ask for a vote on my proposition.

On a division the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 3, line 8, after the words "live stock," add the words:

or upon notes secured by mortgages upon real estate used for and in connection with the producing of, or the producing of and marketing of, agricultural products.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I propose this amendment because I feel it to be very necessary and essential that a provision of this character be adopted if we are to provide any character of credit whatever to an agricultural association composed of producers of nonperishables.

The provisions of the bill I propose to amend restrict the credit to organizations or associations of farmers engaged entirely in the production of staple agricultural products. In consequence, unless the feature of the bill which I propose to amend is revised, associations of growers of perishable products, regardless of the stability of their security, will be unable to obtain loans from the Federal land banks. I see no reason why they should be discriminated against. I see no reason why credit facilities should not be afforded to associations or organizations composed of fruit growers, or those engaged in truck farming, just the same as you give credit to those engaged in staple farming.

I have proposed a class of security that will be ample, that will protect loans made through this character of association, and I am unable to see why it should be rejected, unless we want to adopt the policy of discriminating against those engaged in the production of the citrus fruits in my State, in California, and other States where the citrus-fruit industry constitutes a considerable portion of the agricultural industry, and also those engaged in the production of perishables, such as apples, peaches, grapes, potatoes in Maine, and products of other States where the agricultural classes are largely engaged in the production of perishables. I propose this in the hope that the discrimination will be removed.

Mr. GLASS. What is to become of the loan if the products perish?

Mr. TRAMMELL. If the loan is on real estate, the real estate still remains there. I ask the Senator, what becomes of the loan if the cattle on which credit is provided lie down and die? What becomes of the loan in that case? The Senator from Virginia has been sustaining the bill, and it is provided in the bill that a man may borrow on his cattle, but that he can not borrow on his real estate unless he is engaged in the production of staple agricultural products.

Mr. GLASS. He can borrow money on his real estate all the way from 3 to 32 years.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The Senator wants to confine him to the old farm loan system of long-term loans. That is what I am complaining about.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have but a minute or two, and I do not know but that my time is up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida declines to yield.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have proposed a class of security which I think is staple and sound, and it is a class of security that is good. I think those engaged in the production of perishable products of this country, which are essential and constitute a considerable portion of agriculture, should be given credit through their associations.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, perhaps the Senator will correct me if I make an error. Did I understand the Senator to say that under his amendment it is proposed to extend credit to the associations themselves as such?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly, Mr. President.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The associations themselves?

Mr. TRAMMELL. The bill already provides that credit shall be extended to the associations and the cooperations, making eligible a certain character of securities. I say that we should add to that character of securities one more security. All I ask is that there be added the real estate which is used in the production of the product. I ask that that be made eligible security.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The production or the marketing?

Mr. TRAMMELL. The production and the marketing. It simply makes eligible another class of security.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask to have the amendment reported again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 3, line 8, after the words "live stock," add the words:

Or upon notes secured by mortgage upon real estate used for and in connection with the production of, or the production of and marketing of, agricultural products.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, just a word. Of course the distinction must be apparent to every Senator. In case a mortgage on real estate is taken, it will take anywhere from one to two years to realize upon it, while a chattel mortgage can be realized upon almost immediately in case of default.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 15, after line 2, insert a new section to read as follows:

SEC. 9. Paragraph (b) of section 11 of the Federal reserve act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

(b) To permit, or, on the affirmative vote of at least five members of the Federal Reserve Board to require, Federal reserve banks to rediscount the discounted paper of other Federal reserve banks at rates of interest to be fixed by the Federal Reserve Board, and each rate so fixed shall be the same for every Federal reserve bank.

On page 15, line 3, strike out the figure "9" and insert "10."

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, this amendment would not change the present law except by adding to it the words "and each rate so fixed shall be the same for every Federal reserve bank." The Federal reserve bank discount rate in New York is lower than in the live-stock and farming sections where they have banks, and I want to make it uniform.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to be inserted on page 3, line 8, after the word "live stock."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 3, line 8, after the words "live stock," and before the colon, insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That no such loan or advance shall exceed 75 per cent of the market value of the products covered by said warehouse receipts or shipping documents, or of the live stock covered by said mortgages, and under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Federal Farm Loan Board.

Mr. LENROOT. I shall be very glad to accept that amendment, so far as it is in my power to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 8, after line 8, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

For the purpose of exercising the powers conferred by this title, a Federal land bank shall establish a farm credit branch or agency in each State (except that in which the Federal land bank is located) within its Federal land bank district, if, in the opinion of the Federal Farm Loan Board, agriculture or the raising of live stock is a principal industry of such State. Farm credit branches or agencies shall be located at such place within the State as the Federal Farm Loan Board may determine.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he is not willing to accept this particular amendment? The amendment was discussed by the various committees which have investigated this subject, and I think it was pretty generally agreed by those committees that branches or agencies should be established in agricultural or live-stock States where the parent organization did not exist.

Mr. LENROOT. I have no objection to giving the Farm Loan Board permission to establish these agencies, if they see fit to do so, as they have the power to establish branch banks under the present law, but to compel it would simply add possibly an overhead which would mean an interest charge that would have to be paid by the farmer, and it would not be a benefit, but an injury to him.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask leave to modify my amendment by striking out "shall" and inserting "may," so as to make it permissive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to modify his amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that it be reread as modified.

The reading clerk read as follows:

For the purpose of exercising the powers conferred by this title, a Federal land bank may establish a farm-credit branch or agency in each State (except that in which the Federal land bank is located) within its Federal land bank district, if, in the opinion of the Federal Farm Loan Board, agriculture or the raising of live stock is a principal industry of such State. Farm-credit branches or agencies shall be located at such place within the State as the Federal Farm Loan Board may determine.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator should use the word "any" instead of "each."

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; that may be better.

Mr. LENROOT. I think it would meet with the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board if it read "that the Federal land banks may, with the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board," and so forth.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would like to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will restate the amendment as now modified.

Mr. HARRISON. It should be modified also by striking out the word "each" and inserting the word "any," as suggested by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate conclude its business to-day it take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. LENROOT. Will not the Senator, in view of the fact that this is made discretionary and gives full discretion under certain circumstances, strike out the words "if, in the opinion of the Federal Farm Loan Board, agriculture or the raising of live stock"?

Mr. HARRISON. There is no need of that language now.

Mr. LENROOT. So that it would read—

For the purpose of exercising the powers conferred by this title, a Federal land bank may, with the approval of the Farm Loan Board, establish a farm-credit branch or agency in any State (except that in which a Federal land bank is located)—

And so forth.

Mr. HARRISON. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to offer another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 3, strike out lines 2 to 7, inclusive, and line 8, to and including the word "stock," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Direct to any individual engaged in producing, or producing and marketing, staple agricultural products or live stock, or direct to any cooperative association organized under the laws of any State or of the United States and composed of such individuals, if the notes or other such obligations representing such loans or advances are secured by warehouse receipts, and/or shipping documents covering such products, and/or mortgages on live stock, or if such notes and obligations are otherwise adequately secured and the proceeds thereof are to be used in the first instance for an agricultural purpose or for the raising, breeding, fattening, or marketing of live stock.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I shall not discuss the amendment at length, because I have already discussed it briefly. It merely provides for a direct loan by the credit establishment to individuals. Senators know whether or not they favor the proposition. We have had it here before. We had it here when we were amending the War Finance Corporation act and when that measure was being discussed. We have had it here at other times. Senators know whether they want to loan direct to the individual, to cut out the overhead and interest charges of the banks, or whether they want to go the roundabout way and have him discount his paper in the banks. I am ready for a vote.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. One of the provisions of the measure is that the capital of the associations shall be raised by subscription of the banks. What inducement would the banks have to subscribe to the capital stock of the association if it was going to come into competition then with the banks?

Mr. HARRISON. Part of the money comes out of the Treasury of the United States. We provide through the system to loan money directly to associations which are organized, and I propose by the amendment not to compel the farmers to organize into associations, but when they need the money and have the security, that they can go and borrow it.

Mr. LENROOT. Where does the Senator think the money would come from to make the loans direct to farmers?

Mr. HARRISON. We provide $5,000,000 for each of the 12 Federal districts.

Mr. LENROOT. I am sure that would be all the money that would be forthcoming if the amendment were adopted.

Mr. HARRISON. We provide further for the selling of debentures.

Mr. LENROOT. The debentures would not be salable, as the Senator must readily see, if the amendment were adopted.

Mr. HARRISON. How are we to get the money to loan to the associations? We have to get it to loan to them.

Mr. LENROOT. Because there is actual security provided there.

Mr. HARRISON. But I provide for actual securities in my amendment or the associations will not loan the money. It has to be warehouse receipts or other adequate security. Of course, it may be a note if it is perfectly good. I am just trying to take care of the farmer in the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. On a division the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I desire to offer in a modified form the amendment providing for a cooperative bank, as it was offered several days ago. There is one change I desire to make. On page 1, line 7, I have changed the figures "$15,000" to "$25,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 18, after line 22, add the following additional sections to the bill:

"SEC. 12. That section 5133 of the Revised Statutes relating to the formation of national banking associations be amended by adding thereto the following: 'Provided, That associations for carrying on the business of banking under this title may be formed by any number of natural persons, not less in any case than 200, with a capital-stock subscription of not less than $25,000, to be known as cooperative national banks.'

"SEC. 13. That section 5134 of the Revised Statutes be amended by adding thereto the following:

"Persons uniting to form a cooperative national bank shall under their hands make an organization certificate which shall specifically state:

"First. Each and all of the five statements required for other banking associations under the section.

"Second. That each share shall be $10 par value and each shareholder shall have one vote and no more, and the capital stock shall not vote and proxies shall not be allowed.

"Third. That the capital stock shall receive dividends not exceeding the legal interest rate in the State where the bank is located, and in no event exceeding 8 per cent per annum, and subject to the provision that the net earnings of the bank are first sufficient to pay such dividends.

"Fourth. That one-fourth of all other net earnings shall be passed to surplus until the surplus is equal to the capital stock. That the other three-fourths and thereafter all other net earnings shall be distributed to the depositors and to the borrowers from the bank who are stockholders in proportion to the amount of interest received by the depositors and the amount of interest paid by the borrowers.

"Fifth. Upon liquidation, after payment of liabilities, the capital stock shall be redeemed at par, with dividends as before provided, and all other assets of the bank shall be distributed to the depositors and borrowers then stockholders of the bank in the same proportions provided for the distribution of dividends."

"SEC. 14. That the amount which a cooperative national bank may loan to one person or corporation shall not exceed 5 per cent of its deposits, and loans for productive purposes shall have preference, and no loans shall be made for purely speculative purposes."

"SEC. 15. That all provisions of the Federal reserve act and of the national banking act not inconsistent herewith shall be applicable to the cooperative national banks; and it is further provided that after 1,000 cooperative national banks have been organized they may establish a cooperative reserve of their own and become members thereof by subscribing for capital stock therein equal to 5 per cent of their own capital stock. Such cooperative reserve bank may also admit as members cooperative State banks organized substantially upon the same plan as cooperative national banks, and the plan of such cooperative reserve bank shall be substantially the same as cooperative national banks, except that its stockholders and members shall be only cooperative banks as herein provided."

"SEC. 16. That a tax of one-tenth of 1 per cent per annum shall be levied upon the total deposits of each cooperative national bank and paid into the Treasury of the United States, to be known as the deposit guaranty fund, and the same shall be used by the Treasurer of the United States to immediately pay depositors in the cooperative national banks the full amount of their deposits upon the liquidation of any such bank. That such tax shall cease when its accumulations amount to 3 per cent of the total deposits of all cooperative national banks and shall be automatically relieved to maintain said 3 per cent. That after a cooperative reserve is organized, as herein provided, the said tax for guaranty of depositors shall be paid to said cooperative reserve bank instead of the Treasurer of the United States, and shall be disposed of by it as herein provided."

"SEC. 17. That cooperative national banks shall use the words 'co-operative' and 'national' in their title, and no other banks shall use the word 'cooperative' except State banks which are organized upon substantially the principles as herein provided."

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I think I have said about all I desire to say upon the question of the amendment. I made the change to meet the objection of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] so that the cooperative bank would have a minimum of $25,000 capital the same as other banks. Under the amendment we would not go into the Treasury of the United States for any money. It is not a soviet provision like the bill of the Senator from Wisconsin. It is a farmers' amendment. The capital comes from the farmers or the laboring people themselves. The management is their own. It is permissive. It gives them permission to organize a cooperative credit bank, and on that basis I think no Senator should object to giving them that right.

Mr. LENROOT. On agreeing to the amendment I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not see why the cooperative idea can not be utilized in the banking business. I do not claim to be an expert. I know there are banks that are organized, based on a cooperative idea, that have been successful, banks without any capital stock, even, that have been very successful. The amendment makes nothing compulsory. The amendment is only permissive. If it is not workable, it can not hurt anybody. If upon attempting to work it it is found that there is something wrong with it, those who are interested in it will be asking for the perfection of it so that it will be workable.

The States have provided, several of them at least, for cooperative banks. Why is it that the Federal Government, as long as it does provide for commercial banks, should not likewise provide for cooperative banks? Instead of condemning it without a hearing, if there is something wrong with the amendment, why not perfect it in good faith? If it is not workable and any reason can be pointed out why it is not workable, it is subject to amendment right now.

It will not do any good, Mr. President, to say that those who offer a thing of this kind are Bolsheviks or that they believe in Soviet Russia or anything of that kind. That is not argument. In the end that will not accomplish any good. Either there is something in it or there is not, and we ought to pass on it, it seems to me, on the theory that if there is such a thing as the organization of a cooperative bank, those who want to go into the banking business on the cooperative idea ought to have a law prepared so they can do it. Certainly it can not do any injury. If there is anything in cooperation—and I believe there is more in that one thing perhaps than in any other thing that will help the farmer or help any other class of people—why not provide by law that the cooperative bank should be organized the same as a cooperative elevator or cooperative anything else, and permit it to be done.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, of course, there is a great deal more to the bill than the mere matter of cooperative banking. The Senator from Nebraska is a reasonable man. I think he is very reasonable. Let me ask him in all frankness if he thinks that the Senate, without any investigation, without any word from the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, having supervision of all of our national banking affairs, without one word of counsel, or advice, or information from the Treasury Department, is capable of setting up an entirely new and unique banking system?

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator desires me to answer, and he is asking his question in good faith, I wish to answer him in that way.

Mr. GLASS. I am.

Mr. NORRIS. I concede the things the Senator from Virginia has pointed out in his questions to me, and that we, perhaps, ought to have—at least I should like to have—the advice of the Comptroller of the Currency, not that I would necessarily follow it, but I should like to have all sides heard. I should like to have the Committee on Banking and Currency consider the question. But, Mr. President, the question of credit for the farmer has been before the committee for a long time. It may be they have given no consideration to this proposition. I do not know any other way now when I am confronted here with the question of voting on it than to say I believe in the cooperative idea for banking. I may be wrong; I am open to conviction; but I am confronted with the necessity here of either voting for it or against it. It seems to me those who are opposing it, if they think that there can be made out of it a system of cooperative banking, ought to do it in good faith.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I do not understand that this measure has ever been before the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know that it has, if that is a serious objection to bringing it up, but I know of no other way to meet it than as it comes before us.

Mr. GLASS. We have no information whatsoever about it except what has been said here on the floor of the Senate. I very quickly and frankly confess that I know nothing in the world about it. I could not vote for it. I have no information on the subject at all. It apparently proposes to set up a rival Federal reserve banking system to the one already in existence. There are many things about it which I should like to know, as to which I should like to inquire. It is a new thing to me. For six years, I believe, I was chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House of Representatives. As I recall, every bill which proposed any serious alteration in the existing law was then immediately referred by me either to the Comptroller of the Currency or to the Secretary of the Treasury to give us some light on the subject, to give us some information, to give us some assistance, in order to enable us to reach a conclusion; but here it is proposed to adopt an absolutely unique system, about which I know nothing on earth. If any other member of the committee does, he has an advantage of me.

So far as cooperative banking is concerned, any 10 men in the United States may now cooperate, raise $25,000, and organize a national bank, or organize a thousand national banks if they are able to raise the capital with which to do it. There is nothing in the law against that.

I believe in cooperation among farmers; I have encouraged it all I could in my State; but I submit to the Senator from Nebraska, who is a sensible man, that we can not here upon the floor of the Senate undertake to set up, without inquiry or investigation, an absolutely unique banking system.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska knows very well that no Senator on this floor has ever suggested in any way that the cooperative banking principle or the pending amendment was bolshevistic in any respect. On the contrary, if the Senator from Nebraska was upon the floor at the time, he knew that the Senator from Wisconsin expressed his sympathy with the general idea of cooperative banking. He not only expressed it but it is found in the pending bill and is recognized in the bill introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin and reported by the committee.

I wish to know of the Senator from Nebraska if he has studied the pending amendment; and if he is familiar with its provisions and its effect? If he would undertake to tell the Senate just what its provisions mean, I will be glad to yield to him in order to let him answer.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, what does the Senator from Wisconsin desire me to answer? If he will propound his question, if I can I will answer it, and if I can not I will say so.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to know if the Senator from Nebraska is satisfied that this is a practicable, workable proposition with reference to national cooperative banking?

Mr. NORRIS. I will answer that.

Mr. LENROOT. I should be very glad if the Senator would do so. Then, while he is answering that, I shall be very glad to have him give his opinion—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that he believes the Senator from Nebraska has once spoken on the pending amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. I have not spoken heretofore on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska would have to answer in the time of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I was about to ask him, if he had the opportunity—and if he has not, I would be glad to ask unanimous consent that he have the opportunity for five minutes more—to tell the Senate his opinion as to whether this amendment proposes to set up an entirely new Federal reserve system or whether it proposes to set up an additional Federal reserve system. If the Senator has examined that feature of the amendment, I am sure that he has given consideration to the subject; but it seems to me that it is impossible to tell just what it does provide. In an important matter of this kind, is it possible that the Senator from Nebraska would ask the Senate to vote affirmatively for a provision that has never had the consideration of any committee or any considerable number of Members of the Senate?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am very deeply interested in the suggestion of permitting the organization of cooperative banks, but I should like to be more fully advised about it.

The bill to which this amendment is offered is one for the purpose of extending credit to farmers, but I do not find anything in the amendment before us that may be characterized as cooperative in any sense whatever. In the second place, I do not see that it has any reference whatever to extending credit to farmers, but any persons voluntarily may associate themselves for the purpose of organizing a bank under the provisions of the amendment. There do not seem to be any more cooperative features about it than about the existing bank law. Persons may associate themselves together without any regard to what their vocation may be and organize a bank of this character. In fact, Mr. President, I do not see—and I trust the Senator from Iowa will explain—that this amendment makes a bit of difference between the banks contemplated by it and the existing national banks except that the capital stock, as I understand from the original print of the amendment, may be $15,000 as a minimum, with a par value of $10, and that the voting power is limited, not in accordance with the shares of stock but each member having one vote. Otherwise it is provided that all laws applicable to existing national banks shall apply to the proposed banks. So there is another system of banks to be organized exactly the same as the existing national banks, except that the capital stock need not be greater than $15,000, the par shall be $10, and the voting power shall be one vote for each member. I do not understand that that is a cooperative bank at all.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am through.

Mr. KELLOGG. I merely want to ask the Senator if he has considered the provision of the amendment which sets up a separate reserve system?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have examined that, and I think it needs some elucidation and more clarification. It provides;

SEC. 15. That all provisions of the Federal reserve act and of the national banking act not inconsistent herewith shall be applicable to the cooperative national banks; and it is further provided that after 1,000 cooperative national banks have been organized they may establish a cooperative reserve of their own and become members thereof by subscribing for capital stock therein equal to 5 per cent of their own capital stock.

That part of it, it seems to me, would be entirely inoperative because of the lack of the necessary provisions.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator from Iowa will pardon me, I do not address myself to that particularly; but the original conception has not any reference whatever to the extension of credit to the farmers; and, in the second place, it has no cooperative features whatever.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator—

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will observe that the Senator from Iowa has once spoken on the amendment.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, there are just three basic principles of cooperation, whether in the case of a bank or any other enterprise. The first is one man, one vote; the second is the earnings of capital are fixed the same as the wages of labor; and the third is that all profits over and above expenses and the earnings of capital are distributed to the depositors and the borrowers in proportion to the interest received by the depositors and the interest paid by the borrowers.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. McCORMICK. I have no desire to interrupt the Senator further than to ask if the rule provided by the unanimous-consent agreement is being generally enforced?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair's understanding is that the Senator from Iowa has spoken once upon this amendment. Is the Chair correct as to that?

Mr. BROOKHART. I did not speak; I announced to the Chair I would not; I merely submitted the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is in order, then, and may proceed for five minutes.

Mr. BROOKHART. The three principles I have stated are all there is in cooperation. It is that simple. All over the world the great cooperative enterprises, which are now the biggest business in the world, are all conducted on those three simple little principles.

Is the plan designed for the farmers? Well, the farmer and the laboring man are the ones that have organized such banks all over the world, and I do not know of anybody else that has ever organized one. Under the proposed amendment it is open to anyone to organize one.

The provisions of the national bank act are made applicable for safety purposes so that this bank will be supervised just the same as any national bank; it will not be a wildcat bank. It is true many cooperative banks are organized without any stock at all, but under the amendment provision is made for stock with a minimum of $25,000, the same, I believe, as in the case of national banks. When stock is issued by a cooperative corporation, the only difference between it and others is that the earnings of that stock are limited; wages are fixed for capital the same as the wages are fixed for labor. That is what the amendment proposes. If the Senator from Montana knows of any single cooperative principle that has been omitted from the amendment, I will be glad to put it in. It embraces all the principles of cooperation that I know, and I have studied cooperation for many years.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. HARRELD. I do not ask the Senator to yield; I want to speak in my own time.

Mr. NORRIS rose.

Mr. BROOKHART. Does the Senator from Nebraska desire to ask a question?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I was going to make a motion when the Senator concludes.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I desire to say a word further as to the reserve feature. Under the amendment the reserve is cooperative, just like the other features of the proposed system. All cooperative credit systems everywhere in the world have the same kind of reserve. They simply organize the overhead which they own by their stock subscriptions; but the earnings of the stock are limited, and the surplus earnings go back to the member banks. It makes the simplest and most effective control in the world in the hands of these men.

Some have objected because of the borrowers' share in the control of the banks; but in these banks, made up of little depositors, the depositors are always more numerous than the borrowers. Furthermore, if there were not thousands of such institutions in successful operation all over the world, there might be some doubt as to the proposition; but everywhere such banks have been organized they have worked out successfully, and the borrowers and depositors get along together as cooperators and not as profiteers.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so agreed.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to discuss the general field of cooperative business; it has proven a success in certain lines, but I am not yet ready to say that I am in favor of it in the banking field or opposed to it. I wish to address myself particularly to section 16 of the proposed amendment, which provides for guaranteeing bank deposits.

Bear in mind, first, that one of the chief features of the cooperative system of banking proposed by the Senator from Iowa is that the banks are not allowed to make above a certain percentage of profit, in this case limited, I believe, to 8 per cent.

All business ventures, whether in the banking line or otherwise, are dangerous undertakings in a way. I believe statistics show that 95 per cent of all business ventures fail, even where there are no limitations on the amount that can be earned by them, but if we limit the amount that can be earned by a business concern, we very materially increase that percentage, in my judgment, and there are more possibilities of failure for a business whose earnings are limited. For that reason it is very important to inquire into section 16, which provides for a guaranty.

Section 16 provides that a tax of one-tenth of 1 per cent shall be levied upon the total deposits, and so forth, for the purpose of creating a guaranty fund. Unfortunately in the State which I represent we have had some sorrow growing out of a bank-guaranty fund. The law to which I refer provided that a certain tax should be levied upon State banks to produce a fund to guarantee deposits. At the present time there is a deficit of $8,000,000 in that fund, and in the case of the last 27 banks that have failed the depositors have not received the protection which the law of the State guaranteed them under this bank-guaranty system, and the depositors are now insisting that the State of Oklahoma itself is morally bound to pay that $8,000,000 into the Treasury to meet the claims of the various depositors in these 27 failed banks.

If we were to adopt this amendment to this banking law, limited as it is to 8 per cent of profits, and if this guaranty fund were to fail in the years to come, I wonder if a cry would come up that the United States Government is morally bound to meet the deposits guaranteed by this fund. I have reasonable ground to believe that that cry would come to Washington under the terms of this bill. For that reason, it seems to me that it is very necessary that the most careful consideration should be given to a proposal of this sort; that it ought not to be sprung as an amendment to a bill as this is sprung on the floor of the Senate; that it ought to be introduced in the form of a bill, at least, and go to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and be given the consideration that ought to be accorded to a proposition as important as this is.

For that reason, I shall oppose the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has spoken once upon this amendment. He has the privilege of speaking upon the bill for five minutes.

Mr. NORRIS. No, Mr. President; I am aware that I have spoken once on this amendment, but I did not take the floor for the purpose of speaking on this amendment. I desire to offer an amendment.

I move, Mr. President, to amend the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART], on page 2, line 17, after the word "depositors," by striking out the following words, being part of lines 17 and 18: "and to the borrowers." If that amendment can be stated from the desk, I will ask for recognition to speak on that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The READING CLERK. In page 2, lines 17 and 18, it is proposed to strike out the words "and to the borrowers."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have a great deal of sympathy with some of the things that have been said, particularly by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I think there is a good deal of wisdom in what he said; but, Mr. President, we are confronted here with a proposition that, in my judgment, is an effort in good faith to establish a cooperative bank.

I do not agree with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] when he says there is not anything in this proposal of a cooperative nature. It has the very fundamental principles, it seems to me, of a cooperative institution. If I had my way about it, and were drafting the bill along cooperative lines, I would try to eliminate the capital stock entirely, and provide a different system by which the banks could start. The profits of this institution, after they set aside a surplus fund and a guaranty fund, are divided among the depositors and the borrowers. In my judgment, it would be strengthened very much if the profits were divided only among the depositors. I think the bank, instead of having the provision for incorporation, would be more strictly a cooperative institution if the depositors themselves selected the president and the cashier or other officers, whatever they choose to call them, to manage the business; and certainly when depositors have a direct interest in the profits of an institution they are not going to set up a wild-cat institution. It seems to me that is a safety provision; and a fundamental principle of a cooperative institution, as everybody knows who has studied the cooperative organizations over the world, is the slogan: "One man, one vote."

We had before us some time ago Sir Horace Plunkett, who is one of the fathers of cooperation in the world. He was the originator and had more to do with cooperative societies in Ireland than any other living man, and they have made a great success of it. He confined his work, it is true, to some particular lines. He told us that he made 50 speeches in an attempt to organize cooperative creameries in Ireland before he had a single response and found anybody who would go in with him to organize a cooperative creamery. The cooperative bank will give to those who do the business of the bank the profits that there may be in the bank. I do not myself see why cooperative banks should not be as successful as cooperative creameries.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD] is objecting, apparently, to the guaranty provision here. If the Senator from Oklahoma thinks that is detrimental to the amendment, instead of condemning the whole thing he ought to make a motion to amend it by striking that out. I do not think that is detrimental. Personally, I believe that is a good provision. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] objects and asks me whether I am in favor, as this bill to a certain extent does, of setting up a separate institution here. I have never talked with the Senator from Iowa, but I presume the reason why he has done that is because if these institutions were admitted to the Federal reserve system as it stands now they would say, "We do not want anything to do with these fellows"; so he has provided that they shall stand on their own bottom; they shall go up or down according to their own business.

We have two systems now. We have, I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin, the State banks—and a great many more of them than national banks. When we set up the Federal reserve system as a Federal proposition, did anybody say, "Why, you are setting up a separate institution when the States have one of their own"?

That is true. Maybe that is objectionable. Maybe it ought to be all in one. That may be a good argument against this proposal, but it is no better argument than could be made against the Federal reserve system itself.

I have an idea that if this were added on to the bill and they commenced to work under it, some imperfections would be found in it. I think I have pointed out one in this amendment. I may be wrong about that. They say, again, that the farmers will not utilize this system. Well, I am not particular about any particular class of people utilizing it. The merchants can utilize it if they want to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Nebraska has expired. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I address myself to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] simply for the purpose of explaining what I meant when I said that this proposal did not provide for the organization of cooperative banks; that the cooperative principle was not here.

If I understand the cooperative principle at all, it embodies the idea that certain persons get together and deal among themselves and with themselves, and distribute the avails among themselves. The 200 persons provided here may not become depositors in the bank at all. They may take deposits from people who are not stockholders in any sense whatever. They may make loans to persons who are not stockholders at all. They do not deal among themselves, make their own deposits, and make their own loans, as a building and loan association, but they take deposits from the outside, and they make loans upon the outside. I understand that that is a violation of the cooperative principle. That is what I meant when I said that this amendment did not provide for the organization of cooperative banks.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I desire to speak now on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

There is no violation of the principle of cooperation in dealing with outside persons. All the cooperatives do that. They do business just the same as anybody else, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if they do not do that as merely incidental to the dealing among themselves?

Mr. BROOKHART. Incidental, and yet, perhaps, the greater volume of the Rochdale business is outside, and it is the biggest cooperative business in the world, and it is the biggest business in the world, too. There is not any other business that I know of, unless it is the business of Henry Ford, that is the equal of that managed by Mr. Thorp, the manager of the English Cooperative Wholesale. It had a banking turnover of two and a half billion dollars in 1919, and it increased 26 per cent the first six months of 1920, and has increased every month since; so it conducts a gigantic banking business in connection with the other, all on this principle.

In reference to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, let me say that nobody can share in these profits unless he is a member. That is what meets, principally, the objection of the Senator from Montana. If a depositor is not a member, he does not share in this cooperative distribution of profits. If a borrower is not a member, he does not share in it. That brings all the borrowers and all the depositors into the association as members, and that is the idea of it.

The Cooperative National Bank, at Cleveland, is operating on the idea of the Senator from Nebraska all right, but all of us have agreed that it does not fully meet the cooperative principle. I have not any particular objection to the amendment, because it will serve to lower the rate on deposits, and the borrowers will get some advantage of it in the cooperative exchange, anyhow; but the real cooperative principle is the way it is figured out here, giving the distribution of the profits over what capital earns in proportion to the interest received by the depositors and in proportion to the interest paid by the borrowers.

That gives them an equal share in these profits, and that is what makes the thing cooperative; it is the division of these profits.

The more members you can get in one of these banks the better, the further reaching it will be in its cooperation. It is true that it could be organized without any capital. When capital comes in, as I said before, we immediately fix a wage for the capital, so that it is not a profiteering affair; and, having done that, it goes ahead, cooperative with capital or otherwise. Both are used in the cooperative organizations, whether in banking or in anything else.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROOKHART. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. It seems to me that there is a good deal in the proposal that has been made by the Senator. It is one that ought to have very careful consideration by the Senate, and I am wondering if it has had that careful consideration. I wonder if there have been any hearings on it, or if there has been any action of the committee in regard to it. The Senator will admit that it is a new proposal.

Mr. BROOKHART. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. It does seem to me that the Senate should have hearings on it, and there should be consideration of it by a committee, so as to get it in the form which will be best for the farmers.

Mr. BROOKHART. I will say that the only hearing on it was at the meeting of the farm-bloc people when the live-stock men of the West were here. I brought up the idea and developed it there in the cross-examination of Mr. Eugene Meyer, and he said there was no objection to it. That is as far as it went; but, to be frank, I supposed the committee understood better what I was driving at than they did, and that it was not so new as I have found it to be in the discussion here, and I did not follow it any further.

I would be very glad to have it fully investigated, so far as that is concerned. If there can be some arrangement to send this proposition to the Committee on Banking and Currency and have a hearing on it and consideration of it, I would not object to that, for I am not trying to put anything over on the Senate of the United States, notwithstanding my friend from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GLASS. In my own time I would like to say to the Senator, as one minority member of the committee, that I should be very glad to take his plan up and consider it as best I would know how; but it has not been considered.

Mr. BROOKHART. That is true.

Mr. GLASS. I have no information on the subject; and however good it may be, I could not with any degree of confidence vote for it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will let it take the course any bill would take, because it does seem to me that a matter as important as this should have the careful scrutiny of a committee, and there should be such testimony produced before the committee that they could properly act in the premises. I hope the Senator will let it go to the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BROOKHART. In view of the suggestion coming from the committee, I will withdraw the amendment and present it to the committee as an original bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator from Nebraska consent? Mr. NORRIS. I suppose, technically speaking, that would require my consent. I will withdraw my motion, so that that action may be taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska consents, and the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, at the end of line 5, on page 6, I wish to offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 6, line 5, before the period and after the word "made," insert the following:

Or any bonus or thing of value to procure said loan has been given.

Mr. CARAWAY. Just one word. The section to which I have sought to attach the amendment provides that the paper shall not be subject to rediscount if the rate of interest it bears shall exceed by more than 1½ per cent the discount rate. I simply sought to add a provision that it should not be subject to discount where any bonus or thing of value has been given to procure the loan. I do not know how rare the practice is, but sometimes, where the rate of interest is fixed, it is the custom to require the borrower to give a bonus in order to procure the loan, and if we are trying to protect the farmer as against extortion I rather thought it ought to be required that the bank should not charge him in excess of a certain rate of interest, nor should they demand from the farmer a bonus.

The Senator from Wisconsin had a suggestion in the way of a modification of the amendment which possibly he would want to offer in lieu of the amendment. I do not know whether any extortion will be practiced under this system. I know that bonuses are sometimes demanded for loans, and it is merely to protect the borrower against the demand of a bonus that I offer the amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, as I stated the other day, I am in entire sympathy with what the Senator from Arkansas desires to accomplish. I wish very frankly to say that I do not believe it is practicable to accomplish it in this way, and I may also frankly say that I do not know how it can be accomplished. If this amendment were adopted, it would deprive the Federal land bank of power to discount any paper unless it first ascertained not only that the rate carried in the paper was not in excess of the rate provided in the law but that there had not been any secret bonus or commission offered. The Senator can see they would have to go into an investigation of every note offered for discount before they would be authorized under the law to discount the paper.

Mr. CARAWAY. Would not the paper be prima facie subject to rediscount, and the bank only prohibited when knowledge came to it that a bonus had been asked?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly not under the form in which the amendment appears, because on its face it provides that no paper shall be discounted if it carries a rate in excess of 1½ per cent over the discount rate, or if there has been any bonus or secret commission. The result of that would be that it would tie the hands of the land bank in discounting paper unless it went into an actual investigation in each case to ascertain whether there was any secret commission, which, of course, would be impossible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FLETCHER. To make a little clearer the provision on page 6, I move to insert, after the word "discount" in line 1, the words "with any Federal land bank," so that it would read:

No bank, trust company, live-stock company, or other agencies entitled to the privileges of this act shall, without the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, be allowed to discount with any Federal land bank any note or other obligation.

It is of course intended to apply to them.

Mr. LENROOT. I accept that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the substitute proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK].

Mr. NORBECK. I want to offer my amendment at this time. It is really a substitute for the pending bill. I merely wish to add to what I said this morning the statement that there have been some slight improvements made in the bill to-day, but they are very slight. We have done something more than that. We have absolutely admitted that the proposition of issuing debentures back of the capital in the proportion of 10 to 1 is not what we are trying to bring about.

The proponent of the bill suggests that we should not enforce that rule. Therefore we must frankly admit that part of this capital will be placed where it is effective and part of it where it will not be. We have this ridiculous proposition, for instance, that we take $5,000,000 out of the United States Treasury, we send it 500 miles to some Government clerk or a Government board, working under Uncle Sam on salaries, who say they do not need the money at all. But we say to those people, "You can lend it to another group working for Uncle Sam, another group of Government clerks, another board." There is red tape here and red tape there, and red tape at the other place, instead of our going direct to the question, as I propose in my substitute.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I shall not take any time of the Senate, except to make one observation: The whole issue between the substitute of the Senator from South Dakota and the bill before the Senate, outside of the details, which I am not going to take the time to discuss, is the centralization of the entire system, as against allocating it in different parts of the country. We had the same question before us when we were considering the Federal reserve system, when it was proposed to establish one central bank, but Congress decided in favor of the 12 regional banks. This presents the same question. Of course, if the Senate desires to establish a central bank, as against regional banks, the substitute of the Senator should be adopted.

I want to make one other observation: The Senator from South Dakota has repeatedly said he did not believe the debentures provided for in the pending bill would be salable, and yet I observed the Senator from South Dakota a few moments ago voting for the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi proposing that loans be made direct to farmers, which, I am frank to say, would absolutely destroy the salability of the debentures.

I want to say, too, that in the measure the Senator now asks the Senate to support he provides for the sale of the debentures to the extent of $1,000,000, and he also provides for loans direct to farmers upon the indorsement of five other farmers, but utterly irrespective of the financial condition of any of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment, and I believe under the rule it can not be discussed further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. Add at the proper place the following:

That the Federal reserve act as amended be further amended by striking out the word "six" in the proviso in the second paragraph of section 13 and inserting in lieu thereof "12," so that the proviso as amended shall read: "Provided, That notes, drafts, and bills drawn or issued for agricultural purposes or based on live stock and having a maturity not exceeding 12 months, exclusive of days of grace, may be discounted in an amount to be limited to a percentage of the assets of the Federal reserve bank, to be ascertained and fixed by the Federal Reserve Board."

Amend section 13a, in line 4, page 17, by striking out "nine" and inserting "twelve."

Mr. SMITH. The amendment involves the question of extending the time from 9 months to 12 months. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to it.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and vote "yea."

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and transfer as before, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and vote "nay."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). My general pair, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], being absent, and being unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote. If I were permitted to vote I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD]. I notice that Senator has not voted. I have been unable to arrange a transfer, so I withdraw my vote.

Mr. ERNST (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] to the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. WATSON. I find that I can transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], which I do, and vote "nay."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I find that I can transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] to the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], which I do, and vote "nay."

Mr. ERNST (after having voted in the negative). The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD], to whom I transferred my pair, having entered the Chamber and voted, I am compelled to withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Ashurst	George	McNary	Standfield
Borah	Harris	Norbeck	Sterling
Brookhart	Harrison	Norris	Sutherland

So Mr. SMITH's amendment was rejected.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I desire to offer another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. Add at the proper place the following:

That when used in this act the term "person" shall be construed to mean an individual citizen of the United States, a partnership composed of such citizens, a corporation organized under the laws of the United States or of one of the component States thereof, or an association composed of such citizens, partnerships, or corporations.

SEC. 2. That the War Finance Corporation act, approved April 5, 1918, as amended, is amended by adding after section 28 of Title I thereof a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 29. That the corporation is hereby authorized and empowered—

"(a) To purchase, without recourse against the drawer thereof, and upon such other terms not inconsistent with this act as it may determine, from any person of the United States producing or dealing in foodstuffs or wool or cotton products, or any articles manufactured therefrom in the United States, drafts or bills of exchange secured by bills of lading or other instruments in writing conveying or securing merchantable title to said foodstuffs or wool or cotton products or any articles manufactured therefrom in the United States when such drafts or bills of exchange are drawn against sales of said foodstuffs, products, or manufactured articles by any such person to a foreign buyer or buyers established and doing business in foreign countries, to be secured by proper and sufficient collateral or by the guaranty of a legally established foreign government, or by both such collateral and guaranty as may be deemed advisable in the judgment and discretion of the directors of the War Finance Corporation. No such drafts or bills of exchange or conveyance of title shall have a maturity of more than six months from the time of purchase: Provided, That in the discretion of the directors of the War Finance Corporation such maturity may be fixed not to exceed nine months.

"(b) To purchase, without recourse against the drawer or indorser thereof, and upon such other terms not inconsistent with this act as it may determine, from any bank, banker, or trust company of the United States, drafts or bills of exchange or conveyance of title, secured by proper and sufficient collateral or by the guaranty of a legally established foreign government, or by both such collateral and guaranty in the manner described in paragraph (a) of this section, when said bank, banker, or trust company has purchased and guaranteed drafts or bills of exchange from a person of the United States producing or dealing in foodstuffs, or wool or cotton products, or any articles manufactured therefrom in the United States, without recourse against such person.

"The said corporation shall provide for the registration with it of all contracts, bills of exchange, or conveyances of title entered into between said sellers of the United States and those foreign buyers whose purchase contracts and drafts and conveyances of title have collateral or guaranties as provided herein. Purchases of drafts or bills of exchange or conveyances of title may be made under this section at any time prior to July 1, 1924. The aggregate amount of such purchases authorized under the provisions of this section of the act shall not at any time exceed $250,000,000.

"(c) That any provisions of the War Finance Corporation act, as amended, inconsistent with section 29 herein provided are hereby repealed."

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, to briefly explain the amendment, I am offering it as a rider to the farm credits measure. The bill which I have offered as an amendment was unanimously recommended by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and, I can assure Senators, without any mental reservation upon the part of the members who were present, and most of them were at the meeting. I think most of us were convinced by a representative of the Department of Agriculture, who had spent considerable time in Europe and who assured us that Europe would require a great deal more from us than in previous years.

I shall not go into the question of arguing it further except to leave this thought, that the hope is that by disposing of the surplus somewhere we will have a nice reaction on the market. We are trying to get the farmer's dollar out of the rut where it is. It is only worth 68 cents now, compared to the other man's dollar. We hope he may get better prices, so it can be put on a level with the other dollars.

The idea is not new. It was not new when we gave that $10,000,000 over to Russia, or, rather, when we took it, not out of the Treasury but out of the farmer's fund, held in trust by the Treasury, and we got some splendid results. It acted as a stimulus and raised the prices.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NORBECK. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. If the consumer or the individual at the other end of the line is unable to buy this material, how is the Senator's amendment going to help him?

Mr. NORBECK. Simply by giving him a little more time to turn over. The whole experience of business, I think, is that when a man is on a cash basis he will sell for less than when he is on a credit basis. There are people who would like to buy a little more flour or a little more bacon or use a little more cotton, but who can not quite reach it. If they had a little more time to pay they would buy more. That is the theory.

Mr. BORAH. The point that interests me is whether or not the provisions of the Senator's amendment, if put into operation, could reach the individual in Europe who needs the food. If he has not the means to buy, how could it benefit the individual?

Mr. NORBECK. The idea is to extend credit to the importer. Under the provisions of the amendment we could require the guaranty of the Government. The expert showed us that a great deal of food is still handled by the Government there, but we are not selling it on Government credit. The theory is that the dealer who is responsible shall buy, and if there is any doubt about his responsibility the War Finance Corporation could ask the indorsement of the Government on top of that.

The idea is not new. I am not going to take up the time of the Senate to discuss it. The Senate has voted on the question twice before, a year and a half ago when the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] brought the matter before us, but it was decided we were not ready for it, and two or three weeks ago when the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] offered it as an amendment to another bill and it got a larger number of votes than before. I thought possibly the Senate had reached the conclusion that it might accept the idea at this time.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I very much dislike to take any of the time of the Senate at this late hour. The Senate must remember that the proposition involves $250,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States. That being so, I think I am justified in taking the five minutes I am allowed.

In the first place, I want to say that it was testified before the Committee on Banking and Currency by Mr. Howard, manager of the Cotton Growers' Exchange, a cooperative organization that has to do with the marketing of the southern cotton planters, that there was no lack of foreign credits that were entitled to credit. I have not the time to read his testimony, but it is in the hearings, as the Senator from South Dakota is aware.

More particularly the amendment would in effect do this. So far as personal credits are concerned, where they are entitled to it they get it now, but if adopted and the authority conferred in it were carried out, it would mean that we would loan, for the benefit of foreign governments on their guaranty, $250,000,000. Most of them are bankrupt governments which, it is said, can not pay any of the interest which is due on their indebtedness to the United States. Some of the gentlemen who are demanding that we make further loans to foreign governments are at the same time demanding that we collect every dollar they now owe us. As to governments that are not bankrupt, what would be the result? A government that is able to pay would have the benefit of this money out of the Treasury of the United States, and then use its own funds to maintain and equip its armies and buy guns with which to carry on further wars in Europe. That would be the effect of this proposed legislation.

As the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has pointed out, it will not help the consumer over in Europe one particle. The trouble with Europe is not lack of credit on the part of importers, but the trouble with Europe is the lack of purchasing power upon the part of the individual man and woman in Europe. This amendment if adopted would not help them in any particular.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator recall when we were having the hearings that there appeared before the Finance Committee a very prominent cotton broker from the South, who stated that he had had no difficulty whatever?

Mr. LENROOT. I just referred to that. The witness was Mr. Howard, of the Cotton Growers' Association.

So, Mr. President, the only effect of this amendment would be to hand out something from the Treasury of the United States, either upon guaranty of bankrupt governments or of governments that could not pay their present interest indebtedness to the United States, or else to governments which can do so and which will then be permitted to use their own resources for the purpose of further carrying on trouble in Europe.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. Under this amendment the War Finance Corporation would not be confined to the guaranty given by the Government, but it may require, and undoubtedly would require, other sufficient collateral. It seems to me that there could be no question under a wise management of the War Finance Corporation as to the sufficiency of the security.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. LENROOT. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, we are now about to pass the pending bill. I am going to vote for it. As I have said from the very beginning, I have favored the bill; but I have always said that I believed what was expected from it was very much exaggerated and that, in my judgment, it would not accomplish very great or material good for the American farmer. Personally I have not put anything in the way of the prompt consideration and passage of the bill; but I desire to say that fundamentally we can loan money to men until, by reason of the very fact that they are able to borrow and we are able to loan, we will ruin them.

While rural credits, short-time credits, and intermediate credits are important—I realize it; I do not want to say anything detrimental to them—the great burden that is on the farmer to-day is that he is not able to pay from the product of his toil the debt that he already owes. If Congress would devote its time to an effort to seek out a market for the surplus products of America or to do away with the middlemen who live on the profits that they make from the time that the farmer's produce is put on the market until the consumer has to pay an exorbitant price for it, we should do more good for the producer and more good for the consumer than in any other way.

The middlemen who reap all of their profits upon the food products as they travel in their natural course from production to consumption are the people who are to blame to a very great extent for the high price the consumer pays and for the low price the producer receives.

This bill will not furnish a real remedy for the situation. If we would extend credit to a man who is already badly in debt and at the same time give some reasonable assurance that when his new note matures he would have a better market, and thus save money by the operation, we would be doing him a favor. This bill does no such thing. We are not doing a kind act by extending credit, by making a man give another mortgage and another note and pay increased interest, if we are not able to assure him that upon the maturity of that note and that mortgage he will be able to get a sufficient price for his product to bring him a profit through the operation.

I am just as anxious, Mr. President, to do something for the consumer as I am for the producer. I think the bill which the Agricultural Committee reported to the Senate, which was killed a week or two ago, was the one step that went further than any other in the direction of bringing relief, not only to the producer but to the consumer. I am not criticizing the Senate for taking the action which it did, although I think it was wrong. Neither am I trying to place myself in a position where I may say, "I told you so." I am not criticizing this bill; I think it will do some good, and I bid it Godspeed for every bit of good that it will do. I have no ill will toward it or those who are backing it and who have been instrumental in overthrowing the bill that I think would have done more good. This bill will be a disappointment. The farmer needs more than anything else a market for his surplus products. This bill will not give it. You who are back of this bill killed the bill that would have done so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read three times, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. LENROOT. Upon that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], but he has authorized me to vote on the passage of the bill. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to the transfer of my pair as on the previous vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I am relieved from that pair, as the Senator would vote as I intend to vote. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). I have been informed that my pair, the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], if present, would vote as I intend to vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] to my colleague [Mr. PEPPER] and vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], who is absent. I understand, however, that if present he would vote as I intend to vote. I therefore am at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). My general pair, the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], would, if present, vote as I intend to vote. I am therefore at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I am informed that my general pair, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], would vote as I am about to vote were he present. Therefore I feel free to vote, and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ERNST (after having voted in the affirmative). I am informed that my general pair, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], would, if present, vote as I have already voted. I will therefore permit my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr.

TOWNSEND] are unavoidably detained from the Senate. If present, they would vote "yea."

I also desire to announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The result was announced—yeas 69, nays 0, as follows:

YEAS—69.

So the bill was passed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business may be laid before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

THE NATIONAL GUARD.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, in advance of the request to take up the War Department appropriation bill which will be made to-morrow, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD a copy of the resolutions adopted by the National Guard Association of the United States in its annual convention at Indianapolis. The resolutions relate directly to certain problems covered in the bill. They are so interesting and, to my mind, so conclusive that I think they should be printed in the RECORD before the bill is taken up.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL GUARD ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES.

Indianapolis, Ind., February 1, 1923.

"Whereas Congress has by statute created the National Guard as the main dependence for the immediate use of the Nation for national defense in case of an emergency requiring the use of troops in excess of those of the Regular Army; and

"Whereas Congress by statute has required the several States to raise a definite number of troops per Representative and Senator within a given period, and has required that these troops be so organized as to create a well-balanced force available for immediate use in case of necessity; and

"Whereas the several States have in good faith and at great expense to themselves and various communities within their borders erected, altered, and leased armories and stables and raised and placed under Federal recognition definite bodies of troops in order to comply with the requirements of Congress; and

"Whereas there are at present 90 horse-drawn batteries of Artillery and 26 troops of Cavalry in the National Guard without horses; and

"Whereas past experience has demonstrated that it is impossible to maintain the interest of or properly instruct mounted organizations without an adequate number of horses; and

"Whereas the necessary amount of money has not been placed in the current appropriation bill by the House of Representatives to either furnish horses and forage or the hire of caretakers to properly equip the mounted units already organized and Federally recognized; and

"Whereas the National Guard Association believes that Congress does not desire or intend to nullify that which has already been accomplished by the States in accordance with the requirements of the acts of Congress, which will be done if the appropriation bill, as it affects the National Guard, is finally enacted into law as passed by the House of Representatives; and

"Whereas there are available in the Army, for free issue, sufficient horses to equip said organizations without additional cost other than for transportation, forage, and caretakers: Now therefore be it

"Resolved by the National Guard Association of the United States in convention assembled, That we do, in the name of the National Guard of the several States, protest against Congress requiring of the various States the organization of military units of the National Guard and the establishing of proper housing and training facilities under an implied contract to properly equip and support those organizations and then fail, after the several States have complied in good faith, to fulfill their part of said contract; and be it further

"Resolved, That we earnestly urge Congress not to nullify the efforts of the citizen soldiery and not to discourage the States and individuals in their efforts to provide an adequate force for national defense; and be it further

"Resolved, That we earnestly urge every Member of Congress, its officials, and appropriate committees to replace in the current appropriation bill the sums of money as provided for in the Budget, and which are necessary to properly equip with horses, and to care for same, the units now formed and in process of formation; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished to all Members of Congress."

In connection with the above the attention of the Members of Congress is called to the fact that the Secretary of War has lately assembled a committee of a number of experienced National Guard officers to study, in conjunction with Regular Army General Staff officers, the proper allocation of troops to the National Guard in order to create a well-balanced force to supplement the present strength of the Regular Army and yet stay within the minimum requirements of national defense, taking into due account the present necessity for Federal and State economy, and that the approved report of this committee, which has been transmitted to Congress, contains the mounted organizations referred to herein.

GUY M. WILSON,
Colonel, National Guard of Michigan, President.
PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I give the notice which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The notice will be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

Pursuant to the provisions of Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that I will move to suspend paragraph 3 of Rule XVI for the purpose of offering to the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 13793) the following amendment.

At the proper place insert the following:
"That the President is authorized and requested to invite the governments with which the United States has diplomatic relations to send representatives to a conference, to be held in the city of Washington, which shall be charged with the duty of formulating and entering into a general international agreement by which armaments for war, either upon land or sea, shall be effectually reduced and limited, in the interest of the peace of nations and the relief of all nations from the burdens of inordinate and unnecessary expenditures for the provision of armaments and the preparation for war."

PETITIONS.

Mr. NELSON presented petitions, numerous signed, of sundry citizens of Minnesota, praying for the passage of legislation extending immediate aid to the famine-stricken peoples of the German and Austrian Republics, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WILLIS presented a resolution adopted by members of Epsilon Chapter, National Sorority of Kappa Alpha Theta, at Columbus, Ohio, favoring an amendment to the Constitution regulating child labor, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution of the Harry E. Kern Post, American Legion, of Toledo, Ohio, indorsing the action of France in endeavoring by direct measures to secure the payment of German reparations, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution of the Greenford, Ohio, Farmers' Institute, favoring the passage of legislation extending the service of bonded warehouses to include all food and fiber products, which from their nature must be stored, awaiting consumptive demand; also an amendment to the Federal reserve act, making it mandatory that bonded warehouse certificates be accepted as security for loans, and that loans upon warehouse certificates be made for such period as the goods against which loans are made remain in storage, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. LADD presented a resolution adopted at the annual meeting of the Bucyrus (N. Dak.) National Farm Loan Association, at Bucyrus, N. Dak., favoring the passage of the so-called Strong bill, amending certain sections of the Federal farm loan act, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. NEW, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9316) for the relief of Robert J. Ashe, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1081) thereon.

Mr. BURSOM, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12887) granting a pension to Jacob F. Rosenberger, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1082) thereon.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3742) for the relief of John H. Fesenmeyer, alias John Willis, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1083) thereon.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4216) authorizing the sale of real property no longer required for military purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1084) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 4464) in reference to a national military park at Yorktown, Va.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FERNALD:

A bill (S. 4465) granting a pension to Carrie E. Croxford (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HARRISON:

A bill (S. 4466) for the relief of Hugh Marshall Montgomery; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 4467) granting an increase of pension to John B. Senecal; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. REED of Pennsylvania:

A bill (S. 4468) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the settling of New Netherland, the Middle States, in 1624, by Walloons, French, and Belgian Huguenots, under the Dutch West India Co.; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

MOBILE RIVER BRIDGE, ALABAMA.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I ask permission to introduce a bill and let it lie on the table for the present. It is to extend the time for the construction of a bridge in my State.

The bill (S. 4469) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge or bridges and trestles over the navigable channels of the mouth of the Mobile River in the State of Alabama was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, ordered to lie on the table.

PAY OF THE FLEET NAVAL RESERVE.

Mr. CALDER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7864) providing for sundry matters affecting the Naval Establishment, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

NEW ORLEANS TOWBOAT ASSOCIATION.

Mr. RANDELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 11397) to authorize appropriations for the relief of certain officers of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that on February 2, 1923, the President approved and signed the following acts:

S. 1690. An act to correct the naval record of John Sullivan; and

S. 2719. An act to reimburse certain persons for loss of private funds while they were patients at the United States Naval Hospital, Naval Operating Base, Hampton Roads, Va.

WILLIAM O. DOHERTY.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 430), which, with an accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to William O. Doherty, son of Edward W. Doherty, late a messenger acting as assistant doorkeeper of the Senate, a sum equal to one year's compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

INVESTIGATION OF ALASKAN FISHERIES.

Mr. CAMERON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 431), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Whereas at a public hearing held by the Senate Committee on Commerce to consider Senate bill 3731, entitled "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act to prevent the extermination of fur-bearing animals in Alaska,' etc., the statement was made by the Delegate from Alaska that the administration of Alaskan fisheries within the reservations created by Executive orders issued under the dates of February 17, 1922, and November 3, 1922, is dominated by commercial fishing interests and the rights of independent fishermen are disregarded by the Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce; Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Commerce, or a duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to investigate the methods by which the Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce administers the Alaskan fisheries within the reservations created by Executive orders issued under the date of February 17, 1922, and November 3, 1922, with a view to ascertaining the truth of the statement made by the Delegate from Alaska with reference to the administration of such fisheries within such reservations. The committee, or subcommittee, shall make a final report of its investigations with recommendations to the Senate not later than March 1, 1923. For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or subcommittee, is authorized to sit and act at such times during the Sixty-seventh Congress and in such places within the United States, to hold such hearings, and to employ such clerical and stenographic assistants as it deems necessary. The cost of stenographic service to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The committee, or subcommittee, is further authorized to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to take testimony. The expenses of the committee, or subcommittee, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution were severally read twice by title and referred to the Committee on Finance:

H. R. 13774. An act to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to exchanges of property;

H. R. 13775. An act to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to credits and refunds; and

H. J. Res. 422. Joint resolution permitting the entry free of duty of certain domestic animals which have crossed the boundary line into foreign countries.

AMERICAN PROPERTY INTERESTS IN ISLE OF PINES (S. DOC. NO. 295).

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State in response to the resolution adopted by the Senate on January 4 (legislative day, January 3), 1923, requesting him to inform the Senate "how many citizens of the United States have landed or other property interests in the Isle of Pines, and the amount and value of such lands and other property owned by them."

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE,

Washington, February 2, 1923.

RECESS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, pursuant to the unanimous-consent order, I move that the Senate now take a recess.

The motion was agreed to; and at 6 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously made, took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, February 3, 1923, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 2, 1923.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Spera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

In this sacred stillness, O Lord, we wait. Let Thy tenderest blessings rest upon us. By giving burdens to the shoulders, help us to believe. Thou dost give wisdom to the mind and comfort to the heart. We claim no exemption from duty, but we do ask Thy guiding presence in all efforts to build up and increase the happiness and prosperity of our country. So abide with us that we shall not be caught in the fever and tumult of the world. May we so bear the labor of this day that we shall relish the rest and the quiet of the twilight. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE BURROUGHS.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That Sunday, February 25, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon, be set apart for the addresses on the life, character, and public services of the Hon. SHERMAN E. BURROUGHS, late a Representative from the State of New Hampshire.

The order was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the House completes the consideration of the conference report and bills that are to come up from the Committee on Ways and Means it proceed to the consideration of the unobjected bills on the Private Calendar from the point at where we left off.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that at the close of the business of the Ways and Means Committee the House proceed to the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar where we left off when it was last considered.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Subject to the conference report.

The SPEAKER. That will come up first.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I think the chairman is a little previous. We are going to take up a conference report which will take some time and then the Committee on Ways and Means will take up several bills, and I do not think there will be much time left for the Private Calendar.

Mr. EDMONDS. In the event that we do have time I want to take up the Private Calendar. This is the day set apart for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, and Members are pressing me. If it is too late, why, we will not take it up.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will make no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

H. R. 12021 TABLED.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 12021) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act of 1920, and for other purposes, be laid on the table. It has been superseded by the other shipping bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 12021 be laid on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXECUTIVE AND INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 13696) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana calls up conference report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13696) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, and 28.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, 9, 12, 13, 14, and 34, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "$2,139,360, and no part of this sum shall be available for the care, maintenance, protection, fuel, light, and so forth, for the Interstate Commerce Commission Building"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon amendments numbered 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 16, 25, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 33.

WM. J. HARRIS,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13696) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, submit the following statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On No. 1: Appropriates $10,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $5,000, as proposed by the House, for the improvement and maintenance of the Executive Mansion grounds.

On No. 2: Restores the language stricken out by the Senate providing that the work of preparing plans and estimates for fireproofing the Executive Mansion shall be done by the Office of the Supervising Architect.

On No. 4: Appropriates $20,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $18,000, as proposed by the House, for traveling expenses of the Civil Service Commission.

On No. 9: Makes the appropriation of $1,800 for printing and binding a report on the construction of the Grant Memorial immediately available, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 11: Appropriates $2,139,360, instead of $2,100,000 as proposed by the House and $2,239,360 as proposed by the Senate, for the general expenses of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and inserts the language proposed by the Senate providing that no part of this sum shall be available for the care, maintenance, etc., of the Interstate Commerce Commission Building.

On No. 12: Appropriates $400,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $350,000, as proposed by the House, for the enforcement of the acts to promote safety of employees and travelers upon railroads.

On No. 13: Appropriates $1,250,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,000,000, as proposed by the House, for the valuation of the property of carriers.

On No. 14: Makes the appropriation of $3,600 for printing and binding a report on the construction of the Lincoln Memorial immediately available, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 15: Strikes out the language proposed by the Senate authorizing the Public Buildings Commission to destroy old Government records for which there is no longer any need and which have no value from an historical point of view.

On Nos. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 27, and 28, relating to the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings: Strikes out the language proposed by the Senate making available the appropriations under the office of the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings for the purchase of uniforms for guards and watchmen.

On No. 26: Strikes out the language proposed by the Senate making an appropriation of $500,000 for the construction of a national archives building.

On No. 34: Inserts the language proposed by the Senate making the appropriation for vocational rehabilitation by the United States Veterans' Bureau available for the purchase and distribution of embossed literature in Revised Braille for the use of blinded ex-service men.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon the following amendments of the Senate:

On Nos. 3, 5, 6, and 7, relating to the custody, care, maintenance, and protection of the Civil Service Commission Building.

On No. 8, relating to the destruction of paid United States Government checks by the General Accounting Office.

On No. 10, relating to the appropriation of $99,185 for the improvement of the grounds and approaches to Perry Victory Memorial.

On No. 16, relating to the construction of a building for the National Gallery of Art, by the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

On No. 25, relating to an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the installation of 15 stories of filing stacks in the Pension Office Building.

On Nos. 29, 30, 31, 32, and 33, relating to the transfer of the responsibility for the care, maintenance, and protection of the buildings occupied by the Department of Commerce, the Department of Labor, the Department of Justice, the Civil Service Commission, and the Interstate Commerce Commission, to the superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings.

WM. R. WOOD,
EDWARD H. WASON,
L. J. DICKINSON,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana why the amendment in regard to the archives building was not kept in; whether that building authorized in 1913 is ever going to be built; whether the Committee on Appropriations is ever going to make an appropriation to start it; and whether we have got to wait until the records of the war are destroyed?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Let me say to the gentleman that as far as I am individually concerned I am heartily in favor of an archives building, and have been advocating it ever since I came to Congress. However, I think it would be a mistake to agree to it on this bill. It is such character of proposals as this that will prove in the end absolutely destructive of the Budget system. No submission was ever made of this item to the budgetary committee or to the President. That is one great objection to it. There is still a greater objection, and that is that we have had no public-building bill for 9 or 10 years. Every district in the United States is interested either directly or indirectly in a public building in these respective districts. It would not be very becoming in us to appropriate solely for a public building in Washington, that is needed, of course, but not any more needed than buildings are in many of these other places.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I think my friend is wrong there in saying that the archives building is not more important than many requests that will come to Congress for public buildings. My fear is if we wait for that it will be another 100 years deferred.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not think so. Perhaps the attempt to put this item on this bill has served a good purpose; it has brought to the fore the necessity of an archives building, but it is an example of bad practice. In the first place, it is legislation on an appropriation bill. This character of proposal has never been authorized, or at least it is a serious question whether it has been authorized, but whether it has ever been authorized or not, it is not the time or place to carry this proposal of $500,000 simply as a starter. When the archives building is built, we ought to know what we are doing; we ought to have some idea of the character of the building, and the limit of its cost. It is questionable whether there should not only be an archives building, but whether there should not be a building for a general accounting office also. To my mind, this item was very illy considered. In fact, it was not considered at all. It has never been considered on our side, and there were no hearings on the other side.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I entirely approve of the position taken by the gentleman from Indiana in regard to this item. It is not consistent with the stand that we have taken for the last two years, bringing in a proposition of this kind that will cost $2,500,000 without any consideration whatever. The only way to do this is to cut this out, and when the time comes bring in a bill in the regular way.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will yield, they increased the limit of cost $1,000,000. In the authorization the limit of cost was $1,500,000.

Mr. SNELL. I said that the proposed cost was $2,500,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the best reason, without regard to the necessity for the building, the best reason to justify the conferees in bringing in a recession from this amendment is the fact that this building has never been authorized by law.

Mr. SNELL. It is questionable at least whether it has been authorized by law.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There was an authorization for a million and a half dollars, but this contemplated an expenditure of two and a half million dollars.

Mr. SNELL. I understand that there have been no hearings upon it, and no one knows whether it will cost two and a half million dollars or $5,000,000. If we start on a proposition of this kind we should start in a logical and sensible way.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be misunderstood in the matter. I agree with the desire of the committee not to allow anything that will break down the Budget system. I am going to stay with the committee on that proposition. I regret the matter has gotten into this particular situation, but we must have an archives building to protect these public records, and it seems to me it is wicked for us to go on in this way. If we must wait until we have a public buildings bill, then it appears to me it is wholly hopeless.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There is one of two ways to do it. It should be either included in a public building bill or else we should make it an independent matter, standing upon its own bottom. It ought not to be brought in on an appropriation bill like this, for the reasons that I have stated.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. There has been an investigation of this archives building matter for several years. The best information obtainable by our committee has been that a proper archives building would cost at least $8,000,000, instead of $2,500,000 or $5,000,000. There is a crying need all over this country, in almost every city in it, for public building construction.

We have not had a public buildings bill since the 4th of March, 1913. President Taft signed the last bill. The necessities of other parts of the country are just as great as they are in Washington. I am heartily in favor of an archives building and we need it, but so do we need these other buildings. It is not right for these matters to be put upon appropriation and other bills in this manner, as the gentleman from Indiana has said, and unless we intend to have legislation in its legitimate and proper way, having the proper committees function and having hearings and determining upon the necessity for things, then these other committees ought to be abolished.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. Is the gentleman aware that this archives building, or the construction or acquisition of a site, was authorized by the very act to which he refers, of March 4, 1913?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. DALLINGER. And yet, year after year, the Committee on Appropriations has never made any appropriation to start the building.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. But there were about 146 other buildings also authorized in that bill, if I recollect correctly.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that the recognition of this proposition would strike at the very foundation of the Budget system and bring about a reversal of orderly procedure in making authorizations and appropriations for public buildings. Take, for instance, the claim that this building was authorized by the act of 1913. It is seriously debatable whether it was or not. If you examine the act of 1913 you will find that over a hundred other buildings were authorized by it. But making the necessary allowances, created because of the increased cost in the construction of buildings, we would have to appropriate about $50,000,000 more to level that act up to the conditions of to-day. Moreover, I think the point is well taken that this archives building can not be constructed for two and a half million dollars. We ought to have a hearing that will disclose the actual measure of necessity, that will disclose the actual measure of cost for the building, and we ought to do that in the regular way and hold firmly to that course of procedure. I think the committee is correct on this proposition.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker I wish to say also in answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] that the authorization that he is talking about provided a site. That site has been abandoned and is now occupied by another public building.

I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I am not in discord, I am rather in accord, with what the committee is trying to do. What I am serious about is the opposition that has developed here and there incidentally to this effort to protect and preserve these valuable documents, documents that are down here in wooden buildings, which if destroyed would cost us more money in ultimate claims, of which they will be the evidence, than the whole building would cost us. When our friend from Florida [Mr. CLARK], the former chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, says that it will cost $8,000,000 he probably means when it is entirely completed, which will be far in the future.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Legislation is pending now to give the Public Buildings Commission authority, upon the advice of certain departments, to destroy a very large quantity of old, useless, discarded documents. When that is done, if it is done, we will not need the great space that we apparently need now.

Mr. FESS. An archives building, of course, must be constructed like a library building. It must be built in such a way that you can from time to time add to it. Eight million dollars will not be required to construct it in the beginning, but when you enlarge it to satisfy all of the demands of the Government, not to-day but in the future, it probably will cost considerably more than has been estimated. Let us not procrastinate upon this thing a minute longer than is necessary. That is my only concern. I am afraid that we are just drifting here and that when destruction by fires, as in the past, comes we will simply apologize for our indefensible neglect and say that we ought to have done it but we could not. We can do it; and why do we not do it? It is our duty, and no one seriously questions the immediate relief.

Mr. MILLER. What is the apparent necessity for storing these documents in wooden buildings?

Mr. FESS. Because we have not room elsewhere.

Mr. MILLER. It occurs to me that there is room in the new Navy Building and the new War Department Building down there for millions of documents.

Mr. FESS. The corridors and underground ways down here at the Treasury Building and in other buildings are simply chock full of documents, many of them corroding because of the dampness from the pipe lines running through masses of Government documents, until it is positively a wicked, wasteful method of endangering destruction of our documents. We will authorize the expenditure of $10,000,000 easily here upon various things of questionable character, but here is a necessity that we must meet, and yet we still procrastinate.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will require the Veterans' Bureau to take its triplicate files and make one file of them and take them off three floors and put them on one floor in one file, there will be enough storage room down there in the Veterans' Bureau Building to provide all the room that is needed.

Mr. FESS. Well, that would not be scientific. What we want is an archives building. This is the only Government of any significance in the world that does not have it, and we ought to have it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Florida, a member of the Public Buildings Commission, has just referred to the need of having authority vested in that commission to destroy old Government records. I notice that Senate amendment No. 15 attempted to vest such authority in the Public Buildings Commission. I would like to inquire—and, of course, this is legislation—what other reason the House conferees had in insisting on not granting the Public Buildings Commission the authority which a member of the Public Buildings Commission stated should be vested in them?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will say to the gentleman there were two amendments. One of the amendments we have agreed to with a proposed amendment, and the other one was because of the fact that we felt there was not ample provision made to dispose of papers which should be disposed of. We can not simply go and take these papers without some sort of supervision and destroy them. We have a committee in this House on the disposition of useless papers, and that committee perhaps is handicapped for the reason they can only go into these various departments when invited to go in there. They have no initiative themselves and that is the weakness of that business.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Florida whether the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has given any consideration to the subject covered by Senate amendment No. 15, which grants the authority which the gentleman referred to a few minutes ago.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will say to the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman knows I have been away a good deal of late, but my understanding is that this matter was considered by the Public Buildings Commission in consultation with the heads of the various bureaus and the departments.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, there is need of some such legislation—

Mr. CLARK of Florida. This plan was agreed upon with those gentlemen.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has not been agreed upon here because the Senate recedes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I understand that, but it is agreed upon between the chairman of the Public Buildings Commission, as I understand it, and the heads of the various bureaus and departments.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 3, after the word "each," strike out the remainder of line 3 and all of lines 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, and insert "telephone switch-board operator, $720; in all, $296,480."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that amendments 3, 5, 6, and 7 be passed temporarily until we have passed upon amendment No. 32.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman intend to make an explanation later?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report amendment No. 8 in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 7, insert: (8) The General Accounting Office is hereby authorized to destroy all paid United States Government checks that have been issued three full fiscal years, after all unpaid checks have been properly listed as outstanding as now required by law. Hereafter all claims on account of checks appearing as having been paid shall be barred if not presented to the General Accounting Office within three full fiscal years after the issuance thereof.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The General Accounting Office is hereby authorized to destroy United States Government checks that have been paid six full fiscal years, issued by the Bureau of Pensions for the payment of pensions, by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and the United States Veterans' Bureau for the payment of military and naval compensation on account of death or disability, and checks for the payment of salaries and wages of officers and employees of the Government of the United States, after all unpaid checks have been listed as outstanding as now required by law; and all claims on account of checks of the foregoing classes appearing as having been paid shall be barred if not presented to the General Accounting Office within six full fiscal years after the date of payment."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will say the difference between the amendment proposed and the proposal of the Senate is to extend the time from three to six years, and also describes the bureaus or activities to which this cancellation shall apply in order to make it more certain.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The naming of all these various departments of Government the six years applies to all of them, does it not?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Before any checks shall be destroyed they must have been paid for as much as six years?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 10: Page 14, line 19, insert:

"PERRY'S VICTORY MEMORIAL.

"For the Perry's Victory Memorial: For improvements of the grounds and approaches to the memorial, parking, retaining walls, facing the upper and lower plazas with tile or other suitable material, etc., $99,185."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House insist upon its disagreement to this amendment.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the gentleman from Indiana will not insist upon his motion. Here is a memorial erected under the auspices of nine States. It was turned over to the Government of the United States in 1919.

Mr. SNELL. Do I understand that the nine States paid the original cost of this memorial, or was that cost paid by the Federal Government?

Mr. CHALMERS. The Federal Government paid $250,000.

Mr. SNELL. Did the States pay anything?

Mr. CHALMERS. Oh, yes.

Mr. SNELL. How much?

Mr. CHALMERS. A little less than $1,000,000.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Eight hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. CHALMERS. Yes; $850,000 was the cost of this memorial on Put in Bay Island, to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the winning of the Battle of Lake Erie by Commodore Perry; and also in honor of the campaign of Gen. William Henry Harrison, of Indiana. There are thousands of pilgrimages made annually from different parts of the country to this memorial. Now it belongs to the United States. It has been built by the patriotic citizens of nine States, and approximately $100,000 is now needed to save the memorial. It is the largest military memorial in the world, 352 feet high, and it should be cared for by the Government. It is self-sustaining. An admission fee of 25 cents is charged for adults and 10 cents for children. They made last year in gross receipts $10,040. But the retaining wall to resist the storms of Lake Erie needs to be cared for, and this appropriation ought to be made.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHALMERS. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Am I correct in my understanding that this appropriation is asked for not for the improvement of the grounds but for the protection of the investment?

Mr. CHALMERS. Yes; so I understand.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHALMERS. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Who is in charge now, and who has authority to charge this admission fee?

Mr. CHALMERS. The memorial is under the control of a commission, the personnel of it being appointed by the President. There are no salaried positions on the commission. I see here in the House to-day the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], who is a member of the commission. This ought to be done to take care of the memorial.

Mr. STAFFORD. How often do the representatives of the different States, including the one from Wisconsin, visit this memorial and have their expenses paid?

Mr. CHALMERS. Once a year.

Mr. SNELL. I believe it should be made plain to the House, if it is so, that it is absolutely necessary to protect the property. I am not sure about it. I would feel differently in regard to it if that is so. I wish the gentleman would make that statement very plain to the Members of the House.

Mr. CHALMERS. I understand, I will say to the gentleman from New York, that this retaining wall is absolutely necessary for the protection and even the safety of the memorial itself.

Mr. SNELL. That is the important part of the whole proposition.

Mr. CHALMERS. I am not sure but that some of this money is to be expended for the beautification of the park, but I am sure that the bulk of the appropriation of $100,000 is going to the protection of the memorial itself.

Mr. Speaker, I make the preferential motion that this amendment be concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] did not yield to the gentleman for that purpose. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio at the proper time.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the Washington press, in supporting numerous legislative amendments that our friends in the other body place on almost every appropriation bill that we send over to them, gives us the assertion that if the House knocks out any of these amendments, the Senate might just as well quit trying to perform its duties; in other words, that the House has no right whatever to interfere with the Senate's activities in placing legislative items on appropriation bills.

Now, the Senate has just as much right as the House to place any kind of an appropriation upon an appropriation bill, a legitimate appropriation. The House has the right to pass appropriations authorized by law, and the Senate has the same right to pass appropriations that the law authorizes in appropriation bills. But the Senate has no more right to place big legislative items, unconsidered by legislative committees, in the way of amendments on appropriation bills than the House has, and the House has the perfect right, whenever the Senate does it, to vote them down.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is not that statement a little too broad? Must we not concede to the Senate the right to act within their own rules?

Mr. BLANTON. I know; but I am talking about the rules of legislation, generally speaking. Legislative bodies are presumed to have legislative committees to pass upon legislative items. That is so in all legislative bodies. The Senate has legislative committees to look after legislative items, to carefully consider legislative bills, and they ought to consider them. They have a perfect right to bring in new legislation, but when they do, it is sent to our legislative committees, and our legislative committees have the right to investigate and carefully consider them. But when the Senate assumes the right to place upon every appropriation bill that we send them—the various supply measures in every Congress—when they assume the right to put on every kind of legislation they want to, involving millions of dollars, the House has a perfect right to vote it down, and ought to vote it down. I hope in this particular instance the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] will prevail.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish it to be understood and I am sure no member of the committee wishes it to be understood that any one of us has any objection to this memorial. There is no one who appreciates more than I do—and I suppose all appreciate as much as I do—the glorious victory achieved by Perry in the Battle of Lake Erie. I wish to commend the sentiment and the generosity of those who are primarily interested in raising this beautiful monument in commemoration of that event and in memory of the man who accomplished it. But this is another case where the United States Government is being made the goat. The project for the building of this monument in its inception was of a private nature. Then it assumed State proportions and some eight or nine States contributed to its building. The original cost was approximately $850,000. Of that sum the United States Government contributed $250,000. After the monument was erected a deed was made deeding it to the United States, and the conveyance and the act accepting it and the representations that culminated in this act were all to the effect that it would be entirely self-sustaining, that the United States Government would not be called upon for any further contribution for upkeep. They tell us that it is self-sustaining in this, that they charge an admission to the monument which pays the ordinary expense. It also pays the expense of a pilgrimage that is made there each year by five or six representatives from these original contributing States. That, I think, is a useless expense. It seems to me that any practical business man would say that it is just that much money spent that ought to be conserved for the purpose of doing things that they are now asking the Government to do. The monument was originally located along the shore of Lake Erie on marshland. The original conception was to surround it entirely by water, so that this monument to this great event would rise up out of the water and look out on the scene where this victory was achieved. It is in marsh ground, practically a swamp. They have now changed their idea about it and they want the United States Government to fill in this ground, to build a retaining wall, and to keep the earth in place after they have filled it in.

At the time the United States Government accepted this it was not led to believe that any proposal of that kind would ever be made, and it was not then intended that it should occur. They have now some 14 or 15 acres of land deeded along with this monument, and it is a part of the national possession. They now want to make this a beauty spot by filling it in and having a landscape garden instead of being a monument rising up out of the water. It occurs to me, gentlemen, that the United States Government should not be imposed on in any such way.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is there not something a little more than what has been referred to by the gentleman as to making it a beauty spot? Is it not a fact that the lake is encroaching upon the land upon which this memorial is erected, and that unless some money is spent there is danger of destroying the entire project?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not think so.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It has been so represented to me.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If I understand correctly the foundation was so laid that it will withstand the ravages of the water. As I say, it was proposed to build it up out of the water. Now they are trying to make it a land proposition instead of a water proposition.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will pardon me, of course I was not present at any of the hearings of the gentleman's subcommittee, but it was represented to me by one of the commissioners that the lake had so encroached upon the land that there was danger of destroying the foundations—

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not think that is true.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And that this was absolutely necessary in order to preserve the memorial.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The photographs exhibited by the gentleman who made the presentation to our committee show that there is water all around it. In the high water in the spring there is water all around it, but when the hot weather comes and evaporation removes the water, then it presents an unsightly appearance, because it is a marsh, surrounded by brush and stone, which does not present a very beautiful appearance.

Mr. CHALMERS. I was told by one of the commissioners who made a personal inspection there recently that an examination had been made of the masonry and that he found that it was decomposing and that the water was playing havoc with the structure, and that unless it is protected there is danger to the structure itself. This inspection was made recently.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Nothing of that kind appeared in the evidence. I want to be fair, for I have no prejudice against the thing, but it occurs to me that we would have been derelict in our duty, we would have been absolutely faithless if we had recommended this thing, for there is nothing in the evidence brought out before the committee that would warrant it. Perhaps they were unfortunate in sending down here the gentleman whom they did send to present the matter. I think of all the unsatisfactory presentations I ever listened to, the one made by this man was the worst.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think that if Congress has any idea of making this appropriation it would be better to defer it until another appropriation bill can be offered, when we can have a hearing and a thorough knowledge of the facts? Because, as the gentleman states, there is nothing in the hearing to justify this appropriation.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is my opinion exactly. If the facts warrant the United States in keeping up this monument we ought to do it with full knowledge of the facts. This gentleman did not present them, and did not seem to want to present them if he knew them.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HUSTED. One of the commissioners representing the State of New York came down here on this matter a year or two ago. I remember meeting him and talking with him at that time. He had no interest in the matter, of course, except to see that what was proper in the circumstances was done. He told me that the plan was not for embellishment at all, but that the foundations of this monument had been seriously affected by the action of the water of the lake, and that unless something was done, and done soon, very serious injury, if not entire destruction, of the monument might result. I agree with the gentleman that no action should be taken here when we are apparently in ignorance as to the facts. Nobody here is in a position, apparently, to speak with authority; but if that statement is true, this is a very important matter, because a large amount of money is invested there, and this monument memorializes a most important American victory. If we are not in possession of the facts, I would suggest that the committee take it up at once and inform themselves about it, so that action can be taken in the near future if it is really necessary for the protection of the structure.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I wish to say in answer to the gentleman from New York that there are two projects or items of expense.

The erection of the retaining wall would be the smallest item of expense, but they want to fill in all around the monument and beautify the grounds.

Mr. HUSTED. That is true, and that might be the proper way to do it. The building of the retaining wall only might be effective so far as the protection from the action of the water is concerned.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The building of the retaining wall would not alone remove the unsightly appearance.

Mr. HUSTED. And we would not want to do that.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. But here is the proposition. They ought to come and put their cards on the table and not try to deceive us as to their real purpose.

Mr. HUSTED. They ought to be frank about it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They ought to give some reason why they do not keep faith with the Government, inasmuch as they promised this thing would never cost the Government a cent after it was completed.

Mr. TOWNER. Of course, we have insufficient knowledge at present, but it seems to me that the statement of the gentleman from Indiana and those who have been referred to that the proposition of the monument being put out in the water is utterly impracticable. The statement is made that they are obtaining money to keep it up by charging an admission fee of 25 cents to go into it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They have built a footbridge to lead to it.

Mr. TOWNER. Personally I feel that the proposition is almost self-evident and a foolish one to keep it out in the water or the marsh, and that it should be filled in and a proper wall to support it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. But the gentleman would be in favor of knowing what he was doing before he started on it.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, this monument stands out in the water about 200 feet from the land. It is northeast of Put in Bay, placed there so it can be easily seen from the mainland. Put in Bay is quite a distance from the mainland. It was placed there so it could be seen to best advantage from the direction of the northeast of the island. It could not have been seen from advantage if put on the mainland, so it was placed in the channel, where the sea is quite choppy. Anyone who has ever gone to Put in Bay from Sandusky will find a choppy sea as they pass Marblehead. The ground is filling in between the island and the monument so that it looks badly. There is an approach to it, not only a temporary footbridge but an automobile bridge, so that automobiles can drive up to the monument and around it. It is in a position where the effect of the rough sea is quite pronounced, and there is no doubt in my mind that something has got to be done to protect it from what was unexpected when it was built at that point.

Mr. MADDEN. The act to promote the erection of this memorial, in section 3, provides as follows:

That the making of the appropriation provided for in section 1 of this act shall in no way operate, by implication or otherwise, to require the United States to incur any further debt or obligation in connection with the erection of such memorial or connection with said centennial celebration.

That is the language of the act, and the item would be subject to a point of order if it came before the House.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Whose idea was it that put this monument out in the water?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think primarily it was the idea of the Fine Arts Commission, or the present head of it, who has a penchant for locating monuments in swamps.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will yield, I want to say that General Grosvenor, of Ohio, when a Member of this House, was very active in getting this commission created. There are enough members from the various States, and many of them have an annual pilgrimage, which is paid out of the fund.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, as a general rule I support the Subcommittee on Appropriations which has such matters as this in charge. But in this case it seems to me that the committee erred in not making this appropriation upon the evidence submitted to it. I have been a member of that commission for a number of years. I was appointed during the administration of Governor Harmon. I have never participated, as suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin, in the annual junket.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman had, he would have had some information to give to the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Perhaps I was negligent in not participating in the junket. I have not been there for a number of years, but it was represented to me at the time this was called up before the subcommittee that there was serious danger, unless we had the appropriation, of permanent damage occurring to this memorial. Gentlemen, of course, know the immense value of such a memorial as this, which is understood to be the second largest in the country and perhaps in the world.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman believes in the Budget.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; I believe in the Budget.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not he believe that this should have been estimated for?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Well, the Budget and even the gentleman from Illinois are apt to make mistakes in its and his great efforts and great service for economy. But it seems to me that when the very life and existence of such a memorial as this is menaced true economy would require that it be preserved in time. This memorial is situated 250 feet from the lake, and, as my colleague, Doctor Fess, says, is in a part of the lake that is very apt to be choppy. I have been told by gentlemen that the sea wall itself is disintegrating by the encroachment of the lake. If the sea wall gives way entirely, there is serious danger of damage to the foundations of this memorial.

Mr. FESS. I understand that the Budget did estimate for this appropriation.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I think I am mistaken about that.

Mr. FESS. Of course, it would have been subject to a point of order in the House.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That fact only increases the great regard that I have for the Budget system and its efforts toward true economy. Evidently the Budget believes that this appropriation is in the interest of economy and the preservation of a great public work. I hope the House will recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I quite appreciate the sentiment behind this thing, and it is not an easy matter for your committee to come here and oppose it, but if the committee is to serve the House, if the committee is to give the House the benefit of its judgment, when it does I do not think that judgment should be wiped out by a mere matter of sentiment. According to the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] they have been talking about this thing for three or four years, yet this is the first presentation of it, and just one man came before us. No matter how hard we worked, and we gave him a half day, yet his testimony was so unsatisfactory that there was not a man on the committee who had any faith in what he told us. It is only fair to the Congress and to the committee that we get something upon which we can base a judgment before we make a recommendation carrying such a large appropriation. Therefore I suggest that the motion to insist upon further disagreement be agreed to, and in that way we can obtain more time to get information about the facts in the matter. I will go just as far as anybody when necessity is shown for going, but until this necessity is shown I will declare against this seeming raid on the Treasury. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN].

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, the Perry Memorial is a great architectural achievement, symbolic of great events in our history. It is the voluntary tribute of nine of our greatest States and was presented to the Federal Government. The Federal Government contributed only $250,000 out of a total outlay of $850,000, and, in 1919, the United States took over the custody and control of it. An obligation rests upon us to protect it. It is imperiled by the onslaughts of the sea in the winter season. It is placed on low ground and is liable at any time to be undermined by winter storms and the ice from the lake.

The gentlemen composing the commission having charge of this monument are serving without pay; they are not calling for an appropriation for themselves. They are calling upon the people of the United States to maintain the integrity of this structure and to save it for posterity. They are asking for an appropriation to repair the sea wall, to protect it from the intrusion and erosion of the sea.

I regret that at the time of the hearing I was ill. I am a member of the committee but I was unable to be present. However, I have carefully read the hearings from page 235 to page 245 and I want to say now that the gentlemen who presented this matter to the subcommittee did not receive a fair hearing. Look at the testimony and you will find page after page filled with interjections, interruptions, and heckling. They were not given a chance. The members of the committee did not know where Put in Bay was; they did not seem to know when or where the Battle of Lake Erie was fought. They knew nothing about the great historic event which was the motive of this testimonial. They gave the men coming there, gentlemen serving without pay, no chance whatever for a fair hearing.

This is small, picayune treatment to give so great a proposition. The argument seems to be: "Well, the Government put in $250,000 and these men should have known when they built this structure that it would be subjected to the erosion and attacks of the sea, and to damage by storm." Of course, that is lamp-post reasoning—iron lamp-post reasoning.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Not now. The attitude of the lamp-post is: "Here I stand at the curb—a lamp-post set by the inexorable mandate of the law. Along comes the man, the victim; he staggers and smashes his nose against the post. I might yield a little to save him—I might give way, but no, I can not. I shall not budge, I can not budge—because I am a lamp-post." Mr. Speaker, are we lamp-posts that can not budge? Must we stand as inexorable as an iron lamp-post? Now I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has referred to this as a small, picayune matter. Conceding all that the gentleman has said, which I do not, in respect to the hearing—I was not present at the hearings, not being a member of the subcommittee—conceding that there were interjections, does the gentleman think that it is a very small matter to ask Congress at this time to appropriate $100,000 based upon no facts, on no real genuine information upon which we can intelligently act?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, answering that, if the committee wanted to get the facts they could have gotten them. They got sufficient facts to justify this appropriation, in my opinion, more by far than in other cases where we have appropriated much larger sums.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. However much the contribution of the United States was toward the erection of this memorial, it was given to the United States and was accepted, and we have an investment there, have we not, of $850,000?

Mr. GRIFFIN. No; the Federal Government invested $250,000.

Mr. HUSTED. We contributed $250,000 toward it, but nevertheless, having accepted it, we have a total investment there of $850,000, because it all belongs to the United States.

Mr. GRIFFIN. That is correct.

Mr. HUSTED. And it is simple business judgment, just ordinary business judgment, as well as patriotic duty, to protect the investments of the Government.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I think so. Now, just a moment in answer to one question, as to how the money is to be expended. It was disclosed at the hearings that the filling and grading would cost $24,821; the parking and shrubbery, $15,284; retaining the sea walls, $10,000; facing the upper plaza, $21,360; facing the lower plaza, $27,720. The facts are there, vouched for by men of integrity and responsibility, who are not drawing pay from the United States Government, who are acting solely and wholly as disinterested patriots.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, it ill becomes the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN] to criticize the committee who were here all of the time and heard the evidence in the case, because, although the gentleman is a member of the committee, he was not present at all.

I am quite sure, with his judicial mind and temperament, had he been there and heard the facts as they were adduced and heard the questions to the gentleman who was supposed to have given the facts, he would have been with us in our unanimity in not concurring in this appropriation. I move the previous question on the item.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CHALMERS] makes a preferential motion that the House concur in the Senate amendment. The gentleman from Indiana moves to further disagree to the Senate amendment, and the gentleman from Ohio moves that the House concur in the Senate amendment. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the yeas seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. LONGWORTH) there were—ayes 21, yeas 52.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present, and object to the vote on that ground. I withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

On page 23 of the bill, after line 22 on page 23, insert:

"(16) The Regents of the Smithsonian Institution are authorized to prepare preliminary plans, to be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts, for a suitable fireproof building with granite fronts for the National Gallery of Art, including the National Portrait Gallery, and the history collections of the United States National Museum, said building to be erected when funds from gifts or bequests are in the possession of the said regents, in sections or completely on the north side of the Mall between the Natural History Building, United States National Museum, and Seventh Street, leaving a space between it and the latter of not less than 100 feet and a space of not less than 100 feet between it and Seventh Street, with its south front on a line with the south front of the said Natural History Building."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in this amendment with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WOOD of Indiana: In the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following: "to be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 25. On page 32 of the bill, after line 14, insert: "(25) For installing 15 stories of filing stacks in the interior court of the Pension Office Building, including elevators, lighting system, and foundation, personal services, labor and materials, to be immediately available, $1,000,000, said sum to be disbursed under the direction and supervision of the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its further disagreement to this item. I will state that this is an item proposed by the Senate, which carries an appropriation of $1,000,000, the purpose of which is to build stacks in what now constitutes the court of the Pension Building. To my mind, it is the greatest piece of folly that could be undertaken. The purpose of it may be laudable, to relieve the congested situation in reference to documents, not alone documents in the Pension Department but various other departments that need relief. I will tell you what it means if this thing is undertaken. In the first place, I think it would be a deterrent to the building of an archives building, for if these stacks were put in those who are opposed to an archives building would say, We have expended a million dollars to dispose of old ancient papers; why the necessity of an archives building? But that is the least objectionable feature. Those of you who are familiar with the old Pension Building are familiar with the court there, but you might not be familiar with the character of ground upon which it is placed. It is all filled-in ground. That, too, was once a marsh, and the Pension Building is built squarely over what was known as Tiber River, that seems to have had in its sinuosity the possession of all this town. In order to make the foundation upon which to put these heavy stacks—to be 15 stories in height—you would have to tear up the entire floor space inside of that court; get a pile driver inside and drive down to bedrock. After having done that thing, it would be very questionable as to the character of support you had.

Mr. MADDEN. And to get the machinery in to put in the foundation you would have to tear the side of the building out.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Either have to take the side of the building out or take the roof off and get some sort of a derrick to drop the machinery inside with which to take the dirt out. It is the most impractical proposition I have ever heard of.

Mr. MADDEN. Nobody has made any plans, have they?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There have never been any complete plans submitted. They have no plan or specification in reference to the foundation or excavation.

Mr. MADDEN. This million dollars' worth of steel weighs a good deal, and you would have to have a real foundation.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think so. I think Senator UNDERWOOD expressed the whole fact when he said that it would be just simply putting an addition to a fire box. That building is not fireproof, and, indeed, they have already had two or three fires there. The roof is not fireproof. The sheathing is pine; the floors in the top stories are pine; the shelving is all pine; and it is a mistake to say this would be a fireproof building, and it would be the greatest mistake in the world to put these valuable papers in there upon the assumption that it would be fireproof. That is not all. I think no one would have proposed a thing of this character 25 years ago when the soldier of the Civil War was still in his prime. That building is a shrine and monument built to the old soldier, and no hand should desecrate it or despoil it.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will yield.

Mr. McKENZIE. In addition to the appropriation of $1,000,000, is it not a fact the expense and delay to the Pension Office would be far beyond the million dollars; and, in addition to that, when you get through you will have to repair the Pension Office Building, and, as a matter of fact, the Government would lose $2,000,000 during the progress of the work, which would be an absolute waste?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is true; and after you have done this thing you will have destroyed, in large part, the utility of this building.

For if you take and build these steel stacks 15 stories high clear to the roof, as proposed, you will find that it will destroy in large measure the light and ventilation to all the offices abutting on the court. In addition, while you are having your pile drivers and excavating machines there, turning loose all the gases and poisons that have gathered in that soil all these years, I do not know what would happen to the clerks working in this building. To my mind, it is the most impracticable proposition that I ever heard of.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Who is the genius that suggested this very novel idea?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know who the genius was that suggested it, but it was proposed by a Senator on the other side.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do you know the gentleman's name?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; nor could I tell you his age. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 29. Page 33, after line 16, insert:

"DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE BUILDING.

"The responsibility for the care, maintenance, and protection of the Department of Commerce Building and the disbursement of the funds appropriated therefor, together with all the machinery, tools, equipment, and supplies used, or for use, in connection therewith, shall be transferred on July 1, 1923, and thereafter from the Secretary of Commerce to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings.

"Department of Commerce Building—Salaries for the following employees for maintenance and protection: Engineer and electrician, $1,400; carpenter, $1,000; electrician, $1,000; 3 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 5 guards, at $720 each; 3 firemen, at $720 each; assistant forewoman, $720; 21 laborers, at $660 each; toilet attendant, $480; in all, $26,380.

"For fuel, lights, repairs, miscellaneous items, uniforms for guards, and printing, $18,650: Provided, That amounts aggregating $51,500 of the appropriations made to the Department of Commerce for the fiscal year 1924 for care, maintenance, protection, fuel, light, etc., for the Department of Commerce Building are hereby transferred to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings and made available to the extent of $45,030 for payment of the salaries and expenses herein set forth, and the remainder ($6,470) shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of the surplus fund."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House recede and concur with an amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD of Indiana: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE BUILDING.

"The responsibility for the care, maintenance, and protection of the building or buildings occupied by the Department of Commerce in the District of Columbia and the disbursement of the funds appropriated therefor, together with all the machinery, tools, equipment, and supplies used or for use in connection therewith, shall be transferred on July 1, 1923, from the Secretary of Commerce to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings.

"Department of Commerce Building—Salaries for the following employees for maintenance and protection: Engineer and electrician, $1,400; carpenter, $1,000; electrician, $1,000; 3 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 5 guards, at $720 each; 3 firemen, at $720 each; assistant forewoman, $720; 21 laborers, at $660 each; toilet attendant, $480; in all, $26,380.

"For fuel, lights, repairs, miscellaneous items, and printing, $18,650: Provided, That amounts aggregating $51,500 of the appropriations made to the Department of Commerce for the fiscal year 1924 for care, maintenance, protection, fuel, light, etc., for the Department of Commerce Building are hereby transferred to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings and made available to the extent of $45,030 for payment of the salaries and expenses herein set forth, and the remainder ($6,470) shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of the surplus fund."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I will state that the only change that is being proposed by the House to the Senate amendment is to make it applicable not only to the building occupied by this department, but to such other buildings as they may possibly occupy. I will state that under this arrangement and by reason of the rearrangement in the control of these buildings the control of the Department of Commerce Building and other buildings was taken away from separate control and was given to the control of the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, and this has resulted in a very material saving in each one of these cases. In the case of this building alone a saving of several thousand dollars has been made.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. If this amendment transferring the superintendence of these various buildings to the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds is carried, what buildings will not be under the supervision of the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Comparatively few. He will have, in addition to those he now has—and he has the Interior Department Building, the Department of Commerce Building, the Pension Office Building, the Patent Office Building, the Munitions Building, and the State, War, and Navy Building.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought it would be easier to enumerate the exceptions than enumerate those he has already. Is it the plan to have the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds in charge of all the public buildings except those now under the charge of the Architect of the Capitol?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. In the case of the Interior Department Building alone we saved about $80,000 last year.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is my impression that the Department of Agriculture buildings should be excepted; there are so many of those buildings.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does this mean the elimination of this great number of guards and custodians that they have hanging around these buildings, whom you meet and fall over when you are going into one of those buildings for the transaction of business?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. That is one of the effects. They have been reducing the number of those useless watchmen by one-third at least.

Mr. BRIGGS. These buildings seem to be overrun with employees in uniform, who simply ask you when you go in the door, "What do you want?"

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; they overexert themselves in doing that. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRIGGS. They ought to be cut out.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I notice you except the buildings outside the District of Columbia. Is it the policy to include buildings not only in the District of Columbia but outside the District?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It would be hard to do that with those outside of the District because of their not coming under the personal supervision of the superintendent. He could not be everywhere. For instance, we now have a superintendent of buildings in New York City, but so far as the control is concerned it may eventually result in bringing them under this man.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. That is what I had in mind, that the consolidation might be coextensive with the country, and this particular gentleman here could attend to duties outside of the District of Columbia through subordinates of his own.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. I think it would be a splendid thing to do. Our experience last year showed that the sum of $80,000 could be saved in the care of the Interior Department Building, so that I think it would be a good thing to do.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 30. Page 34, after line 18, insert:

"DEPARTMENT OF LABOR BUILDING.

"The responsibility for the care, maintenance, and protection of the Department of Labor Building, and the disbursement of the funds appropriated therefor, together with all the machinery, tools, equipment, and supplies used, or for use, in connection therewith, shall be transferred on July 1, 1923, and thereafter from the Secretary of Labor to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings.

"Department of Labor Building—Salaries: For the following employees, for maintenance and protection: Engineer, $1,200; general mechanic, $840; 3 elevator conductors at $720 each; 3 firemen at $720 each; 4 guards at $720 each; 12 laborers at $660 each; toilet attendant, $480; in all, $17,640.

"For fuel, lights, repairs, miscellaneous items, uniforms for guards, and printing, $9,000: Provided, That amounts aggregating $33,300 of the appropriations made to the Department of Labor for the fiscal year 1924 for care, maintenance, protection, fuel, light, etc., for the Department of Labor Building are hereby transferred to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings and made available to the extent of $26,640 for payment of the salaries and expenses herein set forth, and the remainder ($6,660) shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of the surplus fund."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD of Indiana: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"DEPARTMENT OF LABOR BUILDING.

"The responsibility for the care, maintenance, and protection of the building or buildings occupied by the Department of Labor, in the District of Columbia, and the disbursement of the funds appropriated therefor, together with all the machinery, tools, equipment, and supplies used or for use in connection therewith shall be transferred on July 1, 1923, from the Secretary of Labor to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings.

"Department of Labor Building—Salaries: For the following employees, for maintenance and protection: Engineer, $1,200; general mechanic, $840; 3 elevator conductors at $720 each; 3 firemen at $720 each; 4 guards at $720 each; 12 laborers at $660 each; toilet attendant, $480; in all, $17,640.

"For fuel, lights, repairs, miscellaneous items, and printing, $9,000: Provided, That amounts aggregating $33,300 of the appropriations made to the Department of Labor for the fiscal year 1924 for care, maintenance, protection, fuel, light, etc., for the Department of Labor Building are hereby transferred to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings, and made available to the extent of $26,640 for payment of the salaries and expenses herein set forth, and the remainder ($6,660) shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of the surplus fund."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. How many employees additional to those authorized in the present law does this provide for?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It provides for less. The fact is that this consolidation has resulted in a reduction of practically one-third of those who were employed before.

Mr. BLANTON. These various positions mentioned in the amendment of the gentleman are positions that are already in force, are they?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. This is simply a rearrangement and transfer, and by reason of this change placing these buildings under the supervision of the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, the force employed before to look after these buildings has been reduced at least one-third.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not notice anywhere else in the bill where the force has been reduced.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We are doing it with reference to each one of the buildings considered in this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. You are doing it as to all of them?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. I will state that the purpose of this amendment is to accomplish what was done by the other amendment. It is made to apply to the buildings that they occupy, instead of "building," as stated in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that the House recede and concur, with the amendment which has been reported.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

WARDMAN-JUSTICE BUILDING.

The responsibility for the care, maintenance, and protection of the Wardman-Justice Building, and the disbursement of the funds appropriated therefor, together with all the machinery, tools, equipment, and supplies used, or for use, in connection therewith, shall be transferred on July 1, 1923, and thereafter from the United States Attorney General to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings.

Wardman-Justice Building—Salaries: For the following employees, for maintenance and protection: Engineer, $1,200; electrician, $1,000; carpenter, $1,000; 3 firemen, at $720 each; 5 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 5 guards, at $720 each; 15 laborers, at $660 each; toilet attendant, $480; in all, $22,940.

For fuel, lights, repairs, miscellaneous items, uniforms for guards, and printing, $11,000: Provided, That amounts aggregating $42,550 of the appropriations made to the Department of Justice for the fiscal year 1924 for care, maintenance, protection, fuel, light, etc., for the Wardman-Justice Building are hereby transferred to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings and made available to the extent of $33,940 for payment of the salaries and expenses herein set forth, and the remainder ($8,610) shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of the surplus fund.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur, with the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment 31 and agree with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE BUILDING.

"The responsibility for the care, maintenance, and protection of the building or buildings occupied by the Department of Justice in the District of Columbia and the disbursement of the funds appropriated therefor, together with all the machinery, tools, equipment, and supplies used, or for use, in connection therewith, shall be transferred on July 1, 1923, from the United States Attorney General to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings.

"Department of Justice Building—Salaries: For the following employees, for maintenance and protection: Engineer, $1,200; electrician, $1,000; carpenter, $1,000; 3 firemen, at $720 each; 5 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 5 guards, at $720 each; 15 laborers, at $660 each; toilet attendant, $480; in all, $22,940.

"For fuel, lights, repairs, miscellaneous items, and printing, $11,000: Provided, That amounts aggregating $42,550 of the appropriations made to the Department of Justice for the fiscal year 1924 for care, maintenance, protection, fuel, light, etc., for the Department of Justice Building are hereby transferred to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings and made available to the extent of $33,940 for payment of the salaries and expenses herein set forth, and the remainder ($8,610) shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of the surplus fund."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I will say that the Senate amendment calls this the "Wardman-Justice Building" and my amendment calls it the "Department of Justice Building." In other respects, it conforms exactly to the other amendments with respect to these buildings.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, that the House recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION BUILDING.

The responsibility for the care, maintenance, and protection of the Civil Service Commission Building, and the disbursement of the funds appropriated therefor, together with all the machinery, tools, equipment, and supplies used, or for use, in connection therewith, shall be transferred on July 1, 1923, and thereafter, from the United States Civil Service Commission to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings.

Civil Service Commission Building—Salaries: For the following employees, for maintenance and protection: Carpenter, $1,000; general mechanic, $840; 2 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 3 guards, at $720 each; 4 laborers, at $660 each; toilet attendant, $480; in all, $8,560; for fuel, lights, repairs, miscellaneous items, uniforms for guards, and printing, $4,000; in all, $12,560, which sum is hereby appropriated.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur, with the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment 32 and to concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION BUILDING.

"The responsibility for the care, maintenance, and protection of the building or buildings occupied by the Civil Service Commission, in the District of Columbia, and the disbursement of the funds appropriated therefor, together with all the machinery, tools, equipment, and supplies used, or for use, in connection therewith, shall be transferred on July 1, 1923, from the United States Civil Service Commission to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings.

Civil Service Commission Building—Salaries: For the following employees, for maintenance and protection: Carpenter, $1,000; general mechanic, $840; 2 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 3 guards, at $720 each; 4 laborers, at $660 each; toilet attendant, $480; in all, $8,560; for fuel, lights, repairs, miscellaneous items, and printing, $4,000; in all, $12,560, which sum is hereby appropriated."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the only change in this amendment is that it includes "buildings" instead of "building," and then it conforms exactly to the other amendments of this kind.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that the House recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION BUILDING.

The responsibility for the care, maintenance, and protection of the Interstate Commerce Commission Building and the disbursement of the funds appropriated therefor, together with all the machinery, tools, equipment, and supplies used, or for use, in connection therewith, shall be transferred on July 1, 1923, and thereafter from the Interstate Commerce Commission to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings.

Interstate Commerce Building—Salaries: For the following employees, for maintenance and protection: Assistant superintendent, $2,000; engineer, $1,600; electrician, $1,600; carpenter, $1,400; 3 firemen at $840 each; 6 elevator conductors at $720 each; 5 guards at $720 each; assistant foreman, $1,000; assistant forewoman, $720; 24 laborers at $660 each; toilet attendant, $480; for fuel, lights, repairs, miscellaneous items, uniforms for guards, and printing, $19,000; in all, $54,080, which sum is hereby appropriated.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House recede from its disagreement to amendment 33 and agree to the same with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION BUILDING.

"The responsibility for the care, maintenance, and protection of the building or buildings occupied by the Interstate Commerce Commission in the District of Columbia and the disbursement of the funds appropriated therefor, together with all the machinery, tools, equipment, and supplies used, or for use, in connection therewith, shall be transferred on July 1, 1923, from the Interstate Commerce Commission to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings.

"Interstate Commerce Building—Salaries: For the following employees, for maintenance and protection: Assistant superintendent, $2,000; engineer, $1,600; electrician, $1,600; carpenter, $1,400; 3 firemen at $840 each; 6 elevator conductors at $720 each; 5 guards at $720 each; assistant foreman, $1,000; assistant forewoman, $720; 24 laborers at $660 each; toilet attendant, $480; for fuel, lights, repairs, miscellaneous items, and printing, $19,000; in all, $54,080, which sum is hereby appropriated."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the only change made in this as compared with the amendment proposed by the Senate is to include buildings instead of building. In other respects it conforms.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that the House recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recur to amendments 3, 5, 6, and 7, and that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House recede and concur in Senate amendments 3, 5, 6, and 7.

The motion was agreed to.

SINKING FUNDS FOR BONDS AND NOTES.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of H. R. 13827, relating to the sinking fund for bonds and notes of the United States.

Mr. GARNER. Is this the bill that we had up yesterday?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The same one that we started on yesterday.

The motion of Mr. GREEN of Iowa was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13827) relating to the sinking fund for bonds and notes of the United States, with Mr. HUSTED in the chair.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, after the discussion of such a complicated bill as the one with reference to the exchange of property that we had before the committee on yesterday it is somewhat of a relief to come to so simple a proposition as is presented by this bill.

The Victory loan act, which became a law March 3, 1919, created a sinking fund for the retirement of bonds and notes issued under the first, second, third, and fourth Liberty bond acts and under that act and outstanding on July 1, 1920.

Just exactly why that date, July 1, 1920, was put in the act no one can say. I was there taking part in the proceedings at the time the bill was framed in committee, and I can not remember that any reference was ever made to that date or any reason was given why it should be inserted in the law. But the effect of this provision is that the Treasury can not apply the sinking fund to bonds or notes issued since that date to refund Victory notes which mature in May. There are several issues of Treasury notes maturing in 1924, 1925, and 1926 that total approximately $3,160,000,000. There is also an issue of 4½ per cent Treasury bonds of 1927 and 1952 in an amount of probably something like $765,000,000 that have already been issued.

Now, it is quite apparent that circumstances might arise in which it would be for the best interests of the Treasury to use the sinking funds to retire the early maturing issues of refunding notes. It could not be done as the law now stands. This bill is introduced for the purpose of permitting that to be done, and it extends the application of the sinking fund to all bonds issued for refunding the bonds included in the present act.

The Secretary of the Treasury has written a letter recommending the passage of the bill, which I will ask the Clerk to read in my time, so far as it is contained in the report on the bill. Before reading it I will say that there is a typographical error in the report on page 2, line 6, where the words "apply the" should be inserted after the word "to" and before "sinking."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

If the law is not changed in substantially this way the sinking fund will soon apply only to Liberty bonds, for it does not cover Treasury notes or Treasury bonds or other refunding issues, and all the Victory notes will have matured by May 20, 1923. This would create an unfortunate situation and one that might be embarrassing to the Government, for conditions are likely to arise in which it would be difficult or even impossible to purchase Liberty bonds for the sinking fund at an average cost not exceeding par and accrued interest or where it might be advisable for the Treasury, particularly in years when other issues of bonds or notes were maturing, to apply the sinking fund to these maturing issues, or other early maturing issues, rather than to the longer-term Liberty bonds. The early maturing issues ordinarily press most heavily on the market and it is usually the best policy, from the point of view of the Government bond market as a whole, to apply the sinking-fund buying power to the bonds and notes of early maturity. Unless the law is amended, however, the Treasury will have no freedom of action and might have to use the sinking fund to retire Liberty bonds even though ordinary prudence would dictate some other course, or might even have to suspend the sinking fund owing to inability to purchase Liberty bonds in the market within the limitation as to cost. In order to avoid these possibilities it would be most helpful if the proposed amendment to the law could be adopted at the present session of Congress.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The sinking fund was not created until after the Liberty bonds had all been issued. It was not created for the benefit of the bondholders but for the purpose of providing a fund which in the course of time would entirely extinguish the public debt.

Mr. GARNER. Thirty years.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Texas says 30 years, and I think he is right. The amount appropriated in each year varies. For the last year, the fiscal year of 1924, it is about $300,000,000—I think, to be exact, $298,785,000. The sinking fund of course can only be used to reduce the debt of the United States. I have been unable to see at any time how there could be any ground for opposition to this bill; and while the gentleman from Texas, who at one time objected to it—I supposed he had come to the conclusion that it ought to pass, but in some remarks he made last evening he indicated otherwise. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, if I thought that it was necessary to the proper functioning of the Treasury Department, I would not hesitate to support this proposed amendment to the law. I asked the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury if there would be any great inconvenience to the Government in case we fail to pass this law at this time, in view of the fact that the entire internal revenue law might be changed or modified or revised in the next regular session of Congress. He said he did not think so, but there might be a time when the Treasury Department could not purchase Liberty bonds by reason of the fact that they were selling above par. In that condition of affairs the Government would have to keep the money in the Treasury, unexpended. But we all realize that we carry from two to four hundred million dollars as a daily balance in the Treasury. This amount is all carried as one fund, though, of course, it may be spent in the payment of many items which have been appropriated for.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. That means a balance under the general fund in the Treasury. Since the last day of September, 1915, they have given the net balance running into the millions and then in a footnote they say to the credit of the disbursing officers an amount which would exhaust the net balance by several million dollars.

Mr. GARNER. That criticism has been made a number of times. Under the present conditions they carry from $200,000,000 to $400,000,000 balance. I do not know whether the Secretary of the Treasury is trying to mislead anybody or not.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I am not talking about trying to mislead anybody. I am calling attention to the form in which the statement of accounts has been running.

Mr. GARNER. Unless they have changed that system of bookkeeping, it is calculated to mislead the public.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. They never ought to have allowed it to go into existence. How long since the last change was made? I was up there three or four days ago and talking with the chief of the division of bookkeeping and warrants, and he did not indicate any change.

Mr. GARNER. There is from $200,000,000 to $400,000,000 daily balance in the Treasury. That can be composed of the sinking fund as well as any other fund, because, as I say, there is but one fund in the Treasury of the United States. A great many gentlemen think that there are separate funds and that you have to keep this particular fund in this particular place and in this particular book, and so forth. I was doubtful about that. I made the statement that you could with this sinking fund, or with the receipts from Victory notes issued last month, buy anything from a match box to a battleship, provided it had been appropriated for by Congress. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] disputed it. I took it upon myself to go to the Treasury Department the next morning, and I interviewed Mr. Gilbert, Assistant Secretary. He said there is but one fund in the Treasury. I know that Mr. McAdoo told me the same thing. So far as I could ascertain from these statements, there was but one balance, and that balance was of all the funds received in the Treasury; it made no difference from what source, whether receipts from customs, internal revenue, the sale of bonds, or whatever it may be. They all went into one fund; so that it is very easy, even if on account of market conditions the Treasury Department could not take up Liberty bonds with the sinking fund, to carry it in the general fund.

There is another thing which I want to speak about briefly, and that is this: The Republican leaders, from the President down, are trying to show that the receipts in the Treasury Department are equal to the expenditures, and they probably are. But what about the source of the receipts? The receipts are composed of money received from more sources than taxation; that is to say, are not entirely composed of receipts from taxation. You voted and I voted and the balance of us voted for many appropriations during the war to make loans which represented a capital investment, such as railroad securities, which are now owned by the Government; also ships, war material, and so forth. What are you Republicans doing? You are selling them, using the money thus received for daily business, instead of retiring Liberty bonds, proceeds of which were used to make such loans, make such purchases, and so forth. Do you believe that is good business policy? I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], because they are both shining examples of Republicanism. I ask you gentlemen if you believe it is good business policy? Do you believe that the business element of the country would indorse the policy of selling capital assets of the Government and using them to meet daily expenditures?

The President the other day wrote to the Budget organization and stated that the administration had cut the deficit down to $92,000,000. Incidentally he told you that the receipts from taxes—remember, from taxes—are less than they were last year. He did not mention that the administration had sold over $300,000,000 of capital assets since July 1 of this fiscal year. Proceeds received from sale of these capital assets ought to have been used to take up bonds for which they were issued.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Is it not a fact that bonds were retired to the extent of over a billion and a half last year?

Mr. GARNER. It is not.

Mr. McFADDEN. What was the amount that was retired?

Mr. GARNER. The indebtedness of this Nation to-day, as compared with the indebtedness of last year, is what?

Mr. McFADDEN. It is something like $23,000,000,000 or $24,000,000,000.

Mr. GARNER. I said in comparison with a year ago.

Mr. McFADDEN. I have not the figures before me. I know that a large amount of Liberty bonds have been taken up.

Mr. GARNER. You say that you retired a billion and a half of bonds. Certainly you did if you mean by that statement to include certificates of indebtedness, and then you issued a billion and three-quarters more to retire them with. That is how you retired them. I retire my note by giving a new note. I have seen a fellow settle in that way many times, but that does not mean that you are paying off the debt. You are selling the assets of the country and using them for paying the daily expenses of the Government. That is what I object to.

When the President wants to make an argument against the bonus he says that we have a deficit of $700,000,000, along in October, I believe it was, but along in December when the law requires him to tell the Congress what the deficit is and at the same time recommend taxation, the President says there is a deficit of only $273,000,000. Of course, if he were not going to use the capital assets, proceeds from the railroad bonds, the farm loan bonds, if he were not going to put them on the market and use them in the Treasury for the payment of daily expenditures, then the deficit would be a great deal more than the President has said. He did not mention that he was going to do that when he was telling Congress that he could not afford to approve the bonus bill. But after the bonus bill has gone by, he then takes the capital assets and puts them into the daily balance and the result is that he cuts the deficit down to $273,000,000. Gentlemen will remember that when we first talked about the bonus I suggested that if it was going to be passed and become a law, it ought to be paid out of the money received from foreign debts.

I think it can be said that the Democratic Party took that view because that view was emphasized in the House and Senate by Democratic leaders, and it comes as near being the Democratic view as could be at that time.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. GARNER. I will.

Mr. FESS. Does not the authority under which the loan was made to Europe also require that the payment shall go to the liquidation of the public debt; in other words, could not go to the purpose the gentleman mentioned without a change of law?

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman from Ohio is such a stickler for the letter of the law, he ought certainly to oppose this pending bill and make sacred, as far as he can, the sinking fund, but I doubt whether the gentleman from Ohio is such a stickler for the law as one might judge from his question. It has been suggested in certain quarters that the bonus bill should be made a part of the bill which is to provide acceptance of the British debt settlement terms. I understand it seems agreeable to most administration leaders except the President himself.

Mr. MANSFIELD. And Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GARNER. Perhaps so. But the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] will be for this proposed amendment, which has for its purpose the purchase and retirement, not only of the long-term obligations of the United States, but also of the short-term obligations. This morning the press reports show that something over $2,000,000,000 was raised by taxes alone last year and paid into the Treasury. Now, will any gentleman say that is sufficient to run the Government? I hope Mr. BYRNS, of the Appropriations Committee, some time will take up the question in his committee and find out exactly what it costs to maintain the Government for the present fiscal year and the exact receipts from taxes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The sale of surplus war supplies, it is estimated, will amount to about $80,000,000.

Mr. GARNER. Not only that, but we have sold $85,000,000 in the last four months of railroad securities. So no wonder the President can write a letter to the Bureau of the Budget and tell them that we have cut the deficit down. He did not do it. He did not do as the law requires to be done. The law says that when he transmits the Budget to the Congress he shall at the same time recommend the method by which any deficit shown in the estimates shall be raised. He did not do it, so that he is among the first to breach the Budget law; and he will be estopped, I imagine, in the future from saying that the Congress in some way is not keeping good faith with the Budget law. The Budget law says if there is a deficit it is the duty of the President of the United States to recommend to the Congress a method by which it can be met. The President did not follow the law. He ought to have done it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is propounding some most extraordinary financial ideas. How would the gentleman define the sinking fund; what does he take it to be?

Mr. GARNER. I have the idea the sinking fund is for the purpose of taking up bonds.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But I wanted to know whether the gentleman thinks it is an asset or a liability?

Mr. GARNER. I think it is certainly an asset when it is used to protect our bonds and take them up.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman seems to be—

Mr. GARNER. I will let the gentleman tell me what it is.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The sinking fund is not money in the Treasury. The sinking fund is a law providing for an appropriation which takes money out of the Treasury.

Mr. GARNER. I understand that, and if you use the sinking fund as you ought to, you would not have it in your daily balance.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. You can not use it in any other way. You can not help having it in your daily balance.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think this matter of a correct definition of our supposed sinking fund is rather an important question. As I understand the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], he says this sinking fund is merely a theoretical authorization. Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; it is an actual appropriation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman has said that the sinking fund was a law authorizing certain things to be done.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Exactly. The law makes the appropriation for a certain amount to be paid out of the Treasury each year.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In other words, the sinking fund is merely a statute, and does not represent actual money?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. You have to have a fund for the law to operate with. Do you not think that when the law is executed it takes from the assets? Does it not?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Has the gentleman read the sinking fund act?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Here is the language of the act: "So much is appropriated out of any funds not otherwise appropriated for the following purposes," and then it states the amount.

Mr. GARNER. I am glad the gentleman from Iowa has shown to the committee what knowledge he has on the sinking fund.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I know what the law is.

Mr. GARNER. Usually you can understand exactly what is the situation from the statements of the gentleman from Iowa. As I said a while ago, the sinking fund was or is $300,000,000, which is to be applied to purchasing and retiring outstanding bonds; $300,000,000 to be taken up this year and $300,000,000 next year, we will say, and in that way at the end of 30 years the public debt will be extinguished. But the administration is not doing that. They want this law changed so that they will continue not to do that, and allow the President and his party to say to the country "We are getting money sufficient now to run the Government; therefore we do not need any more taxes, although the ablest man, probably in the Republican party, Mr. Penrose, now deceased, told the country when you passed the last internal revenue act that it would be $700,000,000 short of the amount required, and that Congress would have to revise and increase it in a year to meet the expected deficit."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Previous to the new law creating the sinking fund, is the gentleman prepared to say that the money was actually appropriated for the sinking fund?

Mr. GARNER. Not until the law required it to be done. The law authorizing the issuance of the Victory notes required it to be done; required that they should carry 2½ per cent to the sinking fund. What for? To take up those bonds. It required them to do that. You have not done it. You do not intend to do it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Texas does not mean to make such a statement as that?

Mr. GARNER. Well, if they have, I have not heard of it. How much have they taken up?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I can not state exactly the amount.

Mr. GARNER. You do not seem to know it. You know that argument that was made when the law was passed that we buy Liberty bonds in order to keep the price of the bonds up. Mr. Gilbert, Undersecretary of the Treasury, said the other day that the Treasury Department was using this money to buy Victory notes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does this particular bill do anything more than extend the use of the sinking fund to the bonds issued under acts heretofore passed?

Mr. GARNER. Oh, no; it does not do anything more.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Nothing more than that?

Mr. GARNER. No.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I agree with you.

Mr. GARNER. If you administered this law in the spirit in which it ought to be administered this act would do no harm, but you do not intend to do it. That is what I am complaining about.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman's argument, then, is not against this particular bill?

Mr. GARNER. I am arguing against the administration of the law. After the 1st day of May Liberty bonds will have to be purchased if this proposed amendment does not become a law.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I wanted to know what the gentleman's argument was. I find he is not speaking against this bill, but against the way the law is administered. Otherwise he is satisfied with the situation.

Mr. GARNER. The law ought to force the administration to take up the Liberty bonds after May and retire them, as the law now requires, to take up $300,000,000 a year. But the present way of doing things is only in harmony with the administration's general policy of ignoring the law.

Take this Foreign Debt Commission. I have read this statement; it is significant; it may not be true; but I read it for what it is worth, because it comes in the form of a dispatch from Manchester, England, under date of January 31, in which Ambassador George Harvey is quoted. I read:

HARVEY TELLS BRITISH HARDING WILL RUN AGAIN IN 1924.

[By International News Service.]

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, January 31.—George Harvey, American ambassador to England, has informed Premier A. Bonar Law that Britain's interests would be best served by accepting the American terms for funding of the British war debt, but that President Harding, if re-elected, "would reopen negotiations after the 1924 election," the Manchester Guardian stated to-day.

That comes from a high source, a newspaper of high standing. That comes from the Manchester Guardian, which, as I understand, is one of the leading newspapers of England. It may be incorrect. Mr. Harvey may not have said what he is quoted as saying, and if he did say it, he may not have known just what he was talking about; but he had just left this country, and he had been a guest at the White House, and he was acquainted with the President's attitude. I undertake to say what I have said heretofore, that it is the purpose of certain elements in this country—

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. In just a moment. It is the purpose of certain elements in this country to work for the remission of the entire debt, and that is what is meant when Mr. Harvey told Mr. Bonar Law, "You settle on the basis we suggest now. We will reelect President Harding in 1924, and we will open up the question again and attend to business with you along lines more desirable."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I trust the gentleman will vote to report the bill which I assume will shortly be introduced accepting these terms as proposed, and that will close out the question of reopening.

Mr. GARNER. I will have to see what that bill is first. I never swallow a hook until I see how many barbs it has on it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. There is no question of the passage of that bill unless its passage is hindered by some persons who desire to prevent this settlement of the question.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, I suppose there is no question of its passage. I think you have got the skates greased so you can put it through.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. In just a moment. I believe that is the policy which the President of the United States would like to follow. I remember, two weeks ago Monday, at the time the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] and others were being consulted about the methods to be used to settle this debt, what additional conditions could be given the Debt Commission, I got 10 minutes on the floor of the House and succeeded in smoking out the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] and other gentlemen, and succeeded in getting them to say that they did not intend to take their hands off of this debt, this money belonging to the people; and the result, as I understand from press reports, is that Mr. Stanley Baldwin, Chancellor of the Exchequer, went back to Europe and said, "The whole thing is in the hands of Congress, and therefore I can not do anything; they are politicians."

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman charge the administration with bad faith in conducting its negotiations with the British Government in trying to settle this debt so as to have in practical collectible form the indebtedness of the British Government and the amount that they are owing us?

Mr. GARNER. No; I do not charge bad faith to the British Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman charge bad faith to the American Government?

Mr. GARNER. You said the British Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I said the administration.

Mr. GARNER. I do not charge that there was bad faith to the British Government, but there was bad faith to the American people.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was there bad faith in the administration attempting to settle on practical and sound terms with the only Government that is able and willing to pay its debts?

Mr. GARNER. I say that the administration in dealing with the foreign debt up to this time has not kept faith with the American people. It has kept faith with the English people.

Mr. BEEDY. State how, please.

Mr. GARNER. When we passed the law to let England have the money we told her the terms on which we would let her have it. We said, "We do not want to make one dollar out of you. We are going to let you have this money just exactly on the terms that our people are letting us have it, and our people are making the sacrifice."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. No; not now. I am going to make this statement about our obligation to England and to our own people. That is what we said. We discussed it, the gentleman from Ohio and myself and others around the committee table. We said, "We will just charge them exactly what we pay our own people." That was fair, was it not? Do you think that was fair?

Mr. BEEDY. Under the conditions then existing; yes.

Mr. GARNER. That is another apology—"under the conditions then existing."

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Certainly.

Mr. BEEDY. Does the gentleman not believe that governments like business men must regulate their affairs to meet the exigencies of the times?

Mr. GARNER. I agree.

Mr. BEEDY. Very well, and that is precisely what the present administration is attempting to do with the foreign debt, as far as England is concerned.

Mr. GARNER. And if your administration had kept good faith with the American people the President would have come back to Congress and got permission before any settlement was made. But you made the settlement first and then put us in a hole where we must either vote for this settlement, which we did not authorize the administration to make, or else we must repudiate it altogether. That is hard to do. What your administration ought to have done in keeping good faith with the people through its Representatives was to come to this House and the Senate and say, "Gentlemen, here is what we want you to authorize us to do." Then we could have considered the whole question whether we would do it or not. Instead of that you settled on terms different from those which the Representatives of the American people told you to settle on. Now you come back and say, "If you do not settle on the basis of the agreement we have made, you have to repudiate the administration and not deal fairly with England and the other countries, and you are trying to destroy them economically."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman says, and he says correctly, that when we made that original loan to the British Government we provided the terms and conditions on which England should settle, to wit, precisely the terms and conditions on which the American people settled.

Mr. GARNER. Exactly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Now the gentleman admitted the other day that his Democratic administration had absolutely violated that law.

Mr. GARNER. I will tell the gentleman how they violated it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. All right.

Mr. GARNER. We got our money at 3½, 4, and 4½ per cent, and the Democratic administration made a rate of 5 per cent to the foreign government borrowers.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And never got a cent of it, did they?

Mr. GARNER. Yes; they have.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Never a cent up until a few months ago.

Mr. GARNER. They have paid in $185,000,000.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Lately—under this administration.

Mr. GARNER. And they paid it at 5 per cent.

Mr. LONGWORTH. They did not at all.

Mr. GARNER. Yes; they did. They paid on a 5 per cent basis.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Your administration never got them to pay a cent.

Mr. GARNER. Instead of violating our faith with the American people we made the foreign governments pay more than the American people paid.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Your 5 per cent was a pure bluff, because you never received a cent from France or Great Britain; not a cent.

Mr. GARNER. The Democratic administration made these conditions on behalf of the American people and not at the expense of the American people.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Is it to be expected that England would pay when she has been encouraged to believe that if she refuses to pay on the old terms she can do better? Is not that encouragement to make default?

Mr. GARNER. Well, it looks very strange to me, I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas, that we are so anxious to rehabilitate European nations that we are willing at this time to make a contract for 62 years based on a rate of interest which we do not know how will compare with the interest rate in 10 years from now. I think myself that it would have been proper for the debt commission to have made a temporary arrangement with these foreign countries with the understanding that, with a clause in the contract, if you please, that later on if we could get money at a cheaper rate we would let them have it at a cheaper rate. I do not want to make one dollar out of England. I do not want the American people to be put in the attitude of making one dollar, but, gentlemen, I am not authorized as a representative of my people to give England one dollar. [Applause.] There is the difference. I undertake to say that you are not authorized as the representatives of the people to give one dollar of the American people's money until you have had a commission to do so through the electorate of this country.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. How much have we given England; and if any, by what means?

Mr. GARNER. We have not given her anything yet, but it looks as if we are going to do it or repudiate the terms agreed upon by the Debt Commission. The question is a serious and momentous one, and that is the reason why I have taken the liberty to refer to it at this time. The proposition may well receive the thoughtful consideration of every Member of the House. It is a real responsibility which we will be called upon to discharge. I again return to a discussion of the fiscal policy of the Treasury. They ought not to use the sinking fund for daily transactions. When railroad securities bought with money borrowed from the American people are sold, you ought to take up an equal amount of outstanding Liberty bonds, because it is proceeds of capital assets and not taxes to run the Government. You have heard Republican Members of the House and Senate criticize England, you have heard them criticize France, you have heard them criticize Italy, you have heard them criticize Germany, because their budgets do not balance. You have heard them criticized because they do not levy taxes enough to run the government. We are $700,000,000 short of balancing our Budget—six or seven hundred million dollars less in taxes than the annual expenses of the Government. We have not balanced our Budget and we ought to balance it. The American people want it balanced. They believe that you are balancing it. You are trying to make them believe it by using capital assets of the country in paying current expenses, and you ought not to do it.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I always listen to the gentleman from Texas with a good deal of interest. Will he allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARNER. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Suppose we have provided by law that from a certain source we may collect a fund to be set aside for the redemption of bonds, it would be absolutely wrong to take one penny from that fund for any other purpose. It seems to me the fund is collected, as all other taxes, and put into a lump sum, and you can draw from that lump to pay the maintenance of the Government as well as to redeem our bonds.

Mr. GARNER. You do not ordinarily use the sinking fund except for what it was established. That is what I am trying to indict the administration for.

Mr. BUTLER. But suppose we collect enough from all the resources to maintain the Government and maintain the sinking fund; we have not done anything wrong by using this fund for either purpose.

Mr. GARNER. But you are not doing that; you are not collecting enough. We are using proceeds from sale of capital assets with which to pay current expenses.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Have not we always done this same thing in the very same way under all administrations; and if we are entirely solvent, what real difference does it make in the end?

Mr. GARNER. Oh, that is it; there is the confession and avoidance. The gentleman from Connecticut says of course we are going to get the money, therefore why are we concerned about a sinking fund? Well, my answer is a very simple one. I want the national debt paid off and retired, and I want it done in the manner and within the time contemplated by the sinking fund act. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, we have just had the privilege of listening to a very extraordinary speech by a very extraordinary man. In the first place, I understood, when the gentleman from Texas started his speech, that he was opposed to this bill, but I find now, after questioning him, that he sees no harm whatever in this particular bill. However, he has taken occasion, with this bill as his basis, to file a general indictment against this administration because it has not strictly followed the letter of the law. The main portion of his speech has been devoted to the question of the foreign loans, and yet he admits that his own administration grossly and flagrantly violated the law in that respect. Let us go back and see just what that transaction was. Those of you who were here at the time remember that the first bond act which authorized our loaning money to our then allies provided that the funds received from the sale of these securities, issued for a certain length of time, bearing a certain specific rate of interest, might be invested in similar obligations issued by foreign Governments. In other words, if this Government issued a bond for 25 years at 3½ per cent, it was permitted, and permitted only, to invest the proceeds in a similar foreign bond of 25 years bearing 3½ per cent interest. What did the last administration do, as a matter of fact? They loaned the proceeds of the bonds for which the American people subscribed to those different Governments and received what security? The securities that the law provided? On the contrary, we received absolutely no security whatever, and there is not to-day in the Treasury of the United States any security from Great Britain, France, or any other Government that was contemplated by the law under which the loans were originally granted. All we have is an I O U, a mere note of hand, signed by the particular representative, whoever he might be, an ambassador or commissioner, who happened to be in Washington at that time.

The law was grossly and flagrantly violated, as the gentleman from Texas admits, and that is the only reason why it has ever been necessary to have this commission appointed. The gentleman from Texas says, "Ah, but we were receiving 5 per cent interest." Mr. Chairman, one of the justifications that the then Secretary of the Treasury made to the Ways and Means Committee was, "Gentlemen, we did not follow the law strictly, we have received no security, but we are getting a better rate of interest than we would have otherwise."

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I can not at this moment. As a matter of fact, we have received no security at all, and we never have received a cent of interest from any Government except Great Britain, and we did not receive any from Great Britain until a very few months ago, and that was not interest at the rate of 5 per cent, as the gentleman from Texas says, but merely a payment on account of interest that had accumulated in the past. I have forgotten how much it was. It may be that it was $185,000,000. The gentleman from Texas says so and he is usually accurate.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman desire now to settle with England upon the basis of the contract that we made with her?

Mr. LONGWORTH. We made no contract with England that has been carried out. We have no contract with England except a note of hand.

Mr. GARNER. We have the statute under which she accepted the money.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What statute? Something that we passed recently?

Mr. GARNER. No; the statute we passed when we authorized the loaning of the money to England, and she accepted under that statute.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But the terms of that statute have not been complied with, and there is no indebtedness except a debt of honor. We undertook by the passage of the recent commission act to have some security from these foreign nations, Great Britain among them.

Unfortunately, in my belief, we put the limit of interest too high, and made the terms of the security too short, but, whether we were right or wrong at that time, whether our judgment was good or bad, the situation has turned out to be, and nobody can question it, that we can not fund our loan to Great Britain under the terms provided for in the act, to wit, at 4½ per cent interest and a period of 25 years.

What are we going to do about it? The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] says that we are betraying the American people if we change the letter of the law. Has the gentleman figured out what this proposition will amount to at the end of 62 years? Even at 3 per cent for 10 years and 3½ per cent for the remainder—and I am taking only the figures as they appeared in the newspapers, for I have no other information—the total amount that will accrue from that British debt at the end of 62 years will be not less than $15,000,000,000. Let the gentleman from Texas take his pencil and figure it out and then say whether the American people are being betrayed as he says in getting this security for a debt for which they have now no security whatever. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. But how much will it cost the American people to carry that debt for 62 years? Twenty billion dollars.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the policy of the gentleman from Texas is followed out, it is going to cost the American people not only the money that we have paid out, but they will have to pay the interest which otherwise Great Britain would pay, because the proposition of the gentleman from Texas is that he will not consent to vote for any funding of the British debt unless it is precisely on the terms provided in the law, to wit, 4½ per cent over a period of 25 years, when he knows, because the gentleman is a sensible man, that the commission has not been able to come to an agreement on that basis.

Mr. GARNER. I did not say that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. GARNER. I said I would be unwilling to settle with England at a loss of what the American people would have to pay for the same money.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Precisely.

Mr. GARNER. I do not object to extending the time to 62 years, but when you ask the American people to pay 4½ per cent and 4½ per cent for money to loan to England at 3 and 3½ per cent I am opposed to it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course, the gentleman is opposed to it, which is precisely what I said, and he will oppose any change in those terms. In other words, he will oppose any settlement of the British debt.

Mr. GARNER. Not so far as the length of time is concerned. I merely question whether Great Britain came over here bargain hunting, whether she came here to get $110,000,000 or $170,000,000.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, the gentleman can not split hairs with me. We have either to take the proposition or to leave it. The gentleman can not offer an amendment to increase the rate of interest, he can not say, "Oh, it is all right, so far as the term of years is concerned, but I want to amend it, so far as the rate of interest is concerned, and I will not vote for it unless it is amended."

Now, the fact is, we all know it, and every sensible person in the United States knows it, we have to accept this proposition now. We can not amend it. We must accept it now or probably never again get so fair an offer—

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I am asking this question absolutely for information. I want to know whether this 3 per cent for 10 years and the balance at 3½ per cent is the proposition which was proposed to Great Britain or a proposition which Great Britain made to our commission?

Mr. LONGWORTH. How can I answer the question; how can anybody answer the question?

Mr. OLDFIELD. The commission can answer it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not see any of the commission here.

Mr. OLDFIELD. The gentleman does not know himself?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not know, of course not. I know just as much as the gentleman from Arkansas or any man—

Mr. OLDFIELD. I want the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] to answer that question.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to many ridiculous proposals by my genial friend the gentleman from Texas, but none have I heard that surpass the position he has taken in criticizing the administration in negotiating a settlement of the indebtedness of Great Britain. He criticized the act of the Foreign Debt Commission in not coming back to Congress, because they could not enter into negotiations under the terms provided in the act authorizing their creation. They had in that act certain limited powers. If they had complied with the powers designated they would not have had to come back to Congress. That commission, composed of some of the best men in the country, under the limitation as to their authority found it unworkable. The gentleman from Texas says that he would not exact from Great Britain one cent more interest money than we are compelled to pay. That act required a rate not less than 4½ per cent. He contradicts his position by saying we should only accept British bonds at a rate of not less than 4½ per cent. Everyone knows who is acquainted with money conditions that this Government to-day can borrow money on long-term bonds for less than 4 per cent. We have borrowed money recently on short-term notes at 4 per cent. The commission has not done anything else but what any other body would have done. On finding that they could not enter into negotiations under the terms laid down by the authorizing body, they did not come back to Congress with an unworkable plan of having new terms proposed on the congressional gridiron. It was a financial proposition which they had to adjust, and they arranged tentative terms, subject, of course, to the approval of Congress, representing the stockholders of the Nation, and intend to propose to have their act ratified.

I believe in the business axiom, "Take a loss, take a gain." I think Great Britain is to be commended as the only Government in the world which has attempted to negotiate their indebtedness, amounting to $4,600,000,000. It is the one Government that has; France has done nothing; she is not even willing to pay any interest.

Italy has not offered to pay any interest, but Great Britain has done so. Now, the gentleman from Texas with his political cunning read a dispatch from the Manchester Guardian, that after the British Government has furnished this Government with British bonds that they are going to be so tied up that we could not sell the bonds on the market and negotiate them if our Government so desired. Such an outlandish, ridiculous proposition I have never heard from any gentleman on the floor, not even the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] said not once but twice that if we did not accept this agreement that has been entered into we would probably not get a dollar from England. Is not the I O U of England worth more than that?

Mr. STAFFORD. Everybody who is acquainted with the facts knows that Great Britain was not in a position to negotiate the funding of this great indebtedness until the present time. The obtaining of the bonds of the British Government will enable our Government to negotiate them if it so desires and reduce the possible indebtedness, whereas the I O Us are not negotiable.

Mr. BLANTON. The I O U of England ought to be worth 100 cents on the dollar?

Mr. STAFFORD. But their notes were never intended to be permanent, merely a receipt, until an opportune time when the respective Governments could negotiate as to the certain terms of payment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] to reiterate the statement that the reason why the Treasury Department was advocating this bill was in order to have the amount of the money in the Treasury in the sinking fund carried in the daily balance. I wish the gentleman from Texas would tell me whether I understood him correctly or not. I will assume that I did.

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman from Texas is temporarily out of the Chamber.

Mr. TREADWAY. No; he was in the room all the time.

Mr. OLIVER. I say the gentleman from Texas was temporarily out of the Chamber.

Mr. GARNER. My attention was diverted, Mr. Chairman, from the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. I think the remarks of the gentleman from Texas are worthy of attention on our side, and therefore I want to ask him if I correctly understood him as saying that the object of this bill was, in his opinion, that the sinking fund was to be carried in the daily balance?

Mr. GARNER. I said this: That if this bill is not passed the Treasury Department will be compelled to buy up the Liberty bonds, and I want that policy to be pursued; and on the other hand if you pass this bill, whatever the purpose was that they wanted to use the sinking fund for, they could do it.

Mr. TREADWAY. In other words, if this bill is passed the sinking fund will become part of the daily balance?

Mr. GARNER. That is so whether the bill is passed or not.

Mr. TREADWAY. On the contrary, I say, on the authority of the Treasury Department, that the sinking fund has nothing absolutely to do with the balance carried in the balance sheet which is sent to us daily. I make that as a positive statement. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman states that there is more than one account in the Treasury Department?

Mr. TREADWAY. I state that this bill has absolutely nothing to do with the daily balance carried by the Treasury, and no amendment that you could make to it would have anything to do with it.

Mr. GARNER. Certainly not, because they have only one account in the daily balance.

Mr. TREADWAY. If the gentleman will read section 2 of the committee's report, he will find that he is in error as to what the sinking fund is.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The original law has nothing to do with it.

Mr. TREADWAY. No; the original law has nothing to do with it. The only effect the passage of this bill will have on the sinking fund will be to show the amount of Liberty bonds that are bought and reduce the balance by that amount. It will make no reference to what can be charged to the sinking fund.

The gentleman from Texas made another erroneous statement which I desire to correct. It is very easy to get up here and lambaste the President and the Secretary of the Treasury and other individuals; but let us have a basis of fact. The gentleman from Texas does not stop for that very often in some of his general statements he makes here, and the one he made this afternoon is a good illustration of the kind of statements I refer to. Here is another instance: He says that, so far as he knows, none of the sinking fund has been used for the purchase of Liberty bonds. Then he is in ignorance of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, because the report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows conclusively that he is in error.

I insert herewith for the information of the House letter on the subject from the Treasury Department:

THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, February 2, 1923.

Hon. A. T. TREADWAY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Pursuant to your telephone request of to-day for the respective amounts of Liberty bonds and Victory notes purchased for account of the cumulative sinking fund, I am inclosing herewith copy of the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year 1921, and would call attention to the item under the caption "Cumulative sinking fund," from which it will be seen that purchases for the sinking fund in that fiscal year were confined to Victory notes and aggregated $261,250,250, face amount.

I am also inclosing copy of the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year 1922, on page 45 of which is shown the detailed purchases of the sinking fund during that fiscal year, aggregating $275,896,000, face amount, of which $17,586,000, face amount, were Liberty bonds and $258,310,000 were Victory notes. Purchases for the cumulative sinking fund during the first half of the current fiscal year—July 1, 1922, to December 31, 1922—aggregated $226,318,800, face amount, of which $78,808,000, face amount, were Liberty bonds and $147,510,800, face amount, were Victory notes.

Very truly yours,

EDWARD CLIFFORD, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But the gentleman says, "So far as he knew." That is correct?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; but he had better get a little bit more information before he tries to elucidate it to the House. That is what I am trying to convince him of at this moment.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that he may reflect on my intelligence, but when he says I misstate a fact he says what is not true.

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, I will not get into that kind of a discussion.

Mr. GARNER. I said so far as I knew, and I talked with the Treasury Department not long ago about it; and, so far as my information went, there had been no Liberty bonds taken up by the sinking fund. I always try to state facts, and I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will also try to adhere to the facts.

Mr. TREADWAY. I also try to adhere to the facts, and of course, I will say, I had no intention of questioning the gentleman's veracity. On the contrary, I have the highest respect for both his veracity and his knowledge. But sometimes a matter of lack of knowledge can be covered under just such a sentence as the gentleman now uses. "So far as I know," he says. I am giving him information that he can find in the Treasury report, and the further statement that nearly $79,000,000 has been expended in the present fiscal year out of the sinking fund for the redemption of bonds. Now, I think the gentleman knows a little bit more about it than he did when he made his statement on the floor. [Applause.]

So far as the definition of the sinking fund is concerned, I want to repeat, and be very positive in my statement, that if the gentleman and members of the committee will read the law, both as it is and as it will be when we pass this amendment, he will know, I think, a little more about the daily balance, and the rest of the committee will, because, so far as he knows, if we pass this amendment, the sinking fund will appear as a part of the daily balance of the Treasury. It will not do any such thing. It never did and never can. The sinking fund law will not permit it. Therefore if he will take my statement for the truth, which it is, he will know a little bit more about the two subjects which he has been discussing in connection with this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] brought us back to the consideration of the bill. This bill proposes to amend the sinking fund law so that the sinking fund may be used for the purchase of bonds issued later than July 1, 1920, in refunding the debt. As the law now stands it is provided that the sinking fund shall be used for retiring bonds outstanding on July 1, 1920. We wish to change the law so that it may be used to purchase bonds issued for refunding purposes subsequent to that date.

The gentleman from Texas makes it his principal objection to this bill that it would permit the sinking-fund money to go into the general funds of the Treasury, if not into the daily balance. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] has taken him up on the latter point. At any rate, if I understand what he means, he contends that the sinking fund will go into the general fund of the Treasury and that, perhaps, some other bonds or some other indebtedness may be retired with the particular money taken in for this purpose. Of course, there are no particular sums of money collected for the sinking fund. It is simply a certain sum set aside by appropriation for a particular purpose. It must come out of the revenues, like any other appropriation.

Mr. Chairman, I contend that in the first place the accounts, so far as this matter is concerned, are kept in the Treasury now just as they have ever been. If we were required to keep a separate pocket for every bit of change that Uncle Sam has and a different set of bookkeepers to keep every one of these pocket-change accounts, the number of employees and the expense would be beyond all endurance. Therefore the Treasury has always kept its funds so that so far as the particular money that is collected or appropriated for anything is concerned it is not required that the actual money shall be set aside or kept apart from other funds. If Uncle Sam remains solvent, it does not make any difference which pocket he takes the money out of to pay any particular debt.

This bill if enacted into law will require that the sinking fund be used for refunding purposes. It has been so used, as has been shown by the gentleman from Massachusetts. If the law is amended as here proposed it will give a little more freedom in the use of the sinking fund, and this additional latitude is required to save the Treasury from possible embarrassment in using the fund in the manner most advantageous to the Public Treasury. In fact, after the 1st of July, if Liberty bonds should be at par or above, it would not be possible, if I understand correctly, to use any of this fund under the law as it now stands for the purchase of any bonds whatever until Congress could meet and change the law.

It is believed that it would be unwise to leave the law in that situation. It ought to be so that at any time we can use this sinking fund for the purpose for which it was originally intended; that is, to pay the bonded indebtedness of this country, and this bill is for the purpose of enabling the Treasury to do this in the most advantageous manner.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I yield.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the amendment reduce the sinking fund after the refunding process has taken place?

Mr. TILSON. No.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Has the gentleman read the last part of section 6 (a), subdivision 1—

Two and one-half per cent of the aggregate amount of such bonds and notes outstanding on July 1, 1920, less an amount equal to the par amount of any obligations of foreign governments held by the United States on July 1, 1920.

Mr. TILSON. Yes; I have read that very carefully.

Mr. RAMSEYER. When you refund you are going to reduce this amount outstanding on July 1, 1920, to the amount according to the report of over $3,000,000,000.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman's question is whether we shall, under this amendment, reserve less than we have heretofore set aside for the sinking fund?

Mr. RAMSEYER. My question is whether the effect of your amendment is not to reduce the sinking fund after these refunding processes go into effect?

Mr. TILSON. At first I understood the gentleman to mean could this fund be expended for anything else than what it was appropriated for, or would the amount already set aside be diminished? I now understand the gentleman to ask, Shall we hereafter, by reason of this amendment, set aside less for the sinking fund?

Mr. RAMSEYER. That is the idea. After the refunding process goes into effect is not that going to reduce the amount on which you figure the sinking fund? I do not think the sinking fund now provided for ought to be reduced, because I think it ought to be applied to the speedy reduction and final extinction of the national debt.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. TILSON. The amount of the sinking fund is regulated by a definite, fixed annual permanent appropriation which will not be changed in the least by this bill. This bill will not affect the amount of money appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Has the gentleman carefully read the latter part of section 6(a), which I read a moment ago?

Mr. TILSON. Very carefully.

Mr. RAMSEYER. And is he very sure that after this refunding process is placed in effect it will not reduce the amount of money to be set aside annually for the sinking fund?

Mr. TILSON. That is not the intention of this amendment, at any rate, and I do not understand how it could in anywise affect the basis on which the amount of the appropriation each year is figured.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Under the five-minute rule I will take time to explain that.

Mr. TILSON. That was not the intention, and, as I understand the present law, such will not be the effect of this amendment.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I hope the committee will carefully consider that entire section, having in mind the question raised.

Mr. TILSON. It is the application of the sinking fund that we mean to affect, and not the amount of it. Of course, if we could change the amount of the indebtedness outstanding on July 1, 1920, the amount of the sinking fund being determined by the amount of the outstanding indebtedness on that date, we, of course, would to that extent modify the sinking fund; but that can not be done, either by the amendment now being considered or by any other means that I know of.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The sinking fund is 2½ per cent of the amount outstanding on July 1, 1920. That amount has been fixed and will not be changed at all. July 1, 1920, will never come back.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. This amendment authorizes the use of the sinking fund for the very purpose for which it was created.

Mr. TILSON. Undoubtedly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] has 22 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] has 18 minutes remaining.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Texas use some of his time?

Mr. GARNER. You may read the bill if you want to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We desire to occupy some more time on this side.

Mr. GARNER. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to read a little editorial from Mr. W. J. Smith, the editor of the Waukegan Daily Sun, of Waukegan, Ill., which is rather apropos and interesting:

The Chancellor of the British Exchequer, one Stanley Baldwin, has insulted millions of middle westerners with the typical English nasty remarks that our people raise hogs and are ignorant on international debts, and that the great difficulty in the debt question is in the hands of United States politicians, instead of Cabinet officers as in England. Perhaps Baldwin has Hoover in mind; nevertheless, the middle westerners have Baldwin's goat and number, which is zero.

The middle westerners know four and two legged hogs, but raise only four; hence Baldwin's reference to American politicians must be returned to England for real application to the puppets of the hereditary ruling classes.

Besides raising hogs, the middle westerners incidentally raised billions of dollars which were loaned to England to save her from Germany. The same middle westerners will raise h— with every public official who attempts to condone, conceal, or concur in any international conspiracy to double-cross the American taxpayer by amending the debt refunding act, which clearly represents the last word of the average American voter who indirectly loaned billions to England.

Mr. STAFFORD. Just at the point where the gentleman is reading, referring to hogs, I suppose the gentleman is referring to them because he knows that this is ground-hog day? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Well, it was not that kind of a hog.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I want to finish this.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Without reading it further I ask that the editorial be placed in the RECORD, and then I will not take up further time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the editorial indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The remainder of the editorial is as follows:

The reactionary Baldwin, his political chief Bonar Law, and other puppets of the hereditary ruling class of imperialists defeated the great commoner Lloyd-George with the false slogan of political tranquillity, which was to come in part through less taxation.

Knowing a debt cancellation or hundred per cent debt repudiation was impossible, Baldwin framed up a clever scheme of passing the high interest charges and the substantial reduction of principal along to future generations, which, of course, have no vote now. This is an old political and diplomatic dodge, but it was withheld until after the last November American elections, because none dared to face the American voter with such a double-cross scheme; however, Baldwin now boldly pretends the scheme is an offer from America and the English press hypocritically kicks about "an offer that was made in England." The average American is wise and will end the duplicity when the conspiracy comes to Congress.

The Washington debt conference was shrouded in silence; however, in England, Baldwin sung his swan song which is the death knell of his party which will give way to the Lloyd-George and labor elements, which never schemed debt dodging or repudiation to save the hereditary ruling classes from destruction, political and material.

Baldwin hypocritically claimed, "America offers 3 per cent" and sixty-odd years' payment period. Through collusion, did Baldwin attempt to put a British offer into the mouth of the American commission, which is made to appear as the initiator and proposer of what means a repeal of or amendments to the debt refunding act, which requires all payments within 25 years at 4 1/2 per cent interest. Such silly diplomatic juggling is a diplomatic swindle, which could only result in the impeachment of American officials who took an oath to enforce and not defeat the debt refunding law. Congress made the only American offer. No private or public official citizen had power to make other offers.

It was reported from abroad that at a London tea party Taft and Harvey promised Bonar Law that the United States would give a refunding period of some sixty-odd years at an interest rate of 2 1/2 per cent. This means a gift of billions of dollars. In regard to international debts, Taft and Harvey represent none other than themselves personally. However, if they attempted to defeat the debt refunding act they are sworn to enforce, Harvey should be recalled by Harding and Taft is open to impeachment charges, if upon investigation Congress finds an international conspiracy to defy and defeat the will of Congress.

Taft and Harvey could promise King George the White House for a colonial home, but such a promise would mean the same as the alleged debt promise; however, if true, the incident is serious and Congress and the President should do the self-evident needful.

Baldwin and his royal political party can not pass their political buck to the Harding administration, which is absolutely indifferent to the political life of Baldwin, Bonar Law, or any other ring of "cabinet" politicians who may desire to fight their campaigns on American soil or with American taxpayers' coin.

Baldwin's attacks on our people and politicians, who are really representatives of free people instead of playthings of hereditary ruling classes, raise many serious questions for all lovers of American practices and institutions.

America has had a wonderful internal development through local taxation and financing with tax-free cheap securities that built good roads, sewers, waterworks, and schools. Strange propaganda proposes to change the American Constitution so that State and city bonds will no longer be tax free. Naturally, the average voter wants no rich man's tax-dodging securities, hence at first the propaganda finds rich soil for growth. If State and city bonds are to be taxed by the United States Government, the local taxpayers must pay higher interest rates, hence local improvements must cost more and the net result may be substantial reductions in the amount of local improvements and the employment of American workmen.

If the Britisher pays less than Congress has demanded, the American must make up the difference in taxes. Taxes are too high now. Do the Federal tax hunters scheme to invade State and city fields of taxation and stop local tax-free securities in order that local taxes may be secured to make up whatever the British dodge, delay, or repudiate in the four and three-quarters billion loans?

Why not let the Baldwin schemers tax 100 per cent the feudal English estates, with their personal property, by-products, which were the gift of some king, and thus avoid the necessity of taxing American State and city bonds, which mean everything to the development and progress of the United States? The Senate better carefully investigate all sources of the propaganda for taxing local securities; perhaps our British friends indirectly, through American agents, have made certain suggestions to promote a shifting of the tax burdens incident to the war.

Why should any American Cabinet officer, Senator, or Congressman worry about what the British toiler is going to do to the tax pocket-book of the hereditary ruling class imperialists? Our officials better worry about what is going to happen to them if they fall for the British schemes to pass the tax buck to American voters. The American hog raisers know so much about the international debts that their Representatives in Congress will not permit the debt refunding act to be now changed even if the British outwit the American commissioners by causing them to foolishly ask Congress to eat its own words and amend the act.

A deadlock may be the British objective; however, during the deadlock the British must pay 5 per cent interest instead of 3, as the British propose, hence any betrayal of Congress and the American public will avail nothing.

No American hog raiser intends to voluntarily raise taxes, especially on local improvement securities, to build British battleships at a time all other nations are trying to save the taxpayers money. British trade discriminations on the high seas, in the German mandate lands or in the colonies secure no American favors. The middle-westerners fully appreciate how the lords of England would dodge or repudiate the American debts to save the hereditary ruling classes from destruction by the British toilers, who are not fussing because their children may have to go to the common schools with the offspring of non-producers, who are about to pay their own way through fair taxation burdens which can never be unloaded upon the shoulders of the free men of the Middle West of the United States of America where the Declaration of Independence is in force 100 per cent.

Mr. BEEDY. Now will the gentleman yield for a serious question?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BEEDY. Has the gentleman noticed the most recent press reports, in which a denial has been issued by the British Government of any interview designed to cast any aspersions on the American people is concerned?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, but there was an interview. I want to say this, that the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] spoke for the administration and its leader on the Debt Funding Commission, and he intimated here—not intimated but said emphatically on the floor, and it will so appear in the RECORD if he does not change his remarks—that unless we accepted that agreement which they had entered into, word for word, without changing it in any way, we would lose this debt.

Mr. BEEDY. Now will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. BLANTON. Just one minute. He said we would lose this debt from the British Government because, he said, we did not have Great Britain's bond; that we merely had the I O U of Great Britain. These I O U's were given in the stress of war when Britain was on her knees, as you might say, when France was on her knees, appealing to us and practically begging for mercy, and we loaned them the billions and merely took their I O U's. I want to say that I am one of those who believe that Great Britain's I O U is worth 100 cents on the dollar, and that she is going to pay it. She would not repudiate a cent of the principal or of the interest. England is a great nation and she never would have survived if she had ever repudiated her smallest obligation, if she had ever repudiated any part of her national debt. England will not do it. Do not be afraid, we have got the right to send this debt commission back and again say to them that the American people through the Congress instructs you how far you can go and how far you can not go.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman come back to that portion of the editorial that deals with the reflection on the American people and state whether he has noticed that there has been a denial of that interview and that it was only the report of a lot of newspaper reporters?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; it has been denied. Diplomacy demanded that. But when our distinguished ambassador went back to England, you heard what was said through a reputable English newspaper as to what was proposed and what was being done by our administration leaders of this country respecting the debt.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman intends to keep good faith?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes.

Mr. TILSON. And did not the gentleman say that when he got leave to put in the editorial he would quit? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, I said that; but questions were propounded to me; but like I believe that of Great Britain's is, my word is as good as my bond, and I am done.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, following the rule that seems to be in vogue this afternoon to speak on matters that are not before the House, I want to say a word to quiet, if I may, the troubled spirit of my friend from Texas [Mr. GARNER]. He became somewhat disturbed some days ago about the British debt and other foreign debts, and my understanding was that before we got through he and I came to a reasonable and satisfactory agreement with regard to the matter. But it seems he is disturbed again to-day. I think there are very few Members of the House who believed or were very hopeful, at least, that we would be able to settle our differences with our foreign debtors under the legislation providing for the debt commission as it became law. I for one had no expectation that we would be able to reach an agreement with any of the European countries under the terms of that act. I said so at the time. So I am not at all surprised that the Debt Commission is to report, as I understand they will, to the President that it is impossible for them to reach an agreement with the British Government under the terms of the act under which the commission was set up and to ask that the attention of Congress be called to the matter with a view of modifying, if possible, the terms of the agreement. The committee of the House that reported the Debt Commission acted wisely in the matter and the House supported the committee action. They left with the commission the question of the terms of settlement as to the period and interest. In another body important changes were made fixing a maximum period and a minimum interest charge, and the gentlemen there seemed to be so very insistent on their view of the matter that after some considerable protest we accepted the Senate amendments. They are not workable. Just how soon we shall be called upon to express our judgment in this matter I do not know, but my understanding is that in due time the President will communicate with Congress on the subject and give us the benefit of his judgment as to what ought to be done.

My expectation is that his recommendations will be so reasonable that the House will practically unanimously accept them. I am quite confident they will be sufficiently reasonable so that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], who has mentioned the matter on several occasions, will find that he can agree to the proposals that are made.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. In view of the gentleman's statement as to another body insisting on controlling the time and interest, does not the gentleman think that it would have been proper for the commission to have come back three or four weeks ago, before the English commission had left, and get the authority, rather than settling the matter themselves and binding this Government as far as it could.

Mr. MONDELL. No; I think what the commission did was proper. They made inquiry of the Members of the House and of the Senate as to how far gentlemen might be willing to go and the disposition they might have to go into the matter of time and interest. I think it was entirely proper, it being important that this matter should be settled by the 4th of March, that they should say to the English commission, which I understand they did, that in their opinion a certain settlement could be had if that was agreeable to the British Government and satisfactory to them. It seems to me it was about the only way to proceed. Had the commission, prior to the report of the British commissioners to their Government, come to Congress and suggested a certain settlement we could not have known whether the British Government would agree to those terms or not. It is true the Congress is not bound by any suggestion that may be made, but I am sure Congress will be glad to listen to any reasonable suggestion.

Mr. GARNER. I am glad the gentleman made one statement which clears up the matter somewhat, and that is that our commission said to the English commission that they believed that they could get this particular settlement that has been urged.

The question was asked when the gentleman was out of the Chamber as to which one of the commissions suggested this basis of settlement. The gentleman from Wyoming has relieved us from any uncertainty in that respect, because he has said that the American commission made the suggestion. I am glad to have that information.

Mr. MONDELL. There must have been some suggestion from the American commission, after discussion pro and con, as there always is, that they believed a settlement could be secured through the Congress along certain lines, but that, of course, was not the settlement originally proposed by the American commission. That is a settlement tentatively agreed upon after various suggestions and much discussion. Of course, the American commission endeavored to secure a settlement within the terms of the law under which the commission was created. That was their purpose, that was their effort, but they found that was impossible.

Mr. GARNER. And then submitted the one that may be submitted to Congress?

Mr. MONDELL. I will not say that they submitted that one. There was discussion back and forth, as there always is, and a certain plan of settlement was tentatively submitted, and in due time the Congress will be called upon to decide whether or not it approves that plan of settlement.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. It is also understood that legislation affecting another sovereign power is of a tentative character.

Mr. MONDELL. I would say that is correct.

Mr. LONDON. So that the powers conferred upon the commission and the instructions given to the commission were subject to the commission reaching an agreement with the representatives of Great Britain.

Mr. MONDELL. That is true.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, it is somewhat amusing to me to note how my friend from Texas [Mr. GARNER] becomes so excited over an erroneous assumption, and then to see how quietly he subsides when the assumption is corrected by the gentleman from Massachusetts. It is an expenditure of perfectly splendid energy for the entertainment of the House at the expense of the entertainer. It also gives us an indication of how wonderfully enthusiastic we may become over a small affair, a mere assumption for the purpose of presenting an opportunity to make an attack upon the administration. Whatever be the ground for the vigorous attack of our friend, certain things are true, well known to the public, and they can not very well be controverted.

This year of 1923 the Treasury Department found itself facing an indebtedness, obligations coming due and demanding payment in the form of the floating debt, or the unfunded portion of our public debt of $2,500,000,000, the Victory loan to the amount of $4,000,000,000, and also the war-savings stamps, amounting to $656,000,000, amounting all told to over $7,000,000,000. The financing of these enormous obligations was a problem that had to be met, and in a way that would not break the credit of the Nation. The manner in which it has been met, it seems to me, shows a very remarkable achievement upon the part of the Treasury Department, without any particular injury to the business of the country. The floating debt has been absorbed by the investment public, thus releasing the banking assets for industry. The Victories have been likewise taken in amounts and at such terms and tenures as to enable the Treasury to meet them when due. I am glad to have my friend accede to that statement. This policy has lessened the rate the Government must pay for its bonds, at a great saving, and has so strengthened its credit, that its securities have gone to par, amounting to not less than $2,500,000,000, of value to the holder.

In reference to the effort of the Treasury to cover up a deficit, charged by the gentleman from Texas, I think my friend was somewhat unfortunate not only in the error of judgment, but I fear he is subject to a little criticism in so far as his purpose is concerned in making that statement. Too much license is practiced in our partisan statements. In the first place, we had a deficit of $650,000,000, not including the interest of war-savings stamps, facing us. We are justified in the expectation to collect $300,000,000 of back taxes to apply to it, that comes as a part of the revenue, and is properly included in the income of the Government. We are now assured not less than $200,000,000 of interest per year on the foreign debt. While it may be a question where that should go, whether to the payment of current expenses or to the liquidation of the public debt, it nevertheless is income. If we liquidate the War Finance Corporation, as will be done unless the law is changed, it will amount to anywhere from $115,000,000 to $125,000,000; that is a sum also which can be applied to the deficit. Also, if there is to be a disposition of this war material accumulated during the war and still on our hands at great loss, I want just quietly to remind my friend that if we turn that material into money, it ought not to be subject to the gentleman's criticism, because, the Lord knows, it ought to have been done a long time ago. Here are items alone which will almost, if not entirely, wipe out the deficit of six months ago. These items are among the fruits of a business administration bending its energy to make its outgo tally with its income, and outside of partisan circles are the subject of general commendation.

Mr. GARNER rose.

Mr. FESS. Oh, I can not yield. Then I want my friend to especially note this. If under the tariff bill which he so vigorously opposed and he and his party resisted every inch of the way, we increase the revenue over $100,000,000 in a year, and it may reach $150,000,000, then the deficit is gone, and why should the gentleman criticize the Nation for making that sort of business adjudication. Whatever else may be said, we balance our budget, reduce the debt, save on interest, appreciate the Government's credit, revive American industry, and solve unemployment. Surely my friend from Texas would not have us play the dog in the manger, as is so common among those not responsible, by doing nothing ourselves and let no one else do anything? That may be the policy so far as my friend from Texas is concerned, but not the policy of the administration. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it is seldom that so much misinformation has been given to the House in so short a time as was given by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] in his statement with reference to the sinking fund and the operations of the Treasury. If one-half of what he said was true, there would be a panic on the stock exchange, a run on all of the banks in the country, a general business depression all over the country, because he intimated—if he did not expressly state it—that the United States Treasury in fact had no surplus, but that, instead, there was a deficit, and that the Treasury was manipulating the sinking fund to cover up the deficit. I am happy to say that on the 31st of January, of this year, there was in the general fund of the Treasury a balance of $254,546,388, and that if we compare the condition of the Treasury of the United States with its condition one year before that time, it will show, taking into consideration the cash on hand and the amount of the public debt, that during the last calendar year the liabilities of this Government and its general financial standing have been bettered to the extent of about $500,000,000; and in the fiscal year of 1922 we paid off something over a billion dollars of debts, and thereby bettered the condition of the United States Treasury nearly to that extent.

I am astonished at my friend from Texas. He told you over and over again, although I think he finally hedged a little on it, that there never had been any of the Liberty bonds purchased out of the sinking fund. If he had only consulted the last report of the Secretary of Treasury, he would have found that for the fiscal year 1922 there was some $18,000,000 worth of Liberty bonds purchased and that there has been a total of all bonds purchased out of the sinking fund, since it was created, of something over $537,000,000. His whole statement shows a complete misapprehension as to what the sinking fund is. The sinking fund is created by an appropriation. Like every other appropriation, it creates a liability upon the Treasury which must be met. It is necessary and proper that under the sinking fund the amount of the appropriation should be set aside and held for the purposes for which it was appropriated. This has been done. The sinking fund has never fallen short a dollar. It can not be used for any other purpose than that specified in the law, and it never has been under either Democratic or Republican administrations.

The sinking fund is no new thing. It has nothing to do with the daily balances except in an indirect way as all our appropriations have, for when the amount of an appropriation is paid, of course it reduces the amount of the daily balances that much. Now, that is all there is to this matter. Mr. Chairman, it is no more possible that this fund can be manipulated than any other account of the Government can be manipulated. The books of the Government, its general statements, are open to everybody each day. A daily statement shows the condition of our finances, and these statements are obtainable by every Member of Congress or anybody else who chooses to get them. If there was any such manipulation as the gentleman talks about, nobody would have confidence in the administration; but, instead of that, I am glad to say that one of the great achievements of the Republican administration has been its success in steadily reducing the amount of our indebtedness and decreasing the amount upon which we must pay interest. Instead of distrust there is everywhere confidence in the management of our finances.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. FESS. The Secretary of the Treasury stated that the appreciation of the Liberty bonds from the low mark to where they are now has been two and a half billion dollars.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. To the owners; yes; by reason of the confidence inspired by the highly successful management of our national finances. Let me say also that this talk about the Government selling railway securities to pay current expenses is all nonsense. Ever since the Republican administration took charge the receipts have exceeded the expenses. There is not and will not be any deficit. The law provides what shall be done with money received from sale of railway securities. It is applied on the debt the railroads owe the Government.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Is it the gentleman's contention that the sinking fund constitutes an automatic appropriation for that purpose?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; it is a continuous and permanent appropriation.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am asking for information. I do not profess to be an expert. Suppose when the time comes for that appropriation and there is no money in the Treasury, the sinking fund does not get it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That never has and never will happen under a Republican administration.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. But a Republican administration is not apt to be in very long, and I am asking for the future.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not know what will happen under a Democratic administration. I would be a little fearful.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Here is what I wanted to get at. The gentleman says there is always money to be appropriated for this sinking fund; but suppose the Treasury gets the money to put in the sinking fund by issuing short-time notes of indebtedness. Then the Treasury is not any better off than before?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman ought to be aware—

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am asking for information. The gentleman knows; I do not.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is no authority of law for issuing bonds or short-time certificates for such a purpose as that.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. You can issue them to get the money to run the Government; have you not been doing that?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Certainly not.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The last administration where bonds were ever issued for the purpose of running the Government was a Democratic administration.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Owing to the fact that the question was asked whether this sinking fund was actually an appropriation, I suggest it might be well to insert in the Record, and I am going to read here, the language of section 6:

For the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1920, and for each fiscal year thereafter, until all such bonds and notes are retired, there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of such sinking fund, an amount equal to the sum of (1) 2½ per cent of the aggregate amount of such bonds and notes outstanding on July 1, 1920—

And so forth.

The appropriation has been made for every year until these bonds have been retired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Certainly, the gentleman is entirely correct, and this bill which we bring into the House to-day does not in the least affect that appropriation. It has no effect upon that whatever.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And right in that connection, the amount of notes and bonds outstanding July 1, 1920—that is, if they are hereafter refunded by the issue of other bonds—will never be changed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; it will be just the same.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Does not this bill now pending simply make that appropriation available for the purpose for which it was intended?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; that is the intention, to reduce the public debt. Now, the trouble about the present situation is that, under the law as it stands, the money may not be used to the best advantage, or possibly it can not be used at all, because there might be none of the Liberty bonds which could be bought at par.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. LONDON. Is the sinking fund anything more than a bookkeeping transaction?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, it has been contended often on this floor that it was nothing but a bookkeeping transaction, but under the present law I think it is more. The appropriation is annual, and the Treasury is required to redeem bonds to the amount of it.

Mr. LONDON. I remember Mr. KITCHIN, Democratic leader, in reply to a question that I propounded, saying that it was nothing but a bookkeeping transaction.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That was quite true until the present law was passed. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] was quite correct at that time. But this law makes it a real sinking fund.

Mr. LONDON. Is a certain amount of money set aside as a sinking fund, or is it merely an entry in the books? Is a tax collected for the purpose of setting aside a certain fund called the sinking fund?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No special tax is collected for this fund. The gentleman heard the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] read the law, that there is so much appropriated each year, and so forth?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. This appropriation is in exactly the same status as any other appropriation. The money has been appropriated. Of course, from time to time the money has got to be brought into the Treasury through revenue. But the appropriation is there. You do not take so much gold and so much silver and set it aside.

Mr. LONDON. In other words, the sinking fund is a liability?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; and a charge upon the Treasury. That is what the gentleman from Texas did not understand. He seemed to think it was an asset.

Mr. LONDON. What I want to know is what assets are set off against the liability.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Congress must see to it that the assets are there to meet the liabilities of the Government.

Mr. LONDON. Of course, I assume that the Treasury is solvent. But, outside of the question of solvency, is there a separate amount of money set aside to cover the obligations of the fund?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. There is no money set aside for any particular purpose, so far as I understand it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am glad to say that the Treasury is in a solvent condition. There is no deficit, and none is likely to occur.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (a) of section 6 of the Victory Liberty loan act is amended by inserting before the period at the end of the first sentence a comma and the following words: "and of bonds and notes thereafter issued, under any of such acts or under any of such acts as amended, for refunding purposes."

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the daily Treasury statement for January 31, 1923. It will be found on the front page of that report that the net balance in the general fund is quoted at $254,546,388. Read the footnote below. This footnote came into this form of report on the 1st day of October, 1915. In a moment I will call attention to the condition relating to that change. This note says:

The amount to the credit of disbursing officers and agents to-day—

was $790,246,056.87.

There is only one way in which funds can be advanced to disbursing officers, namely, by accountable warrants. The warrants must issue, and do issue, before the advances are entered. What does that mean? It means a deficiency. If they had attempted to cash all of those accountable warrants on the last day of last month, they would have had a deficit of $535,699,668.79.

When did that style of bookkeeping begin? At the close of business on September 30, 1915. Prior to that date the net balance carried in the general fund meant unencumbered cash. That had a definite significance to every banker and every business man and every student of public measures throughout the country.

Note the reports for September 30, 1915, and October 1, 1915. What do they show? The net receipts of cash on the 1st day of October, 1915, amounted to $1,321,000. What was reported as the net balance on the 1st day of October of that year—$128,063,545.23? Where did they get it? They secured it by a peculiar method of bookkeeping, and I invite the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] to the record for those dates.

Occasionally I have followed these checks, and I have never yet found a single day when the amount of the net balance reported in the general fund was equal to the advances to the disbursing officers. Quite a technical line of explanation is required to bring out that story, but my five minutes will not permit me to go into it. The Treasurer of the United States holds these advances on the books of his office here in Washington. The disbursing officer who may be granted an advance of $100,000 may have $10,000 entered upon the books for him to-day and $10,000 to-morrow, and they will take 10 days to enter the $100,000. There it stands, an overdraft of more than $500,000,000 in accountable warrants.

We can not tell; the bankers of the country can not tell how much unencumbered cash there was in the Treasury on that date. In fact, this method of bookkeeping makes it impossible to ascertain reliable information upon that point. Suppose you had an account of $10,000 and you had issued checks of $20,000. How many bonds could you redeem out of that balance in bank with only a deficit of $10,000 to draw upon?

There is the situation, a situation into which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] would come with all of the brilliancy and the flights of imagination for which he is noted. [Applause.]

On September 30, 1915, the net balance in the general fund was $40,898,894.97. That was unencumbered cash and it meant something definite. For a long period of time the net balance in the general fund included nothing but unencumbered cash and thus conveyed to all definite information with respect to that important item.

Beginning with the 1st day of October, 1915, however, the Secretary of the Treasury announced through his official reports a net balance which included encumbered cash also.

That form of statement is still in force. I have never yet found a reasonable and I might say a sensible explanation for it. Note the significant fact that the net balance in that fund for October 1, 1915, was given by the Secretary of the Treasury as $128,063,545.23, indicating a net receipt of cash for that day of $88,164,650.26. These figures are amazing in view of the facts, but what are the facts? We naturally inquire. What were the receipts and disbursements for that day, October 1, 1915? The receipts were $2,831,363.31. The disbursements were $1,509,271.25, making the net receipts $1,322,092.06. Here let me suggest a puzzle to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER]. By what mathematical process can he or even a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury make the addition of $40,898,894.97 and $1,322,092.06 equal to $128,063,545.23?

Is it possible that even the cunning, the brilliant flights of imagination, the wild guesses, all combined on the part of the gentleman from Texas, could produce a financial result like that? If so, he is surely such an amazing multimillionaire that he has not the courage to tell us what his actual worth is to-day.

The general-fund account is sometimes called the Treasurer's warrant account. Under that designation the provisions of law were applied in covering moneys into the account and taking funds out of the account. All of the revenues properly entered in that account appeared under what is generally known as covering warrants or repay warrants.

The funds were taken out of that account by means of settlement warrants and accountable warrants. Settlement warrants were issued in cases which had been audited before payment. Accountable warrants were used to take money out of that fund when advances were made to disbursing officers, paymasters in the Army, and paymasters in the Navy throughout the States and throughout the world. The use of those accountable warrants meant that the officers to whom such funds had been advanced must account for them by legal vouchers to be returned regularly in their accounts and entered to their credit against the advances that were made to them by the accountable warrants.

Prior to the last day of September, 1915, the advances upon accountable warrants were deducted from the balance in that fund and charged against the disbursing officers. When so advanced the disbursing officers had full authority to issue their checks to the full amount of their credits. Thus, at a glance, we could ascertain the exact amount of the unencumbered cash in the general fund of the Treasury. Under this change, made by Secretary McAdoo, it is impossible to tell how much cash is available unless you take the official records and make your additions and subtractions. The present form of the Treasury's daily statement, however, does not give reliable information upon those points.

An extended explanation appears on the first page of the daily statement for October 1, 1915. From it I quote the following:

(1) The daily statement of the United States Treasury and the monthly public debt statement of the Government have been revised by a committee appointed by order of Secretary McAdoo, so as to make them more intelligible and clearer (clear) to the public. The new daily statement will represent the actual conditions of the Treasury, so far as it is possible to present it at the close of business each day.

(2) In the new form the item (disbursing officers' balances) is excluded from the liability side of the general fund and included in the net balance.

In connection with this statement and specific provisions of law and practice of the department we should note the important fact that the issuance of accountable warrants constitutes a direct and immediate draft upon the general fund of the Treasury. Those accountable warrants set apart a definite amount of money, which the department has no right under the law to use except under those advances and until the unexpended balance of any fund so advanced shall have been returned into the general fund by appropriate repay warrants. Then how does this new practice make things clearer for the public or for anybody, for that matter? It does not and it can not in the very nature of things do so. Take two or three illustrations, and I suggest these to the meditation of my friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] and ask him how he can hope to redeem Government bonds out of this net balance in the Treasury in view of the conditions that exist on the dates given. Take, if you please, December 2, 1922.

The net balance for that date was reported as $336,040,000, while the advances to disbursing officers on the same date by accountable warrants aggregated $763,063,000. If all of these warrants had been pressed for payment on that date, a deficiency of $427,023,000 would have appeared. Take December 30, 1922. A deficiency of $226,834,000 would have appeared. On January 15, 1923, the shortage would have been $511,127,000, and on January 31, 1923, it would have exceeded $500,000,000. Can you see anything clear and definite in this method of book-keeping? Let my friend, Mr. GARNER, the gentleman from Texas, turn the headlight of his intelligence upon these questions and illuminate them if he can. Does he understand them? Of course, he can not unravel them and find his way more easily to anything definite than he could have crawled through the barbed-wire entanglements on the battle fields of France in the World War.

Illustrations could be multiplied indefinitely, but the examples already given are sufficient to show the indefinite and unreliable meaning of the net balance as it is now carried in the general fund of the Treasury.

This general fund of the Treasury is the reservoir into which all customs, internal revenues, and miscellaneous receipts are entered. From it we draw the funds to meet the general expenses of the Government, aside from postal affairs. Hence all of the various methods of taxation outside the Postal Service point toward this general fund. As the demands upon this fund are now excessive, and will be for many years to come, we must study the various methods of taxation with special care in order that sufficient revenues may be received and that the burdens of taxation may be equitably distributed. At this time the most important question for consideration is tax-exempt securities.

TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES.

Our methods of Federal taxation have been radically changed during the last 10 years and other equally important changes will follow during the next 10 years.

Before the World War we were collecting under the general fund of the Treasury about equal amounts from customs and internal revenue. The postal receipts at that time approximated $266,000,000, making the total Federal revenue for all purposes about $990,000,000. The total revenues now collected for all purposes approximate $3,500,000,000.

The wise foresight of a Republican Congress under the administration of President Taft submitted to the States the sixteenth amendment to our Federal Constitution empowering Congress to lay and collect taxes on incomes. This was the most important change in our methods of Federal taxation. That amendment was proposed to the legislatures of the several States by the Sixty-first Congress and was declared, in a proclamation of the Secretary of State, dated February 25, 1913, to have been ratified by the legislatures of the requisite number of States—36. Accordingly it became a part of our Federal Constitution, and the way was thus prepared for income-tax legislation that followed soon thereafter. That amendment reads as follows:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

Without this additional constitutional authority Congress would have been seriously embarrassed in providing funds to meet the requirements of the World War. During the fiscal years 1918, 1919, 1920, $12,885,000,000 were secured through internal-revenue taxation, chiefly from taxes on incomes.

Prior to 1913 the Treasury received internal revenues ranging from $250,000,000 to $300,000,000 annually. These figures show the results from revenue legislation enacted under the sixteenth amendment. The usefulness of this amendment is further disclosed by the revenues that must be secured under it permanently for an indefinite period of time—perhaps permanently. Thus it appears that the income tax is now a permanent part of Federal taxation. It is quite important that taxpayers generally should draw a clear distinction between a property tax and an income tax. The States generally levy taxes on property, while the Federal Government does not employ property taxes in any form. Under the sixteenth amendment, however, the Federal Government taxes the incomes of individuals and corporations within fixed limitations. We now have an annual fixed charge of nearly $1,000,000,000 to pay interest on our public debt; about $450,000,000 to $500,000,000 for the benefit of the disabled soldiers of the World War; approximately $1,500,000,000 for the annual running expenses of the Government; and about $500,000,000 to cancel obligations growing out of the World War and such public improvements as the interests of the people generally may require. These facts and figures clearly prove that a large amount of revenue must be secured annually from a tax on income.

An income tax should be intelligently graduated so that great wealth will be compelled to bear its full share of Federal expenses.

The pending resolution will, if submitted to the States and ratified by them, close an avenue—tax-exempt securities—through which billions of dollars are now seeking refuge from taxation. It is estimated that $1,500,000,000 of taxable wealth was invested in tax-exempt securities during the last calendar year—1922—and that the total investments in such securities now approximate $16,000,000,000.

Unless we are seeking to release great wealth from any share in the burdens of taxation, we must vote for the submission of this amendment and the States must ratify it. How can any Member consistently vote to levy taxes upon great wealth and then vote against this amendment? Such inconsistency is not expected from any Member of this House or from any State. The resolution reads as follows:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. The United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of any State, but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of the United States or any other State.

SEC. 2. Each State shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived by its residents from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of the United States, but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of such State.

Passed the House of Representatives January 23, 1923.

The revenue act of November 23, 1921, provides for an individual tax of 8 per cent of the amount of the net income, and also a surtax of 1 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $5,000 and does not exceed $6,000. The rate of surtax gradually increases with the increase of net income until it reaches 50 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $200,000. Beyond the limit of $200,000 net income the Government is to receive 50 per cent, or one-half of the total net income. At this point those who are receiving large incomes begin to search for lines of investment. When they find that a tax-exempt security will yield a better rate of return without risk and care than productive enterprises will yield, tax-exempt securities become very attractive. They furnish in this way not only an escape of capital from taxation and productive enterprise but they also encourage idleness on the part of many people who would otherwise be producers.

The Member who voted as I did for these higher rates of surtaxes is logically compelled to vote for the adoption of this resolution.

STATE RIGHTS.

It is argued by some that we dare not deliver to the Congress the authority to tax the incomes from State, county, municipal, and school bonds, because it might go so far as to levy rates of confiscation upon such incomes. That argument proves entirely too much. It involves the idea that we dare not risk the Congress in this matter because of the fear that State credits might be destroyed. This argument logically implies that it is unfair to delegate the taxing power to Congress for any purpose whatever. How, then, did the advocate of such a doctrine secure Federal revenues to pay the expenses of the Government? According to that kind of political doctrine we dare not vest the legislatures of the States with the powers of taxation. Where, then, would you lodge such power? Human beings somewhere must exercise that authority. The record of legislative bodies in the States and the Congress of the United States throughout the entire history of the Government refute that fallacious doctrine.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House without amendment, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House without amendment, with the recommendation that the bill do pass. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HUSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13827) relating to the sinking fund for bonds and notes of the United States, had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to the final passage or rejection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves the previous question on the bill to the final passage or rejection.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. May we have a division on that, Mr. Speaker?

The House divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 13.

Accordingly the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. GREEN of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS TUG FORK OF BIG SANDY RIVER, MINGO COUNTY, W. VA.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 12473) granting the consent of Congress to the Winco Block Coal Co., a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River, in Mingo County, W. Va., and move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up the bill (H. R. 12473) from the Speaker's table and moves to concur in the Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Senate amendments were read.

The motion of Mr. GOODYKOONTZ was agreed to.

Accordingly the Senate amendments were concurred in.

CAPITAL GAINS AND LOSSES.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 13770, to amend the revenue act of 1921, in respect to capital gains and losses, and for other purposes; and pending that motion I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas if we can agree on the time to be used in general debate.

Mr. GARNER. The bill is unanimously reported from the committee, and I do not care about any debate, as far as I know, from this side.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have requests for some time, so I suggest that there be 15 minutes on a side.

Mr. GARNER. That is agreeable to me.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be limited to one-half hour, 15 minutes on a side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be limited to 30 minutes, half to be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 13770, with Mr. MADDEN in the chair.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I believe there is no opposition to this bill. I will, however, give a general explanation of it, but for the present I will yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MacLafferty].

Mr. MacLafferty. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am very grateful for the 10 minutes which the gentleman from Iowa has yielded to me. I wish to speak on a matter not related to this bill. I wish to make a few observations in connection with an article that appeared in the Philadelphia Public Ledger of January 28, 1923, in reference to a bill introduced by me about a week ago (H. R. 13737) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, as part of the naval base of the United States on San Francisco Bay, to accept a site given by the city of Alameda.

I am not here to discuss the merits of a naval base site on San Francisco Bay, but I wish to place in the Record the newspaper article to which I have referred and to make a few observations upon this article.

This article, as you will find when you read it, is very uncomplimentary to the personnel of our Navy Department. It alleges that a certain clique of naval officers who desire to participate in the social functions of the city of San Francisco want to see a naval base located at Alameda, Calif., directly across the bay, and to sink about $150,000,000 of the money of the people of the United States.

The article to which I refer is as follows:

Another attempt is being made to commit the Government to the expenditure of a minimum of $150,000,000 for construction of a naval base at Alameda, in San Francisco Bay, involving also the scrapping of the $40,000,000 navy yard at Mare Island, about 20 miles up the bay. Undiscouraged by the Public Ledger exposé of the nonessential outpouring of public funds almost two years ago and the subsequent rejection of the project, a clique of naval officers has renewed the issue, determined, as one of them states, "to put this thing over if it takes 50 years to do it."

The opening wedge this time is a bill by Representative MacLafferty, of California, proposing to present as a gift to the Federal Government the 5,240 acres suggested as a site for the proposed Alameda naval base. The Naval Affairs Committee of the House has manifested an obvious antagonism to the bill, in spite of testimony by Secretary Denby, who has been won over to indorsement of the project by the Navy Board, headed by Rear Admiral Hugh L. Rodman, for years an advocate of the Mare Island scrapping scheme.

There is every reason to believe the MacLafferty program will encounter the same fate as the original proposal, rejected by a substantial majority of the Senate after the Public Ledger, Senator BORAH, of Idaho, and Senator KING, of Utah, had exposed the useless expenditure of public funds involved. Mr. Denby's reception by the House committee was such he remembered suddenly he was due at a Cabinet meeting when a broadside of questions was directed at him.

SITE OFFERED "UNDER WATER."

The so-called "site" offered to the Federal Government is entirely under water. To reclaim it would necessitate an original outlay of not less than $300,000 for construction of a retaining wall and pumping. The one stock argument in favor of such an outpouring of public funds at a time when economy is supposed to be the watchword and the administration is pointing with pride to the four-power Pacific pact as banishing the fear of war in the Pacific, is that the channel to the Mare Island yard, at Vallejo, will not permit of passage of deep-draft vessels.

When the agitation for the scrapping of Mare Island was begun in 1916 by a clique of naval officers hankering for the social advantages of San Francisco—and few blame them for that—they had an effective argument against Mare Island. That argument does not hold water to-day. It was that deep-draft vessels could not pass over the Pinole Shoals in safety. Those shoals are about 3 miles below Mare Island, extending for about 5 or 6 miles.

Secretary Denby, having been won over to the General Board theory the channel was unsafe for navigation, declined to permit the battleship Arizona to go to Mare Island. The Arizona draws about 30 feet of water, yet there was no dispute over the fact the channel would accommodate in complete safety vessels drawing 32 feet. The trans-Atlantic liner Mount Vernon, drawing 31 feet, navigated the channel in full safety. The battleship California was launched without mishap.

During the last 12 months 6,114,100 tons of shipping navigated the upper bay in safety, an increase in tonnage over 1915 of 3,887,442 in commercial shipping, which has not been impressed by the arguments of the Navy Department group. That there is a 35-foot channel is the view of competent engineers, who offer concrete facts to every specious argument of the proponents of the enormous outlay at Alameda.

CHANNEL EASY TO CLEAR.

Although Congress appropriated $100,000 for dredging of the San Francisco Bay last year, only two weeks were consumed by the Army engineers in keeping the channel open at the Pinole Shoals. In response to the Navy allegations that the channel is a silted one, the Army engineers have stated officially it is a scouring one.

It has been shown by competent authorities that the cost of building two dry docks on the mud flats at Alameda would be around $11,500,000 and require 10 years for the task, while two dry docks would be built on solid ground at Mare Island for $7,600,000 within 2 years. A naval base at Alameda would be, it is contended, a duplication of the Pearl Harbor troubles.

Such naval experts as Capt. Henry M. Gleason, construction officer for 10 years, now with a Waterbury, Conn., firm; Edward L. Beach, former commandant at Mare Island, now professor of American naval history at Stanford University; Capt. Leonard M. Cox, public officer of the twelfth naval district; and the eminent naval strategist, Capt. Dudley Knox, have given the weight of their technical testimony in favor of Mare Island.

Contentions of the Navy clique that they had no intention of scrapping Mare Island have been met with the presentation of photostatic copies of an unpublished report in which recourse was had and indorsement given to the Helm recommendation that the facilities of Mare Island be transferred to Alameda.

It is to be regretted that a paper of the standing and influence of the Philadelphia Public Ledger should lend its columns to an ex parte partisan statement in a controversial matter between two localities in the United States 3,000 miles away upon which evidently it has little accurate information.

Starting out with an extravagant assertion that a minimum of $150,000,000 is contemplated for the construction of a naval base on San Francisco Bay, which has no foundation in fact, unless, indeed, it refers to a period of time covering 50 or 100 years, it is stated that the MacLafferty bill, now being considered by the Naval Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives, involves the scrapping of a $40,000,000 navy yard at Mare Island, 20 miles away. The fact is, in this particular matter, that according to the report of the Ball committee, dated January 31, 1921, $32,000,000 had been expended from 1854 to that time on Mare Island, and that the salvage value of the plant at the present time is $8,000,000, so that $24,000,000 which has been invested are of no value and have served their purpose in the naval functions the yard performed during its history.

The plan now advocated by Mare Island proponents is that a new plant be built on the south end of the island, about 2 miles away from the present plant. This in itself involves reproduction of the whole Mare Island plant, as far as it is modern, 2 miles from the present site, at whatever cost might be necessary, so that we see here in the beginning an unfair, biased presentation calculated to misinform the public and arouse prejudice.

The Ledger in a very laudable manner asserts that it is opposed to the waste of public funds, and immediately follows by asserting that a "clique of naval officers" is determined to put this thing over if it takes 50 years to do it. In other words, our naval service, which is second to none in the world in its intelligence, in its efficiency, in its loyalty, is here by innuendo and inference linked up with a plan to exploit the public funds. An examination of the evidence shows that not one of the naval proponents of Alameda either resides in California or has any interest there, while all the proponents of Mare Island have been on duty there and some of them live there. The Ledger, like any other paper of standing, must of necessity seek to be fair, but it has been misled, and there is no doubt, it is hoped, when the true facts are made apparent it will make correction. The opposition which it refers to, of Senators BORAH and KING, is not directed to the merits of this controversy but rather involves public policy as to how far the United States should go in any new enterprise of a military character when all seek to reduce the burden of military competition. However, in this particular instance the Ledger overlooks the fact that the establishment of a base on San Francisco Bay concentrates naval activities and is an economic project because of that fact, as contrasted with the present conditions, where the fleet is scattered all over the Pacific coast, with appropriations aggregating many millions made here, there, and elsewhere which would be obviated if concentration took place. Overhead could be reduced and duplication of administrative expenses would be substantially cut under the present plan.

Furthermore, the Ledger, professing a desire to save public funds, takes no consideration of the fact that at the present day the Pacific Fleet consists of 11 capital ships, which during the past year have been at anchor in the open sea from 50 to 75 per cent of the time. When we consider the record of volcanic activity to the south, causing tidal waves and great destruction along the sea coast, and also the sudden appearance of volcanic islands to the north, is it not a hazard to keep those ships, costing from $20,000,000 to $40,000,000 each, at anchor in the open sea when they might ride in safety in the harbor of San Francisco Bay?

The Ledger refers to the site as being under water, but it refrains from mentioning that the "under water" is merely a tideland condition which is no different from the rest of the tideland water front of Oakland, Berkeley, and Alameda, which is being reclaimed and which has a commercial value of from $10,000 to $40,000 an acre. Why is not the Ledger fair and why does it make ex parte statements not giving both sides of the controversy?

The Ledger intimates that "a clique of naval officers" is interested in being near to the social activities of San Francisco and that influences them to make a favorable recommendation. Surely when the responsible editors of the paper reflect upon the stigma that assertion places upon the whole naval service it will be withdrawn with profound apology. During the late war we heard no intimation that naval officers were willing to exploit the Public Treasury and pervert their professional opinions for social pleasures, and the record of the Navy is such since the first day of its existence that this slander has no justification whatsoever and should be condemned by all fair-minded men who have any interest in this branch of the service that has served the country so well.

The correspondent of the Ledger makes some argument as to the merits of this situation. He says that during the last 12 months 6,000,000 tons of shipping have navigated the upper bay in safety, but he does not explain how a battleship drawing 35 feet of water, with a list or an increased draft because of accident, can get through a 35-foot channel; he does not explain how the fleet, if based at Mare Island in war time, could get to sea if some alien enemy were to place a bomb in a merchant ship while it was passing through this channel and sink it so as to bottle up the whole fleet. He does, however, assert that competent authority places the cost of building two dry docks at Alameda at $11,000,000, while the same dry docks could be built at Mare Island for $7,000,000. In other words, the only thing he sees is the difference between $7,000,000 and $11,000,000, and he considers that a sufficient reason for deciding in favor of the $7,000,000. Of course, the public must judge whether that argument is sound, or whether the statement of Admiral Rodman, a ranking officer of the Navy, who commanded the greatest fleet of the Navy in modern times in an actual war under actual war conditions, shall be taken when he says that the Carquinez Strait site is entirely out of the question.

The Public Ledger article quotes, with apparent emphasis, those who are in favor of the Mare Island location, but fails to say that the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Navy, the Chief of Operations, the distinguished members of the Helm board, the congressional special committee, and, last of all, Admirals Rodman, Robertson, and Pratt, now ranking and responsible officers of the Navy, are against Mare Island and for Alameda.

It is time that this campaign of innuendo, insinuation, misrepresentation—at one time an appeal for economy, at another time a reference to sentimental factors, slurring the officers of the Navy, intimating that those who are responsible are actuated by sinister and ulterior motives—shall cease. It is time that the people of the United States shall know the facts, and it is with great satisfaction that the friends of the Navy and the friends of the Pacific coast now realize that the controversy will be thrashed out on its merits before the Naval Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives and a decision arrived at. If all these responsible officers of the Navy are wrong they should be displaced and put on the retired list and the people who are right should succeed them. If they are right, the everlasting gossip and scandal which has been circulated concerning this matter should cease, and the people of the United States, especially those living upon the Pacific coast, should have the protection that they are entitled to against a possible warfare by the establishment of a proper and fully equipped naval base on San Francisco Bay, the only harbor from San Diego to Cape Flattery that is capable of serving such a purpose.

Words fail to convey the proper condemnation that should attach to those who, in a roundabout manner and by stealth, stigmatize the naval service of the United States as corrupt. It is time that some one arose and dissipated this smoke screen of villification which has been created to the detriment of the commissioned personnel of the Navy of the United States. Those gentlemen, because of their position, are not able to defend themselves, but it is due the public that the true facts be known and it is to be hoped that this campaign of slander will cease. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. When the gentleman takes one position and his colleague [Mr. CURRY] takes another position, which one are we to believe.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Wait until the hearings are held.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I shall take but little time on this bill, unless some one desires to ask some questions in relation to it. The bill itself is rather long, but that is because it includes a number of provisions contained in the old law. In fact, it is mostly made up of provisions of the present law.

The necessity for this bill is set forth in the recommendations made by the Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report, of which I will read a portion.

A most serious gap in the existing revenue laws—

Says the Secretary of the Treasury—arises from the treatment of capital transactions. The law taxes capital gains and recognizes capital losses, but the taxpayer retains the initiative and refrains from realizing taxable gains while taking deductible losses. The situation is particularly serious under the revenue act of 1921, which limits the tax on capital gains to 12½ per cent, but puts no limit on the deduction of capital losses. This means that capital losses may entirely cancel real income, while capital gains will not be realized at all, or, if realized, are taxed at only 12½ per cent. Under the present system—

Says the Secretary—

the Government is being whipsawed, and the Treasury therefore strongly urges that the existing provision as to capital gains be made to apply conversely to capital losses and that the amount by which the tax may be reduced on account of losses from the sale of capital assets should not exceed 12½ per cent of the amount of the loss. This would, to a large extent, check one of the methods widely used by taxpayers at the present time for decreasing their yearly income.

The bill carries out the recommendation of the Secretary that the reduction on account of losses on sales of capital assets should not exceed 12½ per cent of the amount of the loss.

Under the revenue acts of 1918 and 1921 capital gains or losses represent the difference between the actual cost to the taxpayer and the consideration received on the sale of those assets. The tax was based accordingly; that is, if there was a gain, there was a tax on the gain; and if there was a loss, a reduction was given for the loss. But this system did not prove at all satisfactory. It was often unjust to the taxpayer, because it required the tax to be paid on accumulations of many years. It might go back to 1913. Naturally it interfered with the course of business, because if a party who had profits in capital assets, land, or buildings, which had accumulated since 1913, wished to sell or change it, he would have to pay, under our high system of surtaxes, a rate which might amount to 77 per cent on the profits realized thereby. Consequently there were few sales of capital assets.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. COLLIER. Does the gentleman want more time?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; I would like about five minutes more.

Mr. COLLIER. I yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The result was that the holders of capital assets refrained from realizing a profit, but they took their losses when they had one and got the deduction, by reason of the loss, in making up their income tax. Besides this they often manipulated transactions on the stock exchange so that the losses were merely paper losses. They were not, in fact, ever realized. Thus in the case of an investment a taxpayer might sell securities for less than the price paid. He would incur a loss which can be deducted, and then at the end of 30 days buy back the securities. In 30 days more they might have risen, so that the transaction was, in fact, profitable.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. ACKERMAN. If this becomes a law would this affect the incomes in 1922?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; it will not, I will say to the gentleman; it will apply only to gains or losses that occurred during this calendar year, the returns for which will be made in 1924. Now, in the last revision of the revenue law we undertook to remedy the situation which was created by the act of 1921, and limited the amount which might be taxed on capital gains to 12½ per cent. There was no limit placed on the amount which would be allowed for a loss. The consequence is that under the present situation there is a limit on the gains as to the amount which may be taxed, but full credit given for the losses. This bill simply seeks to establish the same rate of allowance for the losses as is fixed on the gains in case gain is realized. Obviously this is equitable and ought to be the law. Moreover, if the bill goes into effect large sums will be saved to the Treasury and it will not be so easy to evade taxation by fictitious losses.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I believe we have no requests for time on this side on this bill. It is the unanimous report from the committee and, as the gentleman from Iowa says, it equalizes the conditions.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. I will.

Mr. BRIGGS. I want to compliment the committee on the form in which they have brought in this report. The report shows the existing law with the proposed changes made by the pending bill. Those are carried in italics and the part to be stricken out having a line through it. So often in this House measures come before the committee with a suggestion that a semicolon be stricken out here and a comma inserted there and to add the following words, so that we do not know what the new law is and what changes are being made. But this bill carries forward the reenactment of the section and in the report it shows precisely what changes are made in existing law. I think it is an excellent form to be followed in Congress, so that it shows precisely what changes are to be made by the proposed bill from existing law and one I think that should be generally adopted. It obtains in many States under their constitution.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I was about to say that the extremely complicated bill that we had yesterday was accompanied by a similar report showing the changes that were made.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, it is seldom that the majority brings in a bill that all can agree upon, and I was glad to yield to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Iowa. I do not care to discuss the bill further.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 206 of the revenue act of 1921 is amended, to take effect on January 1, 1923, to read as follows:

"CAPITAL GAIN AND CAPITAL LOSS.

"SEC. 206. (a) That for the purposes of this title—

"(1) The term 'capital gain' means taxable gain from the sale or exchange of capital assets consummated after December 31, 1921;

"(2) The term 'capital loss' means deductible loss resulting from the sale or exchange of capital assets consummated after December 31, 1921;

"(3) The term 'capital deductions' means such deductions as are allowed under this title for the purpose of computing net income and are properly allocable to or chargeable against items of capital gain or capital loss as defined in this section;

"(4) The term 'capital net gain' means the excess of the total amount of capital gain over the sum of the capital deductions and capital losses;

"(5) The term 'capital net loss' means the excess of the sum of the capital losses plus the capital deductions over the total amount of capital gain;

"(6) The term 'ordinary net income' means the net income, computed in accordance with the provisions of this title, after excluding all items of capital gain, capital loss, and capital deductions; and

"(7) The term 'capital assets' as used in this section means property acquired and held by the taxpayer for profit or investment for more than two years (whether or not connected with his trade or business), but does not include property held for the personal use or consumption of the taxpayer or his family, or stock in trade of the taxpayer or other property of a kind which would properly be included in the inventory of the taxpayer if on hand at the close of the taxable year.

"(b) In the case of any taxpayer (other than a corporation) who for any taxable year derives a capital net gain, there shall (at the election of the taxpayer) be levied, collected, and paid, in lieu of the taxes imposed by sections 210 and 211 of this title, a tax determined as follows:

"A partial tax shall first be computed upon the basis of the ordinary net income at the rates and in the manner provided in sections 210 and 211, and the total tax shall be this amount plus 12½ per cent of the capital net gain; but if the taxpayer elects to be taxed under this subdivision the total tax shall in no such case be less than 12½ per cent of the total net income.

"(c) In the case of any taxpayer (other than a corporation) who for any taxable year sustains a capital net loss, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in lieu of the taxes imposed by sections 210 and 211 of this title, a tax determined as follows:

"A partial tax shall first be computed upon the basis of the ordinary net income at the rates and in the manner provided in sections 210 and 211, and the total tax shall be this amount minus 12½ per cent of the capital net loss; but in no case shall the tax under this subdivision be less than the taxes imposed by sections 210 and 211 computed without regard to the provisions of this section.

"(d) The total tax determined under subdivision (b) or (c) shall be computed, collected, and paid in the same manner, at the same time, and subject to the same provisions of law, including penalties, as other taxes under this title.

"(e) In the case of a partnership or of an estate or trust, the proper part of each share of the net income which consists, respectively, of ordinary net income, capital net gain, or capital net loss shall be determined under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, and shall be separately shown in the return of the partnership or estate or trust, and shall be taxed to the member or beneficiary, or to the estate or trust as provided in sections 218 and 219, but at the rates and in the manner provided in subdivision (b) or (c) of this section."

SEC. 2. Subdivision (c) of section 205 of the revenue act of 1921 is amended by striking out "If a fiscal year of a partnership begins in 1920 and ends in 1921, or begins in 1921 and ends in 1922" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "If a fiscal year of a partnership begins in one calendar year and ends in another calendar year."

SEC. 3. Section 205 of the revenue act of 1921 is further amended by adding at the end thereof a new subdivision to read as follows:

"(d) If a taxpayer makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1922 and ending in 1923 his tax under this title for the taxable year 1923 shall be the sum of (1) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under this title (as in force on December 31, 1922) at the rates for the calendar year 1922 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1922 is of the entire period, and (2) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under this title (as in force on January 1, 1923) at the rates for the calendar year 1923 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1923 is of the entire period."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MADDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13770) to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to capital gains and losses, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back without amendment with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GREEN of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INCREASING NUMBER OF INTERNAL REVENUE COLLECTION DISTRICTS.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, with a view to adjusting the business for the rest of the day, may I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] if there will be any controversy over the bill S. 2051, to increase the number of collection districts for the collection of internal revenue.

Mr. GARNER. Yes; there will be some time asked over that bill.

SALARY OF COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS FOR THE DISTRICT FOR NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 10816, to fix the annual salary of the collector of customs for the district of North Carolina, and ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, is not this bill on the Union Calendar? It is not a privileged bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call the bill (H. R. 10816) for consideration and that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to call up for consideration the bill H. R. 10816. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what does the bill do?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It raises the salary of the collector at Wilmington, N. C., from $2,500 to $5,000. This salary was fixed 50 years ago, when they obtained only a very small amount of revenue at that point. They now get between five and six million dollars a year. There are collection districts where they receive only two or three hundred thousand dollars a year, but a salary of $5,000 is paid to the collector.

Mr. MADDEN. Is this the only district in the United States where the salary is supposed to be inadequate?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is the only one as to which there is such a gross disproportion, as compared to the other salaries paid and the amount collected for the Government.

Mr. GARNER. This is the only one where the spread between the amount of the receipts and the amount of the salary is so great. Of course, there are inequalities all over. If I recollect rightly, the chief clerk in this office receives $250 a year more than the collector does.

Mr. MADDEN. I shall not object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think this is a meritorious bill, but it is questionable practice to call up by unanimous consent for passage a bill which is not privileged. I understand the bill is on the Unanimous Consent Calendar for consideration on Monday next.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is true, but we have been considering business from the Ways and Means Committee to-day, and it seems to be a good time to dispose of this. There is no objection to it, so far as I know, because everyone recognizes the extraordinary disproportion that prevails with reference to this salary. A very great injustice is created; a large amount is demanded for the bond, and there is a great responsibility, as well as much work to be done. The situation is such that it ought to be remedied.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand that this is the last bill that the gentleman intends to call up to-day?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. And that he intends to move to adjourn at the conclusion of this bill?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], I think, obtained unanimous consent to proceed with the bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to after we got through.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, he would not want to proceed after 5 or 6 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the salary of the collector of customs for the district of North Carolina is hereby fixed at $5,000 per annum.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the gentleman a question. I notice that the Secretary of the Treasury recommended only $3,600 as compensation for the collector of this particular district. Why did the committee increase that amount to $5,000?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We thought it was unfair that there should be some 15 or 20 collectors of customs getting all the way from $5,000 to $10,000 a year when this particular port, in point of revenue received, runs about sixth or seventh in the line.

Mr. MADDEN. I expect to be guided by the judgment of the committee, but I think the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] ought to make a statement as to why the committee differed with the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We did not agree with the Secretary of the Treasury on that point because we thought that a man who was collecting or likely to collect five or six million dollars a year ought to receive at least $5,000 a year; that the responsibility placed upon him was so great, that his duties were so manifold, that we were fully justified in fixing the salary at $5,000 a year.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the committee was very wise, yet at the same time I think it is well enough to have the Record show that the committee used its independent judgment, that it was not guided by the technical experts of the department. Sometimes, you know, the House is criticized because it is said that we laymen have no independent judgment, and the charge is made that our judgment, when we do use it, is not the best; that expert knowledge is the thing that we ought to be guided by. I am glad to know that the Committee on Ways and Means considered itself wise enough to exercise an independent judgment and to ignore the recommendation of the experts in the Treasury Department.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, we all recognize the fact that this has been a very rapidly increasing business at this port. It seems to be a growing port, and there is every indication that we ought to have a good man there.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. In looking over the table of receipts for the various offices as tabulated in the report I noticed this one for North Carolina stands seventh, and that the receipts have grown tremendously in the last few years. Can the gentleman give an explanation for the reason of these unusually increased receipts at this port?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. My understanding is that—perhaps the gentleman from North Carolina can explain.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it because it is near Cuba? [Laughter.]

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that Winston-Salem, which is one of the largest inland ports of entry in the United States on account of the tobacco business, imports a great quantity of tobacco, sugar, cigarette papers, and like matters, for the manufacture of chewing tobacco, smoking tobacco, cigarettes, and cigars, and that that is one of the reasons.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, my understanding is the same as the gentleman who has just spoken—that it is on account of the large increase in the entries of tobacco at that point on account of the great manufacturing establishments near there, and also entries of sugar that come into that port for various reasons.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any increase in the importation of raisins?

Mr. BULWINKLE. No, sir; we have corn. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment for the purpose of submitting a unanimous-consent request. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] the other day called my attention to the fact that the construction which the Washington newspapers had placed upon a certain order that had been made by Superintendent Ballou in reference to the alleged proposed four-day teaching week, as commented upon by me, was erroneous, and in a conversation I had with Superintendent Ballou thereafter he assured me it was erroneous, as the headlines of his orders had been misconstrued by the press. I told him that if he would send me a statement I would ask to have it put in the Record. He has sent me that statement and I ask unanimous consent to place that statement, with the exhibits, in the Record, showing his exact position concerning the matter. I did not want to do an injustice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record for the purpose indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statement and exhibits are as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 1, 1923.

The Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
United States House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BLANTON: My attention has been called to a statement made by you on the floor of the House on January 26, 1923, in which you comment on the supposed policy of the superintendent of schools which contemplates having teachers render only four days of teaching service per week. According to the press, you made a similar statement before the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House at its session yesterday morning. I am sure you want to represent correctly the policies of the school authorities in operating the school system. I am therefore taking the liberty of handing you herewith the following information:

1. An extract from the annual report of the board of education for 1920-21. This statement shows that the Board of Education, on the superintendent's recommendation, extended the period of teaching service of kindergarten and teachers of the first and second grades from 3½ hours to 5 hours per day.

2. A statement of general principles governing extra hours of work in kindergarten and primary departments, issued by the directors of kindergartens and of primary instruction. This statement shows the disposition of the additional time of these teachers, over and above the 3½ hours of service which they have heretofore rendered.

3. Superintendent's circular 35, 1922-23, relating to the 5-hour day for teachers, accompanied by detailed instructions prepared by a committee of school officers.

4. A schedule of work for the kindergarten department. This statement was prepared and issued by the director of kindergartens of the white schools.

In connection with this subject, and supplementing the above information, I desire to make the following observations:

KINDERGARTENS.

As a rule, kindergarten children throughout the country attend school not more than 3 or 3½ hours per day. Moreover, teachers of kindergarten classes usually are not required to render more than 3 or 3½ hours of teaching service a day, for a period of 5 days per week.

The school authorities in Washington have developed a plan whereby all teachers of kindergartens are to render a full five-hour day of school service. One afternoon per week is being reserved for conference and instruction with the director of kindergartens. The other four afternoons per week are devoted to the assistance of teachers in the first three grades. All kindergartens teach five days per week.

ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS.

The general practice throughout the country is to provide 4½ or 5 hours of instruction for the children in grades first, second, and third. A somewhat different practice has heretofore been followed in Washington. All first and second grade classes in Washington have been on a 3½ hour per day schedule for 5 days per week.

The minimum salary of first and second grade teachers was made equal to the minimum salary of upper-grade teachers a few years ago. In October, 1920, the Board of Education, on recommendation of the present superintendent of schools, adopted a policy requiring at least 5 hours of teaching service of all teachers in the elementary schools. This order requires the teachers of grades first and second to render additional teaching service over and above the 3½ hours of instruction given their own classes. This service is rendered in connection with the instruction of other classes in the school. Each teacher in the grades teaches five days per week.

While the several circulars of information and instructions to teachers sent out by supervisors and directors have referred to "one day a week" this has meant the "extra hours" of the day, outside of the 3 or 3½ hours of instruction, as the title of the circulars indicates. No confusion has arisen among teachers, and I regret that this language may have misled anyone.

The fact is that no public day-school teacher in Washington teaches less than five days per week. No policy which contemplates having them teach less than five days per week has even been considered, as far as the present superintendent knows.

If there is any further information which I can furnish on this subject, I shall take pleasure in doing so.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANK W. BALLOU,
Superintendent of Schools.

EXHIBITS.

[Extract from Annual Report of the Board of Education, school year 1920-21.]

7. FIVE-HOUR DAY FOR KINDERGARTNERS AND TEACHERS OF GRADES 1 AND 2.

On October 20, on recommendation of the superintendent, the Board of Education adopted the following policy:

"That the board formulate a policy whereby all teachers in elementary schools shall render a full day of professional service, even when such teachers are not assigned to entire-day schools. He also asked that the superintendent be authorized to frame such provisions as may seem expedient to cover the service of such teachers by having them render additional teaching for the benefit of pupils who may need it in their own or other classes."

As stated in a circular dated October 28 to officers, the purposes of the above order are as follows:

"To unify the length of day for teachers; to provide needed professional training for some of the teachers recently appointed; to place at the disposal of the children a larger amount of the time of teachers; and to provide opportunity for the teachers to give additional instruction to individual pupils who need it. In short, the purpose is to improve teachers and teaching for the benefit of the children. Your administration of this order of the board should be in accordance with the statement of its purpose."

"It is likely that teachers affected by this order have made other arrangement for the disposition of their time outside of their present three and a half hours of teaching. The superintendent will give consideration to requests of teachers for a modification of the application of this order in the case of those teachers who have been and are now pursuing collegiate work leading to a degree in a regularly established institution within the District of Columbia. Such applications should be prepared by the individual teachers concerned and accompanied by a certified statement from the institution where courses are being taken."

The additional hour and a half of the teacher's time required for the schools was devoted to certain school activities. Kindergartners spent one period of the five days with the director of kindergartens in study conferences, one day for school visiting, field work, or excursions with children, one day to observation in kindergartens or in grade 1 or grade 2, one day to mothers' meetings or specially assigned work, and one day to actual work with children in primary grades.

Teachers in grades 1 and 2 gave this additional hour and a half per day to the backward pupils of their own classes as far as the classroom facilities permitted; to assisting one another in individual work with children of a single class; to excursions with the children; and to study conferences with the director of primary instruction.

Since the minimum salary of the teachers in the elementary schools is now uniform for all, it seemed logical to abandon a practice which required five hours of service of certain teachers and required only three and a half hours of certain other teachers because the latter happened to be teaching in grades 1 and 2 instead of teaching in a higher grade. The primary purpose was not equal treatment of teachers, however, but rather to place more of their time at the disposal of the school children and the other work of the schools incidental to teaching.

GENERAL PRINCIPLES COVERING EXTRA HOURS OF WORK IN THE KINDERGARTEN AND PRIMARY DEPARTMENT.

KINDERGARTEN.

1. One day a week shall be reserved for the director for study conferences.
2. One day shall be used for school visiting or field work and excursions.
3. One day shall be used for observation in a kindergarten and first or second grade.

4. One day shall be devoted to mothers' meetings, general meetings with the director, or preparation of special work.
5. One day shall be spent in work with children in primary grades or in class work preparatory thereto.

PRIMARY GRADES.

1. First and second grade teachers shall give their additional time to their own classes so far as building facilities permit.
2. Where this is impossible a mutual exchange between two teachers occupying the same room or teaching in the same building is suggested.
3. All excursions and trips shall be taken outside of the regular three and one-half hour class schedule.
4. One day a week shall be reserved for the director of primary instruction for study conferences.
5. The time of the model teachers shall be provided for by the director of primary instruction.

(Superintendent's circular No. 35.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 20, 1923.

FIVE-HOUR DAY FOR TEACHERS.

To officers and teachers:

The supervising principals, directors of primary instruction, directors of kindergartens, and principals of buildings will hold themselves individually and collectively responsible for the appropriate professional use of the five hours of time of teachers whose classes receive less than five hours of instruction. In the absence of directions from supervising officers, the building principal will exercise discretion.

Some suggestions as to procedure are contained in the accompanying report of a committee of school officers. These suggestions are for the guidance of teachers concerned until modified by responsible school officials.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANK W. BALLOU,
Superintendent of Schools.

MY DEAR DR. BALLOU: Your committee appointed to consider the five-hour day program for part-time teachers respectfully submits the following report. This report is unanimous except that Mr. Bruce would omit the words "preparation and care of seat work," in paragraph No. 3, holding that that work should be done entirely outside of the regular day.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

GRADES.

1. That the school day be divided into two periods—(a) 3½ hours for regular class work and (b) 1½ hours for other school activities.
2. That for four days in the week the hour and a half period shall be devoted by the grade teacher to constructive instructional work, either with her own pupils or with the pupils of a teacher occupying with her the same room, said work to be carried on in accordance with the plans and suggestions given to teachers by the directors of primary instruction.
3. That one day in the week be allowed each teacher for preparation and care of seat work, for visiting other schools, and attendance on regular meetings called by the directors of primary instruction. As far as possible this "free" day should be the same day of the week through a semester and should be the day chosen by the directors for their regular meetings.
4. That directors may call meetings of teachers oftener than once a week for special purposes if it shall seem necessary.
5. That a teacher of pupils under compulsory school age with the advice and consent of her principal may visit at any time the homes of pupils for the purpose of securing better attendance and deportment.
6. That a teacher on the advice of her supervising principal or her director may visit other classes on other than her regular visiting day.
7. That all half-time teachers shall assist in the building discipline and other school activities when not conflicting with their regular school work.
8. That teachers leaving the building during school hours shall leave with the principal a statement of where they may be found.
9. That the hours for teachers of a. m. classes shall be from 8.45 to 3, and for teachers of p. m. classes from 10.30 to 4.30.
10. That the lunch hour shall be from 12.30 to 1.30 for morning teachers, from 12 to 1 o'clock for afternoon teachers.

KINDERGARTEN.

11. That the foregoing directions shall govern kindergarten teachers, except (a) that their day shall consist of two periods of three and two hours, respectively, from 9 to 12 and 1 to 3 for a. m. teachers, and from 10 to 12 and 1 to 4 for p. m. teachers; (b) that they shall be responsible to the directors of kindergartens; and (c) that their teaching work shall be with their own pupils, or in grades 1, 2, 3, and 4, where the assignment shall be under the immediate direction of the principal of the building.
12. That it shall be the duty of the building principal to see that these directions are carried out.

Respectfully yours,

B. W. MURCH, Chairman,
J. C. BRUCE,
ROSE LEES HARDY,
E. F. B. MERRITT,
CATHERINE R. WATKINS,
IMOGENE WORMLEY,
Committee.

KINDERGARTEN DEPARTMENT.

SCHEDULE OF WORK RELATIVE TO THE 5-HOUR DAY.

A program for all teachers in the kindergarten department to become effective on and after February 1, 1923.

Since conditions and accommodations vary greatly in different buildings and in different divisions, this schedule has been made as comprehensive and as flexible as is consistent with a clear and definite understanding of duties, in order to provide opportunity for such individual adjustments as will best serve the interests of the schools.

GENERAL SUGGESTIONS.

Four days a week—Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday—the afternoon hours shall be used for teaching; for garden work, whenever the season permits; and for excursions, with the exception of two afternoons a month, to be designated by the director of kindergartens, and used for observation and for class work.

Friday afternoon shall be reserved for mothers' meetings, for visiting in the homes of the children, and for the preparation of necessary classroom work. This afternoon is also reserved by the director of kindergartens for general monthly meetings of the department.

SPECIFIC SUGGESTIONS RELATIVE TO AFTERNOON TEACHING.

(Note. Each kindergartner is expected to select among the following plans the one which will prove most helpful in her particular building and to work out the adjustments which her individual problem may demand.)

Plan A. Teaching groups of kindergartner children who may need special help in speech, in motor controls, or other necessary adjustments.

Plan B. Teaching groups of kindergartner children who may be able to take more advanced work in English (language, stories, dramatization), numbers, art, handwork, etc.

Plan C. Teaching groups of primary children (first or second grade) whenever the children in either of these grades are on the full-day basis and the teachers in these respective grades desire the help of the kindergartner in handwork, rhythms, or in musical and literary appreciation.

Plan D. Teaching groups of children in third or fourth grades subjects to be limited to those which are specialized in kindergartner training, viz. nature study, stories, oral English, dramatization, art, music, handwork.

(Note 1: In buildings where a kindergartner with two teachers alternates with a one-teacher class the regular kindergartner assistant may assist in the one-teacher class, provided such an arrangement is satisfactory to the kindergartner in charge of this class, and provided also that the assistant is not needed by her own group for special teaching or for excursions.)

(Note 2: Each teacher is expected to carry out the above schedule as far as conditions permit. Wherever situations are such as to make adjustment impossible the kindergartner may make out a definite schedule for herself, following the general plan as closely as possible, and submit the same to the director of kindergartens for approval.)

(Note 3: Measuring and weighing children, testing eyesight and hearing, and helping in other school activities may be substituted whenever necessary for afternoon teaching.)

CATHERINE WATKINS,
Director of Kindergartens.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman withhold that until the gentleman from Iowa can move to reconsider the vote?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

On motion of Mr. GREEN of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 6294. An act promoting civilization and self-support among the Indians of the Mescalero Reservation, in New Mexico.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I cheerfully renew my point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 3, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Cameron	Harrison	New	Underwood
Capper	Hefflin	Norbeck	Wadsworth
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Couzens	Kendrick	Oddie	Warren
Culberson	Keyes	Page	Watson
Curtis	King	Phipps	Weller
Ernst	Ladd	Pittman	Willis
Fernald	La Follette	Pomerene
Fletcher	Lodge	Reed, Pa.
Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Robinson

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] is unavoidably absent.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

OPERATION OF TRAMP VESSELS BY THE UNITED STATES (S. DOC. NO. 297).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the chairman of the United States Shipping Board, submitting, in response to Senate resolution 410, agreed to January 16, 1923, information relative to tramp tonnage operations, etc., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LADD presented a resolution of the Mayville (N. Dak.) Local Equity Union, protesting against the passage of the so-called Strong bill amending certain sections of the Federal farm loan act, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. KEYES presented communications in the nature of petitions from the social service department of St. James Church, of Laconia; the rector, wardens, and vestry of St. Luke's Episcopal Church, of Charlestown, and the Parish Aid Society of Trinity Church of Claremont, all in the State of New Hampshire, praying an amendment to the Constitution regulating child labor, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONES of Washington presented petitions of sundry citizens of Spokane, Seattle, Lind, Medical Lake, Deep Creek, Tekoa, Cheney, Four Lakes, and Uniontown, all in the State of Washington, praying for the passage of legislation extending immediate aid to the famine-stricken peoples of the German and Austrian Republics, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented resolutions adopted by Grand Rapids Lodge, No. 50; Muskegon Lodge, No. 491; and Otsego Lodge, No. 345; all of the Loyal Order of Moose, in the State of Michigan, favoring the calling of an international conference to restrict the illegitimate traffic in narcotic drugs, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HARRELD presented the petition of Ta-wah-he and about 100 other members of the Osage Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma, relative to the affairs of the Osage Tribe, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the heading of the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PETITION OF THE OSAGE TRIBE OF INDIANS.

To the Congress of the United States of America:

We, the members of the Osage Tribe of Indians, in mass meeting assembled, at Grayhorse, Okla., on the 15th day of January, 1923, make the following brief statements:

1. We want our rights as Federal and State citizens as guaranteed us under the Constitution and the allotment act of June 28, 1906.
2. We are now asking that our money be paid to us as it was paid to us under the allotment act of June 28, 1906.
3. We are not in favor of our money being paid to us under supervision.
4. We want our guardian matters to stand as provided for us in the allotment act of 1906.
5. We also object to anyone having a certificate of competency to dictate to us in our meetings, but they may act as proxy for their families.
6. We also hereby protest against any Osage legislation of whatsoever nature, until a law has been passed that gives to us the money that belongs to us.

Submitted to and approved by our principal chief.

NE-KAH-WAH-SHE-TUN-KAH.

ISSUANCE OF TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES.

Mr. McNARY presented the following memorial of the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

STATE OF OREGON,
THIRTY-SECOND LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY, REGULAR SESSION,
Hall of Representatives.
House Memorial 1.

To the Members of the Congress of the United States:

Whereas the demand for and issuance of tax-exempt securities has resulted in greatly extending the burden of debt now outstanding against the several States and political subdivisions thereof; and

Whereas the continued increase of these securities will result in still further withdrawing from productive business funds needed therefore; and

Whereas the holders of said tax-exempt securities do not now bear, through taxation, their full share of the costs of government; and

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States legislation prohibiting the further issuance of tax-exempt securities: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon, That we most earnestly petition and memorialize the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Washington assembled, in the name of the State of Oregon, that Congress submit a constitutional amendment which will prohibit the further issuance of tax-exempt securities; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Oregon be instructed to forward a copy of this resolution to each of the Members of the Congress of the United States.

Adopted by the house January 23, 1923.

K. K. KUBIE, Speaker of the House.

(Indorsed: House Memorial No. 1. Introduced by Mr. Bennett, W. F. Drager, chief clerk. Filed: January 25, 1923, Sam A. Kozar, secretary of state.)

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF OREGON,
Office of the Secretary of State.

I, Sam A. Kozar, secretary of state of the State of Oregon and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify:

That I have carefully compared the annexed copy of House Memorial No. 1 with the original thereof adopted by the Thirty-second Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon and filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Oregon January 25, 1923, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof, together with all indorsements thereon.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon. Done at the capitol at Salem, Ore., this 25th day of January, A. D. 1923.

[SEAL.]

SAM A. KOZAR, Secretary of State.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2098) for the relief of Jacob Mull, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1085) thereon.

Mr. BROOKHART, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 930) for the relief of Thomas J. Temple, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1086) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WILLIS:

A bill (S. 4470) granting an increase of pension to Mary C. Smith (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS (for Mr. KELLOGG):

A bill (S. 4471) to provide for the carrying out of the award of the War Labor Board of April 11, 1919, and the decision of the Secretary of War of November 30, 1920, in favor of certain employees of the Minneapolis Steel & Machinery Co., Minneapolis, Minn.; of the St. Paul Foundry Co., St. Paul, Minn.; of the American Hoist & Derrick Co., St. Paul, Minn.; and of the Twin City Forge & Foundry Co., Stillwater, Minn.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN:

A bill (S. 4472) to make an investigation of the needs of the Nation for public works to be carried on by Federal, State, and municipal agencies in periods of business depression and unemployment; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 4473) granting an increase of pension to Anita Stephens; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 4474) granting a pension to Mollie Irwin (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BROOKHART:

A bill (S. 4475) to revise the statutes relating to the formation of national banking associations; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. CARAWAY:

A bill (S. 4476) to convey to the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co. a portion of the hospital reservation of United States Veterans' Hospital No. 78 (Fort Logan H. Roots), in the State of Arkansas; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BURSUM:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 275) permitting the entry free of duty of certain domestic animals which have crossed the boundary line into foreign countries; to the Committee on Finance.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. McNARY submitted sundry amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted an amendment providing that $250,000 of the proposed appropriation of $56,589,910 for the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works, etc., be expended between Sioux City, Iowa, and Fort Benton, Mont., for the removal of obstructions, the revetment of shores where the same may be necessary, and for the maintenance of the channel to landing places and at points where the railroads intersect the Missouri River, and be immediately available, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 13793, the War Department appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that on February 3, 1923, the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

S. 2556. An act for the relief of Edwin Gantner; and

S. 4309. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii,' approved April 30, 1900, as amended, to establish an Hawaiian Homes Commission, granting certain powers to the board of harbor commissioners of the Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes," approved July 9, 1921.

REPORT OF DIRECTOR GENERAL OF RAILROADS (H. DOC. NO. 546).

The Vice President laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the report of the Director General of Railroads and Agent of the President, showing the progress in the liquidation of all questions and disputes arising out of or incident to the Federal control of railroads for the year ending December 31, 1922.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 3, 1923.

[Note: Report accompanied similar message to the House of Representatives.]

REPORT OF PERRY'S VICTORY MEMORIAL COMMISSION (S. DOC. NO. 296).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Library and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith the second annual report of Perry's Victory Memorial Commission, dated December 4, 1922, which was submitted to the Secretary of the Interior, pursuant to section 5 of the act entitled "An act creating a commission for the maintenance, control, care, etc., of the Perry's Victory Memorial on Put in Bay Island, Lake Erie, Ohio, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1919 (40 Stat. 1322-1324).

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 3, 1923.

ARMY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE.

Mr. LADD. I ask unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD a letter from Oswald Garrison Villard, editor of The Nation, together with a letter forwarded to and printed in The Nation.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NATION,
New York, January 31, 1923.

Hon. E. F. LADD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I hope you will not overlook the inclosed publication from The Nation. Did you ever know anything more scandalous than this procedure in the Army?

Is it not an unheard of thing, first, that they should so transgress the function of the Department of Justice; and, secondly, that they should use funds of the public to spy upon such legitimate organizations as the American Federation of Labor, the brotherhoods, and the Nonpartisan League?

The Army appropriation bill is still pending, I believe. Is there no time to get in an amendment limiting the use of these intelligence funds to legitimate military purposes, and is it not possible to smoke out the Army as to whether this is the act of a single officer or group of officers at Vancouver Barracks, or whether this is a subtle policy of the War Department? The letter should certainly go into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

May I not hear from you at once on this matter? If the sums of money that are being wasted in the Army along lines like these could be saved to the taxpayers, it would be a great improvement in the Budget, and the Army would be a much more efficient military organization.

Very sincerely yours,

OSWALD GARRISON VILLARD.

ITS PRIMARY PURPOSE.

To the EDITOR OF THE NATION.

SIR: I inclose herewith a verbatim copy of a letter which was sent out to a number of law-enforcing officials of the city of Portland. I am advised that the same letter has been sent to every sheriff and to every law-enforcing official of this State.

PORTLAND, OREG., December 14.

B. A. GREEN.

[Confidential copy.]

HEADQUARTERS VANCOUVER BARRACKS, WASH.,
OFFICE OF THE INTELLIGENCE OFFICER,
October 16, 1922.

DEAR SIR: The intelligence service of the Army has for its primary purpose the surveillance of all organizations or elements hostile or potentially hostile to the Government of this country, or who seek to overthrow the Government by violence.

Among organizations falling under the above head are radical groups, as the I. W. W., World War Veterans, Union of Russian Workers, Communist Party, Communist Labor Party, One Big Union, Workers' International Industrial Union, anarchists, and Bolsheviks, and such semi-radical organizations as the Socialists, Nonpartisan League, Big Four Brotherhoods, and American Federation of Labor.

Not only are we interested in these organizations because they have as their object the overthrow of the Government, but also because they attempt to undermine and subvert the loyalty of our soldiers.

With the few scattered military posts in this part of the country it is obviously impossible to cover all points as thoroughly as they should be, hence it is necessary in many cases to trust to the cooperation of law-enforcement officers whose duties and whose knowledge of a particular locality give them a thorough insight into such matters.

It is requested that you inform this office as to any of the aforementioned or other radical organizations coming to your attention under such headings as (a) location of headquarters, (b) names of leaders, (c) strength of organization, (d) activities of the organization, (e) strike and methods of carrying on same, and (f) attitude of members. We will be glad to receive copies of pamphlets, handbills, or other radical propaganda spread in your vicinity.

If from time to time you will keep me posted as to conditions in your vicinity, such cooperation on the part of yourself and your subordinates as the press of your duties permits will be greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,

W. D. LONG,
First Lieutenant, Seventh United States Infantry,
Intelligence Officer.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. WADSWORTH obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that House bill 12817, the unfinished business, may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13793, known as the War Department appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be considered first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not want to object, but I wish to say a word with regard to the mechanism of the bill before consent is granted. I am saying this because I do not want to be estopped hereafter.

The bill carries what is known as the river and harbor appropriation. I do not know whether we have carried it before in the Army appropriation bill or not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Last year was the first time.

Mr. BORAH. I take it the committee has not been responsible for the combining of the two propositions. I do not know how it came about, but I do know—at least I think—that it is a very bad practice. The rivers and harbors measure has always been one of the important measures before the Congress. It ought to be in a separate bill. It ought to be a separate measure. It is going to lead to an inconsiderate attention to the rivers and harbors proposition if it is carried in the Army appropriation bill. The Army appropriation bill ought not to be compelled to carry that kind of a measure.

I do not say that in the sense that the river and harbor bill is necessarily a bad bill, but it is a bill about which there is always a vast amount of controversy. It is a bill also which has been subjected to very severe criticism at times. But now we have in the pending bill a single item of $56,000,000 covering the entire subject matter of appropriation for rivers and harbors. There is no itemization, there is no specification, there is no information with reference to it. There is just simply one item of $56,000,000.

In addition to that, I find upon investigation that the Budget Bureau recommended some $27,000,000. The House Committee on Appropriations increased it to about $37,000,000, and then by amendment in the House it was raised to $56,000,000. So the Budget system has met its master already in the river and harbor bill. If this is to be a precedent, the Budget system falls utterly.

It is very apparent that no sufficient consideration will be given a rivers and harbors bill so long as it is carried as a single item in the Army appropriation bill. As I said, the recommendation of the Budget Bureau has been utterly disregarded. The amount is now $56,000,000, whereas the Budget Bureau recommended $27,000,000. I am not going to discuss it at this time. I merely wanted to call attention to it at this time by reason of a procedure which I think will be more available later.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, is there objection to my request?

Mr. HEFLIN. Reserving the right to object, I want to consume just a little time this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—PRESS REPORTS OF SENATE PROCEEDINGS.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I want to comment briefly on the unfair report that some newspapers have made with reference to what transpired in this Chamber yesterday and the day before.

It may be that later on the Senate, in order to protect itself against certain representatives of subsidized newspapers, will have to pass a resolution, as did the Florida Senate on one occasion, specifically pointing out certain representatives and denying them the privileges of the press gallery. If the newspapers will not tell the truth about what transpires here, God knows we, as the representatives of the people, ought not to permit their representatives to sit in the press gallery. They sit here by permission of the Senate. If the Senate wants to protect itself, to see that the truth is told as to what happens here, it must not permit false reports to go out from here. I have several things along that line which I wish to submit to somebody if I can get a committee appointed to consider the matter a little later on.

The Republican Party in the Senate in committing the great blunder which it did, under the leadership of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], in suppressing free speech here night before last, in calling me to order for saying that I did not represent Wall Street, the bond sharks and big financiers of Wall Street, but represented the people, as being an infringement of the rules of the Senate—when they realized that they made that blunder, that they had outraged the rules of the Senate and violated the provisions of the Constitution guaranteeing free speech in America, they undertook to get away from it by permitting it to be published broadcast over the country that I had made a personal attack upon the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. Not a single one of the reports that I have read has told the whole truth about what occurred.

I never mentioned the Senator from New York in connection with the proposition I was discussing at the time I was called to order by the Senator from Massachusetts. I have been speaking against Wall Street influence in Washington for months and months, and I did not have the Senator from New York in mind a number of times. I do not recall that I had him specifically in mind at any time when I was referring to that subject. I was talking about Wall Street's power with the Republican leaders, its influence in shaping policies, and having things done.

Of course, Wall Street is in his State. The other day the Senator from New York and I had a little colloquy, and I simply asked the Senator if he represented Wall Street. He said he did not, and I accepted his statement. It was after that, when I was speaking about the situation regarding the debt due the United States by Great Britain, when the Senator from Massachusetts called me to order. This is the language I used:

I am here to represent the people, to represent in part my State; I am not here to represent the bond sharks, the big financiers of Wall Street.

It was then that the Senator from Massachusetts called me to order. Then this occurred—and this language was read by my friend from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] on yesterday:

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was an inference.

Mr. HEFLIN. I said I was not representing them here; that I was going to speak for the people.

Mr. LENROOT. And what about the other Senators?

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not say anything about other Senators. The Senator from Massachusetts will next make a point of order against what he imagines. That is all his present point of order is founded on. I did not make the charge.

That is about as far as I got. I was halted in the speech I was making; I was caused to take my seat by the ruling of the Vice President; I was not permitted to finish the argument I was making.

Now, I wish to read the ruling of the Chair. The Chair does not mention the Senator from New York, which shows that the Chair did not have the Senator from New York in his mind. It shows that no Republican had the Senator from New York in his mind. It was the arraignment that I was making of Wall Street that caused me to be stopped on the floor of the Senate; that is what it was. To those Republicans who went on record yesterday as voting to sustain the rape of the rule this other matter was an afterthought. "Let it go out that it was a personal attack on Senator WADSWORTH; let the country think that Senator HEFLIN has attacked another Senator and accused him of wrongdoing and violated the rules, so that the country will get away from the idea that we have raped the rules, that we have violated and outraged them, and set them aside in order to intimidate Senators and stop attacks being made on Wall Street." And some of the newspapers carry the misinformation that I had attacked the Senator from New York and had charged him with representing Wall Street. I did not say that. I said that night before the Chair made his ruling that I had not made any such insinuation. Now, I wish to read the ruling of the Chair. He said:

If it were merely the words spoken by the Senator, the Chair would be inclined to rule that no such imputation was intended—

Now listen to this, Senators—

but with the context, the attitude, and the expression that went with them—

Great heavens! I am being tried for the gestures that I made. [Laughter.] I am being tried for the expression that I had on my face; I am being tried for the direction in which I was looking when I made those remarks. This most remarkable ruling of a Republican Presiding Officer of the Senate is without a parallel in the history of the Government. Oh, how interesting this RECORD will read to the people of the United States about to-morrow or the next day when it gets all over the country about the Vice President ruling in substance that a Senator must not look toward the Republican side; that he must hold his face very straight; that if he means the Republican side he must look toward the Democratic side—trying him on his expression, trying him on his gestures.

However, let me finish with this remarkable situation—

but with the context, the attitude, and the expression that went with them, the Chair is of the opinion that they did contain an imputation to other Senators unworthy and unbecoming, and that the words were not in order.

To other Senators! The Chair did not say the Senator from New York; no specific Senator was named, even in the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is entirely correct. My point of order was not applied to the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] at all. I said, "Other Senators."

Mr. HEFLIN. That is right; the Senator from Massachusetts said, "Other Senators." How vague the situation is. It is as "nebulous as Mark Twain's dim puff of star dust lost in the blaze of the milky way." Other Senators! I might ask what Senators? "Well," they might say, "that is none of your business; just other Senators."

Well, what am I being tried for? "You are being tried for the expression you had on your face. You are being tried for the gestures which you made; that is what you are being tried for." I answer the rule does not say that. Now I want to read the rule:

No Senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motives unworthy or unbecoming a Senator.

"Any form of words"; not any form of gestures, not any form of expression, not any tone of voice. But the Presiding Officer, himself from Massachusetts, says—

but with the context, the attitude, and the expression that went with them, the Chair is of the opinion that they did contain an imputation to other Senators unworthy and unbecoming, and that the words were not in order.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the ruling of the Chair stands, speeches in the Senate will have to be reported with a motion-picture camera and a phonograph, will they not, so that it may appear in the RECORD how the Senator looked and what he said and what was his tone of voice?

Mr. HEFLIN. Absolutely, Mr. President; and if the Republican Party remains in power much longer—God forbid—the time will come when you will have a committee appointed to censor every speech made in the Senate by a Democrat or a Progressive to determine whether or not it shall go in the RECORD.

The Senator from New York pointed out that Senator HEFLIN inserted "laughter." Well, there was laughter, but the RECORD did not show it. It was here in the Senate, and it rang around this gallery; and I would have been very foolish to have inserted it if I had not known that I could prove by Senators that the people in the galleries and the Senators themselves had laughed out right at that point. I inserted it because it was a part of the true proceedings of the Senate; that is why I inserted it. What was wrong about that?

Now, Senators try to make it appear that the Senator from Alabama changed his speech. He did not do so in any material way; he made minor corrections. All Senators do that every day. I made one change for the Senator in his own interruption of me. I did not think he would have an opportunity to see the RECORD, and as it came to me it read:

I have asked a question, and the Senator could not ask it.

I knew that he meant "I have asked a question, and the Senator could not answer it," and I did him the kindness, while he was cooking up something against me, to write in the word "answer" for him and scratched out "ask," because I knew that was what he meant and probably that is what he said, and the reporter in the confusion might have gotten it, "I have asked a question, and the Senator could not ask it." There is no sense in that, and I thought the Senator from New York was clever enough to know what the English language means and he meant to say, "I have asked a question, and the Senator could not answer it." I violated the rule then, probably, but I struck out "ask" and put in "answer" to help out the Senator from New York. But I find from the press this morning, when I was trying to help the Senator from New York, that some of the papers have carried it over the country, misrepresenting the situation that existed here, and said that the Senate sustained the rebuke to Senator HEFLIN for his attack on Senator WADSWORTH. That is not the truth. There is no amount of censure and rebuke that can be administered to me here by the Republican Party that will keep me from trying to speak the truth into this CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I am of the opinion that this performance and attack on me was a framed-up matter; and I understand that they have got one framed up for my friend from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART], and he is to be lectured pretty soon. Well, let it come. I hope I am present when it happens.

Now, Mr. President, I want to read from the Washington Post:

By a vote of 40 to 28 the Senate first decided that Senator HEFLIN had violated the rules by referring to Senator WADSWORTH (Republican), New York, in Thursday's discussion of British debt funding, as a representative of the "bond sharks and big financiers of Wall Street."

That story does not speak the truth; it is an incorrect statement as to what occurred in this Chamber.

The Republicans may want to get out of the hole they are in, but they can not do it. This RECORD has got to speak the truth. Every Senator who voted yesterday to sustain the ruling of the Vice President voted to suppress free speech in this Chamber, and in voting to sustain the Vice President's ruling they must answer for it at the judgment bar of the American people. Free speech is a sacred institution in this country.

Now I want to read extracts from some of the other papers of yesterday.

Here is the Philadelphia Inquirer:

A statement by Senator HEFLIN, in criticizing the British debt arrangement, that he represented the American people and not "the bond sharks and big financiers of Wall Street," was held by the Vice President to be a reflection upon Senator WADSWORTH—

I submit that from this report the Vice President reflected on the Senator from New York, and not myself—although Senator HEFLIN, supported by Senator ROBINSON, Democrat, Arkansas, denied any infraction of the rules.

Do you get that, Senators? I want that to get in your minds good. This is the Philadelphia Inquirer:

A statement by Senator HEFLIN, in criticizing the British debt arrangement, that he represented the American people and not "the bond sharks and big financiers of Wall Street," was held by the Vice President to be a reflection upon Senator WADSWORTH.

So much for that.

Mr. President, of course it has no connection with what I am saying, but the greatest evangelist, probably, that ever put his foot upon the soil of the United States, Sam Jones, born in Alabama, said: "It's the hit dog that always hollers."

SEVERAL SENATORS. "Howls."

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator wants to be absolutely correct, he said "yelps." [Laughter.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, "hollers," "howls," or "yelps," or all three, Mr. President. [Laughter.] I have heard all sorts of noises since I fired into the camps of Wall Street night before last. Some of them are yelps, some of them are howls, and some of them are hollers. They will not hear the last of that incident for some time.

Now, here is one from the New York Tribune. It says:

The debate—

Referring to night before last—took on a personal tone and wound up about 6.30 p. m. with a controversy over whether Senator HEFLIN, of Alabama, should be called to order for remarks that seemed to imply his belief that some Senators represented the "bond sharks" of Wall Street.

"Belief"! The rule says "by any form of words." The effect of the Vice President's ruling is "expression of the face," "gesticulation with the hand," "attitude"; and this paper says "belief," what I had in my mind. Why, they are going to try me on my secret thoughts; and if they were to go into the secret recesses of my mind and get out my opinion of some people, it would startle the Nation. [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT rapped with his gavel.

Mr. HEFLIN. I read on:

That seemed to imply his belief that some Senators represented the "bond sharks" of Wall Street. Senators LODGE and WADSWORTH joined in calling Senator HEFLIN to order, and WADSWORTH also took HEFLIN to task for an alleged statement that Chief Justice Taft represented Wall Street. Senator HEFLIN flatly denied he made any such charge.

Why, Senators, it is going to get so under Republican rule that a Senator, if he wanted to criticize a Chief Justice or an Associate Justice—as I and other Senators have the right to do—will not dare to do it. Why, the other night, when I was in this colloquy with the Senators from New York and Massachusetts, when I said that Mr. Taft had gone to London, and some of them reminded me that he was Chief Justice when he went, and I said, "That makes the case stronger," the Senator from New York jumped to his feet, looked to the city of refuge, the Vice President, and said: "Mr. President, he has offended again." I looked for him to say next: "Put him out! Put him out!"

Mr. President, little by little and bit by bit I want to get the facts in the RECORD.

Now, listen how these papers contradict one another. Some of them are fairer than others, and those that are at all fair, I think, try to be entirely fair. I think maybe they got their reports—the boys do help each other in that way—from somebody else; but I want all of those that are my friends and the friends of free speech to look after the news themselves hereafter as far as I am concerned, because if you rely on some of these fellows that represent these Wall Street sheets they will put poison in it for me, because they have been told to suppress me. But, Mr. President, this is not the first time in the history of this Government that a Senator has fought for the rights of his people. It is not the first time in the history of this Government that a Senator has been heckled and efforts made to intimidate him and to suppress him. All along the way there have been men who would stand up and fight for what they believed was right and others to sustain them in it when they have made such a fight. That fight is going on here now. The Democratic Senators are rallying to my support and the progressive Republican Senators are doing the same thing.

Now, listen to this. Here is the Baltimore Sun:

The debate ended with the abrupt adjournment of the Senate after Vice President Coolidge had ruled that Senator HEFLIN had imputed to other Senators unworthy motives when they upheld the concessions made to Great Britain. He had spoken of "bond sharks" and financiers of Wall Street.

Now, just by itself does not that make a glorious little chapter—that the Senator from Alabama had referred to bond sharks and financiers of Wall Street, and he was called to order because it reflected on other Senators? I submit that the charge is made by somebody else. I submit that I can not be tried for what I had in my mind, whatever I thought, because the rule says "form of words"; but the Chair has set a new precedent, and I must be careful about my gestures. I shall have to practice on that. I shall have to stand before a mirror and practice, so as to keep from violating that precedent set by a Republican Vice President, and I shall have to practice facial expression also before the mirror in order that I may have a pleasing look, if that is possible, when I am arraigning the Republican Party. I must get up on these things. We have something new under the sun here now—beliefs, expressions, gestures. Oh, what a glorious situation we are coming to under the reign of the boss-ridden, time-serving Republican Party!

I hope I have not offended the rules in saying that. I looked to see some Republican rise to his feet, however, and call me to order.

Mr. President, just another word or two, and I will not delay the Senator from New York. I have no desire to delay legislation—legitimate legislation, honest legislation—and I do not want to hold back these measures that must be passed in order to keep the governmental machinery going; but I intend to see to it that, so far as I am concerned, the RECORD shall at least speak the truth as to what occurs in this Chamber. I do not intend that any newspaper—I do not care how big it is or how much money there is back of it—shall misrepresent what goes on here. I have but one time to live. I go this way but once. I have been called to this position of trust by the people of Alabama. They elected me as a Senator to represent them in part in this body. It was the crowning glory of my ambition from my youth time. I ought to feel grateful to them. When I was elected I promised on my bended knees that I would give them the very best service that I was capable of giving, and I am trying to do that, against great odds, against all kinds of handicaps, against misrepresentation by a subsidized press, against efforts to suppress me and to intimidate me by the leaders of the Republican Party. But these shall not deter me in the fight that I am making for the liberty of the citizens and the freedom of the press, for the rights of the people as I see them.

Now, here is another—the New York Herald. I want Senators to hear this:

In a tirade against Great Britain, the Republican Party, the British and American debt-funding commission, and the opponents of the soldiers' bonus, Senator HEFLIN broadly intimated that Senator WADSWORTH practically represented the "bond sharks and big financiers of Wall Street."

Oh, how they are going out of their way to make it appear that I made a personal attack on the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] in order to excuse them from the vote that they cast yesterday, which tied around the neck of every one of them a body of political death. You can not suppress free speech in America. You can not get away with the act that you perpetrated yesterday. The people of America, if they have the courage and the moral stamina left that I believe is inherent in them, will smite you hip and thigh when you come before them asking them to send you back to a Chamber where you solemnly voted to suppress free speech, to tie the hands of a Senator, to close his mouth and prevent him from telling to the country what he believed was to the best interests of his country.

Now, listen to this:

The Alabama Senator became very angry when Senator WADSWORTH, resenting the charge that "Alabama is always being robbed by Wall Street," called attention to the fact that New York had voted a soldiers' bonus and that Alabama had not done so.

Mr. President, I was not angry when that was going on. The Senator from New York, with his placid face, if I may refer to facial expressions, since expressions have become a precedent in this body—his face was wreathed in smiles when he was carrying on that part of the colloquy, and I was in the best of humor.

I hope that I did not violate the precedent regarding expression and gestures when that part of the thing transpired; but this paper says that I got angry. Not at all. Finally, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] rose—the author of the old force bill in the House; the force bill, that sought to put military rule upon my people in reconstruction days, when the Confederate soldiers, gray remnant of the Confederate Army, came home to start life over again on the shattered ruins of war, struggling amidst the difficulties that beset them then, slavery gone, the old order gone, a new situation upon them, and our people trying in good faith to build up again, to take their place back in the Union of States. Yes; the Senator from Massachusetts was the author of that obnoxious and hated force bill, and that force bill sought to put about every ballot box in the South bluecoats with bayonets to intimidate those who would control the election in order to preserve white supremacy in the Southern States.

In spite of all that, Mr. President, when he rose and called me to order the other night, it came like a thunderbolt from a clear sky. I would not have thought that even the Senator from Massachusetts, with his force bill record, would have done that; but he halted me because I said, "I do not represent Wall Street. I try to speak for the American people," and so forth. That is the offense I have committed. That is why I was rebuked. That is why I was stopped from speaking, and that is why the Vice President, after it was all over and the roll had been called and I rose to proceed, did something new under the sun again, when he said that I could not proceed without the consent of the Senate. The Senator from Arkansas reminded him that there was no rule to that effect, after other things had transpired, and then, when I rose in my place and said, "As a United States Senator from Alabama, I demand recognition in my own right," I was recognized.

We are making some precedents, too, Mr. President, and I am making a record for the American people to read. I want them to know what happened in this Chamber, and that is why I am speaking to-day.

Now, I want to say another thing in this connection. This article says, "In a tirade against Great Britain." There is not a word of truth in it. I have always loved the mother country, and when the war with Germany came on, I supported the program that called our boys to the colors. I praised the valor of the heroic British soldier when General Haig, with his army, said, "Soldiers, your backs are to the wall. There is nothing to do but to die." I said, "I pray God that our troops will arrive in time to strike the decisive blow." I have not uttered a word against Great Britain. I have not criticized Great Britain at all. I did say that it had been said that Great Britain had the smartest diplomats in the world, and that Great Britain knew what she was doing when she was sitting behind closed doors with our Republican partisan commissioners, here in Washington, putting this debt arrangement over, and I did intimate that Great Britain had had accepted just what she wanted accepted and that they got exactly what they wanted; but I never attacked Great Britain; I never criticized Great Britain. I was calling attention to her shrewdness, and how she was able to manipulate our commissioners and put over what she wanted. But this report goes out that the Senator from Alabama "in a tirade against Great Britain." It is not so. I am the friend of Great Britain, but I am the friend of my own country first.

Mr. President, in a debt settlement with Great Britain I am on the side of my country, and if I have offended by saying that I did not represent the Wall Street interests, I have no apology to make, either to those who were offended or to Great Britain, for that statement.

But I want to call attention to what happened here. The Senator from Wisconsin, in a terrible tirade against the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART], classed him with the Soviets of Russia, with one of Lenin's followers, and nobody called him down. Another Senator said that the Senator from Tennessee, one of the best Democrats in this Chamber, one of the best Americans in it, and a man who was wholeheartedly with his country and its war program throughout, was tainted with pro-Germanism because he dared to criticize this debt settlement suggested with Great Britain. But nobody called the accusing Senator down. But when I put my hand on the sore spot, when I stormed the citadel of the evil, when I stood knocking at the door of Wall Street, with all its evils, then it was that I was called to order. That is the offense I have committed, and I have no apology to make for it.

I forgot to read a part of a telegram addressed to me, which is as follows:

NEWARK, N. J.

The majority of the American people are with you in your masterful fight against the Wall Street sharks, the plundering international bankers, and the tools of the money power after their premeditated criminal deflation policy, defrauding the people and bankrupting the farming interests.

J. A. MAY, Hotel Savoy.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I renew my request for unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be read first for amendment, the committee amendments to be acted upon when reached in the reading of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. I presume the request of the Senator implies that the text of the bill will be read?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; for action on the committee amendments. My object is to avoid the formal reading.

Mr. KING. Just so the entire text of the bill is read, I have no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It will be handled just as the other appropriation bills have been handled.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. KING. With the understanding which I have indicated, that the bill shall be read in full, I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, before the reading of the bill is commenced, I desire to present the report of the Committee on Appropriations which accompanies the bill, together with a supplemental statement, to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report and supplemental statement are as follows:

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the following report to accompany H. R. 13793:

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Contingent expenses, War Department," on page 4, line 14, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "$45,000" and insert "$102,980," so as to make the paragraph read:

For printing and binding for the War Department, its bureaus and offices, and for all printing and binding for the field activities under the War Department, except such as may be authorized in accordance with existing law to be done elsewhere than at the Government Printing Office, $600,000: Provided, That the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the publication, from time to time, of bulletins prepared under the direction of the Surgeon General of the Army, for the instruction of medical officers, when approved by the Secretary of War, and not exceeding $102,980 shall be available for printing and binding under the direction of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation by the Senator from New York as to the reason for that increase, and if the Senator will do me the kindness, I shall be glad to have him explain why so large a sum as $600,000 is required for printing, in view of the fact, as I understood, that the greater part of the printing of the department is done at the Government Printing Office and would be covered by another appropriation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, in reply to the last part of the question of the Senator from Utah, let me say that the printing done for the department by the Government Printing Office is charged against the War Department and is paid for out of this appropriation.

The $600,000 appropriation covers, for the first time, the printing for all the War Department activities, military and nonmilitary, both in the department proper and in the field. For the first time we have put all the printing under one item. Heretofore the printing has been carried in many, many items under the different bureau or division heads. A new policy, which I think is a sound one, is to group all the printing into one item and, incidentally, this appropriation of $600,000 is about $25,000 less than the aggregate of the printing appropriations for this year.

Mr. KING. The Senator will pardon me for expressing approval of the policy of consolidation; but I had thought that with the return to peace, the printing would be considerably less this year than it was last year, and $25,000 seems to be a rather slight diminution.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There has been a steady reduction. The Senator must understand that the department has to do an immense amount of printing, much of which has nothing to do with the Army. All the river and harbor printing, for example, is done under this appropriation; all the surveys, all the maps, all the charts used by the Engineer Corps for the navigation of the Great Lakes, all the printing in connection with the national cemeteries, the Soldiers' Home, and everything that is done by the War Department, come under this item, and this is a remarkable reduction, I think.

Mr. KING. All of which indicates that the suggestion made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is a sound one, that the War Department should not be charged with the rivers and harbors, and under this arrangement it will be given out that the War Department is costing $600,000 for printing, whereas a portion of that, I do not know how much, ought to be charged to rivers and harbors as such, rather than go as a charge against the War Department. As I understand, this $600,000, then, covers printing done by the Government Printing Office. It is for any printing which may be done for the War Department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Contingencies of the Army," on page 5, line 7, after the word "posts," to strike out "$62,980" and insert "$77,980," so as to read:

For all contingent expenses of the Army not otherwise provided for and embracing all branches of the military service, including the office of the Chief of Staff; for all emergencies and extraordinary expenses, including the employment of translators and exclusive of all other personal services in the War Department or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices at Washington, D. C., or in the Army at large, but impossible to be anticipated or classified; to be expended on the approval or authority of the Secretary of War, and for such purposes as he may deem proper, including the payment of a per diem allowance not to exceed $4, in lieu of subsistence, to employees of the War Department traveling on official business outside of the District of Columbia and away from their designated posts, $77,980.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the House committee, whose hearings I have before me, recommended, as I recall, at least, $62,980. While the increase is very small, was there testimony adduced before the Senate committee which, in the opinion of the Senator, justified the increase?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There was. The item has especial reference to the work of disposal of surplus property of the War Department, the sales division, as it is called. The appropriation for the present fiscal year was $95,000. The Budget estimate was $77,980, which is the figure proposed by the Senate committee. The House cut under the Budget estimate about $15,000. We thought the cut was too severe in view of the obligations which are still remaining in the office of the director of sales of the War Department, the office which controls and guides the disposal of the surplus property. That property will be finally disposed of during the next year and the whole work will be wound up.

Mr. KING. The Senator will recall that there has been a great deal of controversy in the Senate over the large holdings of surplus property by the War Department. Provisions were made in one of the appropriation bills, several years ago, as I recall, for the retention of a considerable number of Army officers to aid in the disposition of the surplus property. My recollection is, and it is very imperfect, I will say to the Senator, that one or two years ago we were rather assured by the War Department that there would be a complete liquidation of the property, and a disposition of all that was not necessary. Here we are four years after the war. I am glad to receive the assurance of the Senator that all the property will be disposed of.

May I say that in a number of States which I visited last summer attention was called by merchants and others to the large number of stores in the aggregate, the cost of maintaining which was very great and the sales seemed to be very small.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The department is maintaining no retail stores. That was given up nearly three years ago.

Mr. KING. Then, are the stores being maintained by persons who have bought the supplies from the Government?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are.

Mr. KING. They are called stores for the sale of Government supplies. The people with whom I spoke seemed to be under the impression that the stores were maintained by the Government. Then we are assured that the large number of automobiles and trucks and the other war supplies which are declared as surplus will be disposed of during the coming fiscal year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The trucks and motor vehicles have all gone, except those from time to time which are declared surplus for the reason that they are completely useless.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 7, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$34,980" and insert "$49,980," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That not to exceed $49,980 of the money herein appropriated shall be expended for the payment of salaries of civilian employees connected with the sale of war supplies and the adjustment of war contracts and claims:

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhues, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13696) making appropriations for the Executive

Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 5, 6, and 7 to the said bill, and concurred therein; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 8, 16, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 33, and concurred therein severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; also that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 10 and 25.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12473) granting the consent of Congress to the Winco Block Coal Co., a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River, in Mingo County, W. Va.

The message further announced that the House had passed bills of the following titles, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 10816. An act to fix the annual salary of the collector of customs for the district of North Carolina;

H. R. 13770. An act to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to capital gains and losses, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 13827. An act relating to the sinking fund for bonds and notes of the United States.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 4390. An act to amend the last paragraph of section 10 of the Federal reserve act as amended by the act of June 3, 1922;

H. R. 11731. An act to provide for the renting of the first floor of the customhouse at Mobile, Ala., to the Mobile Chamber of Commerce; and

H. R. 12473. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Winco Block Coal Co., a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River, in Mingo County, W. Va.

UNVEILING OF BUST OF JAMES BRYCE.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask unanimous consent to have the proceedings incident to the unveiling of a bust of James Bryce, a gift to the American people by the Sulgrave Institution of Great Britain, printed as a public document. The proceedings took place here in the city a few weeks ago, and there ought to be a record of it for the Library and the office of the Architect of the Capitol.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SAMUEL GOMPERS ON APPEAL OF GERMAN LABOR ORGANIZATIONS.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if I may be pardoned for a few moments, I desire to invite the attention of the Senate to an article which appeared in yesterday's Evening Star, under the following headlines:

MEDIATION BY UNITED STATES IN RUHR INVASION ASKED BY GOMPERS—DECLARES APPEAL OF GERMAN WORKERS TO CONGRESS SHOULD BE HEED—MORAL RESPONSIBILITY SAID TO REST ON AMERICA—AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR HEAD DENOUNCES COMPULSORY LABOR AND SAYS DAYS OF SLAVERY ARE OVER.

Continuing, the article reads:

"The United States Government should extend its good offices as mediator in the present Ruhr muddle," Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, said to-day in a formal statement containing comment on the appeal of 12,000,000 members of German labor organizations sent to the American Congress.

He gave his heartiest support to the appeal, and said that it deserves serious and sympathetic consideration by the Government, pointing out that there is a certain moral obligation resting on this Government to help, despite the fact that it did not ratify the Versailles treaty.

TEXT OF STATEMENT.

Mr. Gompers's statement follows:

"The appeal of the representatives of the organized labor movement of Germany has my heartiest support. It deserves serious and sympathetic consideration by the Government of the United States.

"The era has passed when compulsory labor can be imposed upon workers. The trend toward the abolition of slavery began three-quarters of a century ago.

"The heart of the people of France throbs with generosity and is opposed to the imposition of compulsory work upon the people or any portion of the people of Germany.

"The German people must understand that they can not entirely escape from reasonable payment for the ravages and devastation which the Kaiser in their name so ruthlessly carried on.

SEES MORAL RESPONSIBILITY.

"Though the Senate of the United States has refused to ratify the Versailles treaty, and therefore the United States is not legally bound by its terms, we can not escape the moral responsibility which devolves upon us of recognizing that it was that treaty which ended the war and that the armistice was merely a stoppage of actual military conflict. In formulating the conditions of the armistice the United States was a party. Do what we may regarding our refusal to ratify that treaty, a moral obligation in all honor requires that our country shall do its share in bringing about an arrangement between France and Germany, so that an honorable settlement of the awful situation arising out of the dispute between these two countries may be accomplished.

Mr. President, may I pause to remark that, in my opinion, Mr. Gompers accurately states the situation when he declares that though the United States did not ratify the Versailles treaty, a moral obligation which can not be shirked rests upon it when questions dealt with in the Versailles treaty are under consideration. Mr. Gompers's position apparently is that it is the duty of our Government to mediate in the controversy between France and Germany, and generally to take all steps within its power to prevent a conflagration which seems to be imminent in Europe, and which, if it occurs, may affect our own country and be carried to the ends of the earth. It seems clear to me that Mr. Gompers is correct in declaring that if the United States had ratified the Versailles treaty, or if there had been guaranteed to France the protection afforded by the proposed treaty between France, Great Britain, and the United States, the chaotic and tragic situation now in Europe would not have developed.

My own opinion is that the unsettled condition of Europe, the economic and political disorder, are largely the results of the refusal of the Senate of the United States to ratify the Versailles treaty. If this Nation, with its wealth and power and with its freedom from Imperialistic designs and lust for territory, had become a member of the League of Nations, that organization, with its subsidiary agencies, established for arbitration, conciliation, and judicial decrees, would have been a vital organism and would have been able to direct the currents of European conflicts into safe channels. In other words, the league, with the machinery which it possesses, would have been enabled to bring into proper coordination, indeed cooperation, the nations of Europe which are members of the league, and controlled forces which have been sinister and destructive, resulting in confusion and chaos in many of the European nations. The league stood for something and promised something. Without a League of Nations wars had come to the earth and alliances and combinations of various powers had divided races and nations, as a result of which international controversies were inevitable. The league, though a great experiment, was founded upon a recognition of enduring policies and principles, and a concept that there may be international brotherhood and international tribunals to determine conflicts, as there is fraternity among the people of a State and effective judicial tribunals to settle disputes arising between individuals therein.

The article continues:

COULD HAVE AVERTED CRISIS.

"I repeat and emphasize the statement I recently made in commenting upon the Ruhr situation: That had our country ratified the treaty, or if we and Great Britain had guaranteed to France the protection which she so naturally and logically needs—that is, against future aggressions of Germany—no such situation as that which now exists in the Ruhr would have arisen.

"Now, I believe that our Government should tender its good offices as mediator. We have no selfish designs upon either of their countries or upon any country, and the offer to act as mediator should, in my judgment, be made in good faith to France and to Germany, and offered without regard to whether either or both nations will be pleased or displeased."

That seems to be the end of the statement of Mr. Gompers.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I could not gather from the reading of the article, and I have not had time to read it, what Mr. Gompers suggests that we do.

Mr. KING. This seems to be the only expression as to the policy to be pursued in the present Ruhr situation:

Now, I believe that our Government should tender its good offices as mediator. We have no selfish designs upon either of their countries or upon any country, and the offer to act as mediator should, in my judgment, be made in good faith.

That, it would seem, is the only plan suggested by Mr. Gompers—that the President of the United States or the American Government should tender its good offices as mediator between France and Germany for the purpose of settling any controversy now existing.

Mr. BORAH. But Mr. Gompers said we should have ratified the Versailles treaty.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. It is under the Versailles treaty that France is acting. Had we ratified it it would not have changed the terms of the treaty in any way. It is under that treaty that France is now acting.

Mr. KING. I grant that that is true, but it does not diminish the strength of the position of Mr. Gompers. Mr. Gompers stated, antecedent to the words which I just read—

Mr. BORAH. I am not finding fault with Mr. Gompers's suggestion outside of the one proposition that he seems to think that if we had ratified the Versailles treaty the situation would be different.

Mr. KING. Exactly.

Mr. BORAH. I think it would have been worse.

Mr. KING. That is the difference between the eminent Senator from Idaho and the great labor leader, Mr. Gompers, whose vision upon questions affecting the United States and the peace of the world is large, and if some of his views had been followed, it would have been for the benefit and advantage of the American people and the world.

Mr. BORAH. They are not large enough to include Russia.

Mr. KING. We all have limitations, but his attitude toward the Bolsheviks has been vindicated.

Mr. BORAH. I did not rise to criticize Mr. Gompers. I respect any views he may express. I only rose to ask how it would have been helpful had we ratified the Versailles treaty. For instance, it might be said that it would have been helpful if we had been on the council of the League of Nations, but when the league wanted to take it up the other day Poincaré, the Prime Minister of France, said it was not a matter for the league to consider, and he did not desire to leave the matter to that body, and therefore the league did not have anything to do with it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Idaho a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield for that purpose?

Mr. KING. I yield for the purpose, if the Senator from Idaho will permit.

Mr. CARAWAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho if he does not believe that many things have happened since the treaty of Versailles was signed that never would have happened if we had ratified it with the league?

Mr. BORAH. I can not recall anything that has happened that might not have happened if we had ratified it. There possibly may be some things.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does it not appear to the Senator that we might have been able to be of help to the world if we had sympathetically cooperated with it? Now the Senator believes that we may now step in, when the world is on the brink of another great conflict, and be helpful. Had we commenced four years ago and lent our aid and sympathy to the solving of the problems which now threaten to wreck civilization, might we not have been very much more helpful than to commence now? I am still in favor of the Senator's resolution.

Mr. BORAH. Here is where the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Idaho wholly differ. I think the wrecking of Europe is due to the Versailles treaty. Its terms were destructive and impossible from the beginning.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am quite sure that the Versailles treaty ought never to have been agreed to unless we should have performed our obligations under it. The treaty itself I do not think anybody justified. It is a monstrosity in many of its features. But we did not keep it from becoming the law of Europe by refusing to take our place with Europe in its administration, because they had agreed among themselves and every evil feature of the Versailles treaty became operative without our assent, and by refusing to ratify it we are denied any possibility of being helpful in the solution of the many problems that did wreck Europe—I will not say threatened to wreck, because Europe is already wrecked.

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senator from Arkansas might go much further and say that the Versailles treaty would never have been as bad as it is, as bad as it was at the time it was signed, if the view of the American delegation had been accepted. But it was written, it was concluded, and as it was we were asked to ratify it. As it was written and as it was concluded it was destructive of the economic life of Europe, and, in my opinion, a menace to the civilization of the world, and that treaty is now being executed.

Mr. CARAWAY. And now is being executed without any sympathetic agency to ameliorate its harshest terms.

Mr. BORAH. This sympathetic agency had its inning at Versailles in trying to make the treaty a treaty of civilization instead of a treaty of war, as Clemenceau said it was, and as he always intended it should be. He boasted of the fact when it was concluded that the treaty of Versailles was a continuation of the war.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. President Wilson, if we are to accept the statements outlined in Mr. Baker's book, stood against those propositions. We had our inning there to ameliorate it and it was not ameliorated; it was put to us as a war proposition.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator from Idaho has a vision large enough to know that half the world can not be destroyed without the other half being destroyed. It seems, however, as though that it is a doctrine which the people are trying to lose sight of now that we can not sit here and see 250,000,000 people go down to destruction without seriously endangering our own existence. Would it not have been wiser to have joined with whatever saneness there yet was in Europe and have cooperated with it in trying to bring even a bad treaty to some kind of a workable status than to have participated in the making of the treaty and then washed our hands of it and gone across the sea 3,000 miles away and said, "We will have no further concern with whatever destiny may overtake you"?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if a proper treaty of peace had been made, a treaty of peace such as would have commended itself to the judgment of one who wanted to see Europe restored, I think there would have been many reasons why the United States should have ratified that treaty.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BORAH. But if the United States wanted to be tied, hamstrung, absolutely prevented from ever again being an influence in helping to relieve Europe, it would have been accomplished by ratifying and making itself a part of the Versailles treaty.

For instance, England signed and ratified the Versailles treaty; but she is perfectly powerless to-day in any way; and she is powerless by reason of the fact, or more powerless by reason of the fact, that she is a signer of the treaty.

Mr. CARAWAY. If England had not signed and ratified the treaty of Versailles, the world would have been in war three years ago. Whatever of sanity yet has been preserved in Europe the British Government has preserved it. I, who have heretofore been anti-British, say that. My people were expelled from Ireland many years ago—for the good of Ireland; I have never heard anybody in Ireland complain about that fact—so that I have never been suspected of being pro-British. I am satisfied, however, now that whatever of sanity and whatever there may be that is helpful in Europe rests in the British Empire. If there had been a treaty of the kind which the Senator from Idaho suggests, a just and equitable treaty, one which everybody could have approved, then we could safely have washed our hands of Europe and come home and said, "Europe once more has a workable basis, a treaty that will enable her to solve her problems, and we can safely leave Europe to Europe." But instead a treaty was made that the Senator says wrecked Europe. Then how could we, after we had been a party to the making of the treaty, say, "We will not aid in sympathetically administering it so that some hope may be left to struggling humanity as it is now shackled in Europe"?

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Arkansas goes too far. In the first place we were not a party to the making of the treaty; we were only a party to its negotiation up to a certain point. The treaty, however, was never made, and could not be made and be concluded until the Senate had ratified it. So it was never binding upon us.

Mr. CARAWAY. I shall accept that technical view of it.

Mr. BORAH. It is not technical; it is fundamental. Now another proposition—

Mr. CARAWAY. The treaty of Versailles was made; whether we ratified it or not, with all the harm that could have come to the world, it became an accomplished fact, and whatever help America could have been to the world was denied to the world by reason of the fact that the Senate refused to ratify the treaty while all of the evil was an accomplished fact. We said, "We will not bear any of the burden," although we were so cowardly—I take that word back—we were so selfish that when we came to negotiate a treaty with Germany we preserved under that treaty all the rights that had inured to us under the treaty of Versailles, while we repudiated every obligation that the treaty of Versailles had imposed upon us.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, it would seem that the position of the Senator from Arkansas is this: The treaty of Versailles was a bad treaty and contained many infamous provisions, which have wrecked Europe. Therefore we ought to have ratified it, not for the purpose of enforcing it, which we would be in honor bound to do if we had ratified it, but for the purpose of tearing it to pieces.

Mr. CARAWAY. Answering the Senator from Connecticut, if I may be permitted to do so—and of course no one will think I am criticizing any individual Senator for his views—here is the situation: We were a party to the making of a treaty which the Senator from Connecticut says wrecked the world; then, after we had shackled the world or had been a party to the shackling of it, if the Senator's position is correct, we said, "We will not aid in the softening of the bonds that we have helped to forge for the world"; but after we had done that, after we had repudiated that obligation, we negotiated a separate treaty with Germany—and by force, because Germany was absolutely powerless to resist any terms which we demanded of her—and we repudiated all the worst features of the treaty of Versailles, but reserved unto ourselves all the advantages that accrued to us under that treaty, though we repudiate our obligations that we undertook when the German people signed the treaty.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. We were not a party to the making of the treaty of Versailles at all. The Constitution provides that the President may, by and with the advice of the Senate, two-thirds of the Senators voting therefor, make treaties. The President started a negotiation with the other powers, a negotiation for a treaty; but we never made a treaty.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. We negotiated a proposed treaty which was unsatisfactory to the other treaty-making branch of the Government of the United States.

Mr. CARAWAY. If I may interrupt the Senator from Connecticut, there is sitting just over on the other side of the Chamber the leader of the Senator's party, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. BRANDEGEE. A very handsome looking gentleman, too.

Mr. CARAWAY. We agree about that. He said, when the Senate was considering the treaty that concluded the war with Spain, that when the President negotiated a treaty we could not afford to repudiate the President; that there was such a moral obligation resting upon us that when we had become a party to the negotiation of the treaty we could not repudiate it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator believe that?

Mr. CARAWAY. Did the Senator from Massachusetts believe it?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know. Does the Senator approve the position that we must necessarily ratify any treaty that the President may have negotiated?

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not want to be put in the position of approving anything a Republican does, and therefore I will not say that I approve it; but I will say that when we were a party to a war and when an armistice had been signed, practically under the conditions we had dictated, and then when we took part in the negotiation of a treaty, which, I say, had many odious features, features that must be rewritten by the pen of the statesman or by the sword of the soldier, I can not conceive that any man who loves fair play and is willing to take his share of the responsibility in any game in which he sits would be willing to say, "We repudiate all the burdens the treaty imposes; we will let the other parties, those we helped to shackle, be bound."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I assume the Senator believed in the treaty of Versailles, because he voted to ratify it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I was not a Member of the Senate at that time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But the Senator has advocated it all the time.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator believes that the United States should stand with the signatories of the treaty of Versailles and undertake to preserve the territory and integrity and political independence as against external aggression of the 52 countries that compose the League of Nations. I do not; but it is perfectly idle to discuss now whether we ought to have ratified the treaty of Versailles or what the condition of the world would have been if we had done so. Those who believe that if we had ratified the treaty of Versailles the Austrians would have loved the Italians, the Bolsheviks would have loved the Poles, the British would have loved the French, and the Turks would have loved the Armenians are welcome to their opinion, but it can never be established beyond peradventure. Why not take the situation as it is and consider what we shall do now?

Mr. CARAWAY. I can establish the fact that under the policy advocated by the Senator from Connecticut everything has gone from bad to worse, and the world now trembles on the brink of the greatest catastrophe that it has ever wit-nenced; so that, whatever the Senator may assume concerning those who wanted to pursue a different course, we are at least in a better position than is he, because something good might have come out of it, whereas nothing but evil has come out of the course which the Senator advocated. So we are at least able to say that we might have been helpful, while we know that your action has been destructive.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator knows nothing of the kind. In the first place, he does not know what my policy is.

Mr. CARAWAY. But I am talking about how the Senator voted, and I know his policy and his vote are always in line.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I may be wrong—

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator will pardon me, I did not intend or desire to single out the Senator from Connecticut, but I was speaking about the policy of those who advocated the rejection of the treaty, and the Senator was one of them.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I deem it a high honor to be considered worthy of the Senator's steel.

Mr. President, the truth of the matter is, although we may have, as certain Senators believe, lost what they call our "moral and spiritual leadership" of the universe, that the influence of the United States to-day, whether it is wise or beneficial or not, is paramount in the world, and everybody knows it.

In my opinion, if we had been in the League of Nations, where we would not have a policy except by the unanimous consent of the other members of the league and would have been fettered by that unanimous consent, we would be utterly powerless as compared to the position of supreme influence which we occupy now.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am more interested in that statement than in any other the Senator has made.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have some more I can make if the Senator wants to hear them.

Mr. CARAWAY. We first want to verify the one the Senator has made. The Senator now says that we are the supreme power in the world. Will the Senator please tell us what influence we are exerting on the crumbling condition of Europe now? Is the Senator of the belief that, as the Senator from Idaho so aptly put it, that by having some one to peep in the back window while there is a conference going on in Europe we are influencing that conference; that unofficial observers over there, whom the Secretary of State said had no right to speak except to answer a question when it is asked of them, and had no right to make a suggestion or lay down a policy, does the Senator think we are influencing the world by them?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I do not conceive it to be the duty of this country or this Government to lay down a policy for the world or to attempt—

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator said we were the supreme power in the world. Now, whom are we influencing? What are we influencing them to do?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will answer the Senator. I do not know whom we are influencing, except to mind our own business as far as may be compatible with doing our duty in the world; but, Mr. President, I say we are the Nation of supreme influence for this reason: All one has to do is to read the daily newspapers; there is not another nation in the world that is in trouble but is begging America to come and straighten out the trouble.

Mr. CARAWAY. But we do not come.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; we do not.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then, what influence are we exerting on them when we will not accede to their demand?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. When we see a dozen dogs in a dog fight and a peaceful dog watching to see if there are going to be any throats left untorn—

Mr. CARAWAY. So that he may cut them.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The influence the big dog might have in jumping into the scrimmage and taking them all by the neck and joining in the row might be beneficial; on the other hand, it might add to the trouble. Now, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me a moment, Europe and Asia are full of rival nations, with rival instincts, religions, creeds, races, aspirations, dynastic and otherwise, and ambitions. There are too many different nations over there; they have their historic policies and their historic grievances and jealousies and hatreds. They are in a condition where they say, "We are listening for the voice of America."

Mr. CARAWAY. And they do not hear it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. They hear many voices, I think; among others, the Senator's. Some of them are melodious and some of them are strident and discordant and make confusion worse confounded. Mr. President, this m  le is going on all over the world, and it is said it is the plain duty of America to announce the policy and invent the formula by which universal love shall prevail and the precepts announced in the Sermon on the Mount shall henceforth be international law. Everybody shall now and henceforth be guided by nothing but justice and unselfishness and altruism.

What is the formula? All these nations over there are bankrupt and are quarreling and are jealous of each other. "Twas ever thus." Europe has been an armed camp and has been quarrelling ever since the dawn of history and for thousands of years before it. There are many voices of America, and yet all these nations say, "We will listen for the voice of America," as though it were one coherent, unanimous voice. The Senator knows that this country is made up of the commingled races of Europe, and there are many voices in America, and if it were put to a vote in this country what this country should do, nobody knows what the people would say. The last verdict we had from the people was that those who opposed the ratification of the treaty of Versailles were justified by about 7,000,000 majority.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, no. We had the last verdict last November, and they repudiated that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am talking about the last verdict on the treaty of Versailles, which the then President of the United States submitted to the intelligent electorate, as he said, to a grand and dignified referendum.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. There is not a Senator in this Chamber who is any more acute, if quite so acute, at drawing distinctions as the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have to be when I talk with the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. And yet the Senator from Connecticut, with all his astuteness, could not tell to save his immortal soul where his candidate stood in 1920 on the question of European policies; and therefore, if the Senator could not know, how does he imagine all the people who voted in the election in 1920 knew where Mr. Harding stood? Mr. Hughes, who was one of the master minds, and Doctor Sawyer, who was the other [laughter].

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is this a question?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; it is a question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish the Senator would not make it such a compound question. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARAWAY. It will be perfectly simple when I reach the end. Mr. Hughes said, "If you want a league, vote for Harding."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And 31 others.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; and 31 others said it; and he was one of the master minds that your candidate, as soon as he got to be President, brought into the Cabinet.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Now, you did not know he was going to do that, because you did not agree with that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is this a question?

Mr. CARAWAY. It is when I get through with it. Do not be impatient.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have undertaken some large contracts.

Mr. CARAWAY. Do not be impatient. You did not know where he stood, and now how can you—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is an assertion, and not a question.

Mr. CARAWAY. It is an assertion, because the Senator will not deny it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will not deny it; no.

Mr. CARAWAY. No, of course; you can not afford to do it; and if the Senator from Connecticut, with all of his astuteness, did not know where the candidate stood, how does he imagine that the people had a referendum on the League of Nations when they did not have the opportunity to know even what the Senator from Connecticut knew? The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], sitting there, supported the candidate because he thought he was against the league. Hughes supported him because he thought he was for it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator call this a question?

Mr. BORAH. No, Mr. President; the Senator is mistaken. I did not know definitely where Mr. Harding stood, but I did know absolutely where Mr. Cox stood.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then the Senator cast a negative vote.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have all that I can remember now.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have another question when the Senator makes his answer to this.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The hopper is full now, and I hope the Senator will reserve the other one; but what I want to say is that nobody knew—

Mr. CARAWAY. Where the candidate stood.

Mr. BRANDEGEE (continuing). Exactly what the foreign policy of this country was going to be, in detail. That was not the question.

Mr. CARAWAY. I thought that was the referendum you said they had.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, no; the Senator has another "think" coming. [Laughter.] The question was the question submitted by Mr. Wilson to the grand and solemn referendum, which was that the wicked men who had defeated the ratification of the treaty of Versailles should be retired to private life; and he took the judgment of the American people on whether or not they wanted that treaty ratified, and they voted by 7,000,000 majority that they did not. The people were not voting for any detailed foreign policy in the future beyond that one proposition.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I interrupt the Senator? The Senator then undertakes to say that the people did not vote for Mr. Harding. Well, I think he very generously absolves the people.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. They voted to put the Democratic Party out of power, and they did it by the largest majority ever recorded.

Mr. CARAWAY. I know they did, and they admit they made the biggest mistake they ever made. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have not heard such a thing.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator has not heard it? Did he not read the election returns last November?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator could have heard it then. He heard it then, did he not? Your 7,000,000 majority had disappeared.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The issue was not before the people then.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, the issue of this administration was before the people, with all of its master minds.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Wilson's administration was not before them.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, no. If it had been, the world would have been happier.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is another guess of the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Arkansas with a mild suggestion?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] a moment ago said that the American people voted against the League of Nations and against Wilson's policy in that regard. I think that was what he said.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator's hearing is improving.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there never was a greater mistake made than that. That never was the issue before the people at all. A whole lot of people on both sides tried to make it the issue, but it never became the issue.

The issue really was a lot of German-American hyphenated citizens retiring to a private booth and voting against Mr. Wilson because he dared to make war on the Kaiser, and a lot of Irish-American hyphenated citizens, much more loud in their protestations, dooming him to hell because he had appeared to be in alliance with Great Britain; and then there occurred the usual fall-down of a people who have been held up for three years to a high stage of altruism and intensiveness—the collapse, the counteraction. It came in due time, and a whole lot of people in Wall Street and elsewhere said, "We are damned tired of paying so much taxes, and we want to stop it right now."

Mr. BORAH. Mostly elsewhere.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So they said that maybe if the American people went into the League of Nations they might have more taxes to pay, and they were primarily opposed to paying taxes, as the middle class always has been. During the Victorian era in Great Britain they were constantly a clog upon British honor because they did not want to be taxed, and so they were here.

Then there were a lot of asses who concluded that a great war ought not to cost anything, anyhow, who thought that you could convert a people of 110,000,000 population from a peace power into a war power overnight and send them to Europe and have all that cost them nothing, and who thought that they had a right to complain because, after they considered the tax bill, it had cost a great deal.

Mr. President, if there ever was a party that appeared in a national arena with contemptible and contemptuous motives, it was the Republican Party in the last campaign. They beat Woodrow Wilson all right; they beat the Democratic Party all right; and some of them are now contending, and amongst them the Senator from Connecticut, that they beat him upon the only altruistic and unselfish and great and long and broad visionary thing that there was in the campaign, to wit, the League of Nations to keep the peace of the world amongst men of good will. The Senator from Connecticut is one of the few left. Another I see before me, but there are not many, and they will not last very long; and after a while the United States will find out that these United States are a part of the world, and that they are a part of the European race, that they belong just as much to Europe as any other man of European birth in all Europe, and that they must do something to maintain the stability of the industries of the world, and something to maintain the peace of the world, and something to stop nationalistic and tribal hatreds all over the world. You will have to come to it after a while, as a baby comes to its milk—you must or starve, and you are going to do it—and when you come, you are going to come with all sorts of tergiversations and apologies and explanations of one description or another, telling how you have always been perfectly consistent from the day you started your opposition to the League of Nations to the day that you embraced it.

All you want to do, all you are struggling for is a new international understanding something like the League of Nations, except that you want the name of Woodrow Wilson, anathema, maran atha, shut out of the whole business, and you want it called by another name, and in less than three years you will have it. You will have it called by another name, and you will have Wilson anathema, maran atha, I suppose. Poor fellow! He can not much resist it. He is sick. He did his fighting on the firing line. He fell wounded, fell shot pretty nearly to death, with the consciousness of your animosity in his mind while he fell and the consciousness of the full fact that you had fooled the fools and made him hated of the "multitude." I have never heard one of you express a note of sympathy for him—not one of you. When McKinley was shot, and when Garfield was shot, every Southern village displayed flags and expressed their sympathy with the President, but I have never heard a Republican in the Senate or in any partisan Republican newspaper express sympathy for Woodrow Wilson when he fell upon the firing line, and he fell as truly upon the firing line as any boy of mine or yours ever fell upon it in France. If you think that you can torture the human conscience and the human sense of justice to the point where in the future they are going to justify that great defeat of everything right and altruistic and unselfish and ideal in the last campaign in behalf of everything practically selfish and money seeking, you will find that you are mistaken.

I had the honor once before to say upon this floor that the essentials of Christianity did not consist in the crucifixion; they consisted in the resurrection; and you have got to face the resurrection. Standpatters and progressives have got to get together somehow to face the resurrection, and when you try to get together to face the resurrection neither one of you will be resurrected, except perhaps now and then one or two of you in your positions in the Senate. I hope both of you two may—I say this as a matter of personal friendship for you—I hope that you may be resurrected that far; but your party will not be, and nothing that you stand for with regard to world peace and world stability will be. In the twentieth century, when the world can be circumnavigated in 10 days by an airplane, any man who wants to isolate America from the balance of the European race, who wants to isolate America from the industrialism and the progress of the world, may be the smartest man personally that he can be, as both of you are, but historically he is a fool, because he does not appreciate what the trend of the centuries amounts to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Just wait a minute. This world has come to be a very little bit of a thing. It is not much larger than a county in Texas was 50 years ago.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wanted to say a word for the sake of my friend the Senator from Connecticut, not for myself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me finish this. The world is not much larger than a county in Texas was 50 years ago when it comes to getting together and having to stay together.

Every white man all over this world is racially connected with every other white man all over this world, and they are bound to work out a common destiny. They could not prevent it even if they were fools enough to try to prevent it. You have to march in the same pathway somehow. That is the great mistake France has been making lately. She seems to think she can dis sever herself from the white race all over the globe, and can take an independent course with regard to Germany because Germany is disarmed and conquered, as she thinks and believes, and as is probably true; but it is a mistake. You can not govern this world this way. Old Oxenstierna told his son to visit Paris, Vienna, London, and other capitals "in order to learn with how little wisdom this world was governed." God pity him, he did not live long enough! He ought to have lived until the last election in America was over and then he ought to have sent his son to all the precincts in America to learn with how little wisdom this part of the world is governed.

Mr. President, the people now and then are fools, the people now and then are asses, inexpressible asses, and they do things now and then that they themselves do not condone even the next morning, but in the long run the people are not asses, they are not fools, and they are coming back to the wisdom, the foresightedness, the longsightedness, the broad vision, and long vision that will make them remember that they are not a dis-severed part of the earth's population but that they are a part of the entire white man's population of this globe, and that they must cooperate with the other white men on this globe in order to prevent either a yellow peril or a black peril or some other sort of peril that may condemn them all to a common grave, not only common in the sense of being common to all of them, all of them sharing it, but common in the sense of being a plebeian grave, into which a gentleman never would have sunk if he could have helped it. He would have stood with his race all over the globe, defying the narrow and temporary ignorance and folly of his race even, and the ill-concealed hostility of the balance of the "children of men."

Now I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I have been thinking over the Senator's remark that personally I had an ordinary amount of intelligence, but historically was a fool, and I can not make the distinction. I do not know what the difference is between me historically and individually.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I can give the Senator an illustration. I had some ancestors who were very smart people, but fought for the Stuarts in Great Britain against Puritanism and the Commonwealth and the Parliament. They were wise men individually, but historically they were asses. Does the Senator understand the illustration? Their successors partially in my person have confessed that they were asses.

Mr. BORAH. I have not any successors who are authorized to confess for me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the Senator's own fault. He ought to have had children, anyhow. I have seven children and twelve grandchildren, and thank God I will have successors, and so far as the human race is concerned for me, whatever it may mean for the Senator from Idaho, I embrace Tom Carlyle's idea that it is an association between the unborn and the dead and the living. So far as I am concerned, my family, part of them dead and part of them yet unborn and a part of us living, are a part of one individual and highly idealized thing. My idea of nationality is that a nation contains the dead and the living and the unborn. The man whose vision can not extend back to the past, to those who are dead, forward to the unborn, those yet to be procreated, as well as to the living, is a mere legalist, and I suppose you have heard my definition of a legalist. He is a man who can find no hope for the future and no happiness in the present, except when based on a precedent in the past. There are a lot of them, too, including the present Secretary of State, and various other people of that ilk.

A thought strikes me all at once. The present Secretary of State was a member of "the league to enforce the peace of the world," to "enforce," remember that, "enforce." "Enforce" means to bring around by force if necessary, and he was right. The present Chief Justice of the United States was the president of the league to "enforce" the peace of the world. That was before they found out that Woodrow Wilson, poor fellow, was going to indorse it, and after they found out that he was going to indorse it, of course they were opposed to it. They thought that they could get along pretty well personally inside of and with the Republican Party, and one of them has been rewarded since by being made Secretary of State, and one of them by being made Chief Justice of the United States.

I belonged to the "League to Enforce Peace," and finally, when I found out how this thing was going on, I wrote to them and said, "I belong to this league, and I understood it was to enforce peace. I have never been ass enough to imagine that any court could have any influence in the world unless it had force behind it somewhere, patent or latent, actual or understood. So, when I joined your League to 'Enforce' Peace, I thought you meant to enforce it. But when I find"—I did not say then the future Secretary of State or the future Chief Justice of the United States, because I did not know their future—

"but when I found out that those gentlemen objected to the League of Nations principally on account of article 10, which hinted that there might be some enforcement of its terms, I ceased, spiritually at any rate, to be a member of the body, and I wish you would accept my resignation."

So I resigned and left them.

Mr. President, the utmost humiliation I have ever had upon this floor was in seeing a few Democrats advocating the League of Nations and attempting to explain that there was no force behind it. If there was no force behind it, then it amounted to nothing. A justice of the peace without a constable, a circuit court without a sheriff, a Supreme Court of the United States without its marshals, and, in the long run, the Army and Navy of the United States, is as helpless as a kitten playing with a rat, and everybody of any common sense ought to know that. So, when I voted for the League of Nations, I voted for an amphictyonic council of the civilized nations of the world to enforce peace, and to say that any outlaw nation that dared ever, under any circumstances, to make war without previously offering to leave the questions in controversy to a fair arbitrament was an outlaw nation, and thereby became an enemy of all the balance of the civilized world, and ought to be conquered as quickly as could be.

You did not take that view of it. The American people did not, not because they were opposed to the League of Nations, but because the Germans were opposed to Wilson, because the Irish were opposed to him, and because the pacifists always were opposed to everybody who wanted to do anything much, and the Socialists also hit him under the left breast as they went along, and the balance of the electorate was "tired of Europe anyway," and thought that by saying so they could get her out of our lives. So Wilson, poor fellow, was wounded on the line of battle, and retired to the White House, but has not received any pension as one of the disabled of the war, though he was as much disabled as any man who went into it, and for as high motives and as cruel and malicious and petty reasons.

Oh, Mr. President, we, all of us, have to be one of two things. We can not worship God and worship mammon both the same day. If you want the peace of the world, you have to be for the peace of the world, and you have to love peace so much that you are willing to fight for it. A man who does not love peace enough to fight for it does not love peace at all. That was all there was in article 10, and these distinguished gentlemen, of course, quit because they wanted to maintain their political relations with you and the balance of your party, including the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who had made a very distinguished speech once in his life in favor of an amphictyonic council of the civilized nations of the world to maintain peace, although he did not call it by that particular name.

Do you think you can fool the American people for 20 more years, or for 10, or even 5, or even 4, upon that basis, when you and the Senator from Idaho are prepared to part company to-morrow upon some little domestic question involving putting public money into private pockets? You can not do it.

A distinguished German wrote a book once which he called "God in History"—"Gott in der Geschichte"—outlining how throughout all the ages the will of God somehow had prevailed, going forward step by step along a broader line of vision—the human race going forward notwithstanding square heads and narrow heads, frequently honest with the will of God throughout all the time.

You think you can stop it, but you can not. One of two things is absolutely certain: This world is going to chaos and anarchy and the white race is going to lose its rule over it, and the colored races in the world, whether in religion Mohammedan or Buddhist or Hindu, are going to attain sovereignty and predominance—either that is going to happen or the white race all over this world will have to unite in a determined, cooperative effort to secure the peace of the world among the white races. If we can secure that, we are safe from the inferior races; and if we can not secure it, we are not safe from the inferior races. They have the advantage of us in birth rate; they have the advantage of us in living close to the soil, and they are not our inferiors in mere physical courage. Many an average Mississippi "nigger" is not my inferior or yours as a white man in physical courage. You could not get 50 negroes to face 50 white men, but you can get one negro to face one white man "most any day in the morning."

Where is the Senator from Arkansas? I interrupted him, and I want to apologize for it; but I see that my interruption has caused his desertion of this august body, so I can not apologize. But I hope my words will be received in good part. Of course, both the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] especially, but all of the other Senators as well, I think, know that I do not hate anybody; I do not really dislike anybody.

Mr. BORAH. Not even the Irish?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not mind how mean a man may be, I do not much dislike him anyhow, and in what I have said I do not mean to hurt any man's feelings, least of all yours, but you have to learn. Neither of you is too old to learn, although both of you are getting along pretty well. But you have to learn that this world goes forward by the will of God and does not go forward by your will or by mine; that you and I are just flies on the spoke of a wheel, and the wheel is going around.

Mr. BORAH. I have always had that impression.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And all we can do is to let the wheel go. Now and then we may check up the wheel a little bit. But the will of God, which is the will of the Prince of Peace, that there shall be "peace on earth among men of good will" has to prevail, and when you try to stop it you have gained a little momentary triumph—I believe 7,000,000 majority, was it not? However large it was—

Mr. BORAH. It was enough.

Mr. WILLIAMS. For the time; yes. I thank God that above all things in the world public opinion is not in the long run measured by numberings. It is measured by weight. There is on this earth aristocracy of intelligence, and that will win in the long run. This aristocracy of intelligence can bring the democracies of numbers to their support after they have duly and completely explained just what they want and what the earth ought to have. We are going to have it, and you can not help it any more than one of my grandchildren could keep me from walking out of the front door if I wanted to do so.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I had not expected when I took the floor to read the admirable statement made by Mr. Gompers to precipitate a discussion over the League of Nations. I know the Senate is anxious to consider the Army bill, and I shall occupy but a few moments in replying to one or two statements submitted by Senators in the debate.

First, I see nothing inconsistent in a profound conviction that the League of Nations is of importance in the world and that the United States should have entered the league, and a belief that it should now tender its good offices to prevent another conflagration in Europe; and the fact that France may have occupied the Ruhr under a technical construction of the Versailles treaty is not incompatible with the view that the league is a salutary agency in the world and that the United States should have entered it. No one contended that the league would prevent all racial antipathy or prevent future wars. No one believed that when States were formed and courts established there would be perfect peace within the boundaries of those States and that all crimes would cease. There can be no question but that if this Nation were a member of the league France's attitude would have been and would now be entirely different. Nor can there be any doubt as to what the attitude of Germany would be, or would have been, if the United States had been and was now a member of the League of Nations. It can not be said that the League of Nations is the cause of the present controversy between France and Germany. Perhaps if there had been no league, and certainly if the United States had not been at the peace conference, terms would have been exacted from Germany which would have been more oppressive; and, quite likely, controversies would have arisen before this which would have renewed the fires of war and brought about European conflicts of a most serious and destructive character. That the league has not had the influence and power that was designed that it should possess must be conceded, but it must also be said that the refusal of the United States to adhere to the league has been the principal reason for its weakness.

It has been stated in the debate to-day, and that statement has often been made upon the floor of the Senate, that the Versailles treaty was the cause of the industrial and political chaos of Europe. I grant that there are many harsh and unwise provisions to be found within the Versailles treaty. When we consider the circumstances under which it was prepared, it could not be otherwise. A world war had just been ended. Millions of men were still under arms, peoples were ready to fly at each other's throats, and the smoke of battle was still in the eyes not only of those who had been under arms, but indeed millions of people, including statesmen and intellectuals. It was impossible in such a situation to prepare a treaty dealing with such momentous questions comprehending continents and islands, indeed, seas and lakes and rivers in every part of the globe, that would be absolutely fair and just. It must be remembered what some of the objects of the victorious nations were. The allied and associated nations did not precipitate the war, but after the war was thrust upon them they determined that when it ended certain territorial adjustments must be made and ancient wrongs to defenseless peoples must be righted.

Senators will recall that President Wilson stated what some of the objects of the war were, and what some of the terms of peace should be. The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], in a very able and eloquent speech in this Chamber, declared among other things that when the war had ended, and when the terms of peace were written, provisions must be made in unmistakable language providing for the restoration of Alsace and Lorraine to France and that certain reparations and indemnity should be awarded against the central empires. He further declared that Belgium should be compensated and receive indemnities for the cruel wrongs which Germany had inflicted upon her. He further stated that Poland was to be reconstructed and a Polish State established, that Yugoslavia was to be recreated, and that the millions of Czechs and Slavs inhabiting what is now known as Czechoslovakia should have the right to set up a government of their own and be freed from the autocratic power of Austria-Hungary.

My recollection is that he spoke for Italy and demanded that territory which ethnically and geographically belonged to Italy should be restored and Austrian sovereignty thereover extinguished. Greece and Armenia, according to the view of the able Senator, were to receive consideration, and an Armenian State was to be established, and Greece was to regain territory which historically and by every standard of justice belonged to her. The American people, as well as the allied nations, perceived that when the treaty at the conclusion of the war was to be written ancient wrongs were to be righted, new boundaries of States were to be drawn, and new States were to be erected.

Mr. President, I submit that the problems and the issues presented at the peace conference were so stupendous that no treaty could be written that would be free from imperfections and devoid of serious mistakes. Those who participated in drafting the treaty undoubtedly perceived that changes and modifications in the terms of the treaty would be required and that rectification of boundaries would be necessary. We know that one of the controlling reasons that led President Wilson to insist upon making the covenant of the League of Nations a part of the treaty grew out of the knowledge which he had that changes in the treaty would inevitably be required. He saw that unless tribunals and instrumentalities were set up to make these changes they would be made by the sword and upon the battle field. He therefore insisted upon the creation of machinery, the establishment of arbitral tribunals and courts, and agencies of conciliation to whom appeals might be made by dissatisfied peoples and nations and whose influence and authority would be sufficient to rectify mistakes made and prevent resort to the hazards of war.

Undoubtedly, as I have indicated, the treaty was imperfect. It was a mistake, unquestionably, not to have fixed the reparations to be paid by Germany. It is quite likely the terms exacted of Germany were too severe and that they should be modified. But, as I have stated, if there had been no Versailles treaty there would probably have been some other treaty with terms more onerous and exacting. It has been said that the Versailles treaty did not regard the economic rights of the people of Europe and that territorial lines were fixed in contravention of the economic and, perhaps, in some instances the ethnographic situation. Concede all this to be true, I repeat it is not sufficient reason to destroy the treaty root and branch and all the instrumentalities set up for its rectification.

Mr. President, one other point. When the treaty was before the Senate for consideration there was but little said concerning the so-called injustices of its provisions. The storm raged around the provisions dealing with the covenant of the League of Nations. For months it was contended that these provisions set up a supergovernment and that the sovereignty of the United States was being jeopardized. It was argued that article 10 compelled the United States to go to war in defense of the territorial integrity and the political independence of all signatories to the treaty. It was charged that we were guaranteeing the boundaries of all nations members of the league. Much irrelevant and hysterical talk was indulged in, and time has demonstrated that many of the prophecies made as to what the treaty was and what it meant were without foundation. But there was scant discussion of the so-called "oppressive" provisions of the treaty. The late lamented Senator Knox, in a very strong speech, contended that the treaty dealt harshly with Germany. Senator Thomas, from Colorado, contended that part 13, which dealt with labor and cognate questions, was very dangerous. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Mc-

CUMBER] also criticized the provisions of part 13 and I offered a reservation dealing with that important part of the covenant of the league. But, broadly speaking, there was no criticism of the treaty upon the grounds that it dismembered States or ignored economic and ethnographic and geographic lines or that it was unduly severe toward the vanquished nations.

Mr. President, I am not arguing against modifications of the treaty, nor am I insisting that its provisions should be religiously enforced. Upon the contrary, I concede its imperfections, but insist that in the circumstances surrounding its preparation no better or more perfect instrument could have been expected. The nations of Europe and the signatories to the treaty should avail themselves of the instrumentalities provided in the league and adjust any controversies that may arise with respect to the terms of the treaty or the manner of their enforcement.

If the United States should not enter the league, it should, at least, not seek its destruction or attempt to prevent the realization of all legitimate and fair war aims as they were declared by the American people and by humane statesmen who controlled the affairs of the allied nations. And in this dark hour, our Nation should use its powerful influence to stabilize Europe and to bring peace and concord to a distracted and unhappy world.

Mr. President, when interrupted sometime ago by the Senators who have given us a very illuminating discussion of the league and cognate matters, I was about to read a further brief statement appearing in the same paper as the article containing Mr. Gompers's statement and to which undoubtedly his statement refers. In an Associated Press dispatch from Berlin, the following appears:

BERLIN, February 2.—The "traditional American honor and appreciation of fair play" are appealed to in a message forwarded by leading trade-union executives to the Senate and House of Representatives in Washington.

The appeal, which gives expression to "the feeling of alarm" with which 12,000,000 German workers view the Ruhr, voices the confidence that the United States did not enter the war "for the purpose of annihilating the German people," and declares that "American honor asserted at this time can save Europe and the world from inevitable disaster."

Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] stated that the United States occupies a paramount and pre-eminent position in the world to-day. Undoubtedly that is true. However, he insists that the policy suggested by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and by others, that our Nation should aid in composing the economic and industrial conditions of Europe, is unwise and should not be followed. Our paramount position in this view is of no importance. If the Senator from Idaho shall offer his resolution again, asking that a conference be called to consider economic conditions in the world, as well as a further limitation of land and naval armament, undoubtedly the Senator from Connecticut, adhering to the views which he had expressed, which means, as I understand them, that the United States shall pursue a policy of isolation, will oppose the same; and I have no doubt that the Senator will also oppose the resolution which I offered in November, 1921, calling for a conference of certain nations for the purpose of stabilizing exchange, facilitating trade and commerce and bringing about improved conditions throughout the world. Mr. President, as I see the situation, it is the duty of the United States to assume a position of leadership in the world. It should point the way for peace and progress and for material and moral advancement. This is no time for this Nation to hide its light under a bushel. It has been by Providence set upon the hill and its light must shine to illumine the world.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, in view of the range the discussion has taken, and which I do not desire in the slightest to prolong, I think it would be useful to have printed in the RECORD at this point a summary of the work of the League of Nations, as recently published in the Kansas City Journal-Post. I therefore ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point that summary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SHORT CATECHISM UPON THAT LEAGUE FOR PEACE.

The League of Nations was organized to prevent war. It sits in Geneva.

There is a great war in Asia Minor. Did the League of Nations prevent it? The League of Nations did not.

Does the League of Nations stop it? The League of Nations does not. Did the League of Nations try to prevent it, or does it try to stop it? The League of Nations did not and does not even try.

Mr. Wilson's article 10 of the covenant was to unite all members of the league against all war makers.

Is article 10 still in force? It is.

Do the members of the league take steps to apply it? They do not. What do they do? England and France, the chief powers in the league, take pains to violate it. On opposite sides, they have encouraged the war instead of rousing the league against it, have helped start it and continue it.

Still the League of Nations sits in Geneva and pretends to be a league for peace.

Was there ever a vainer and bloodier humbug on earth? Not that history records; not that the experience of man has encountered.

The United States is still urged to become a part of this humbug. Will the United States do so?

Not so long as it is the United States that it has been up to this hour.—Kansas City Journal-Post.

REHABILITATION OF AUSTRIA.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, there has been a recent discussion of the League of Nations and the work accomplished by it. One of the wrecks left in the late great World War was Austria. It was helpless financially and in every way as a nation. I desire to have read at the desk a short extract from the Evening Star of yesterday showing what the league has done to rebuild Austria financially and otherwise and to bring hope to those desperate people.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator before the article is read?

Mr. SWANSON. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. I was in Austria last summer. There was no such complete wrecking of a people in the history of modern times as in Austria. All its agricultural sources would only feed its people for two months. It had to get credit for 10 months' food. It had no raw material. It was absolutely helpless, and the people were facing a winter of starvation if it had not been for the action of the league. I merely wished to say that.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, before the article is read I merely wish to say that here was a nation which was destitute, in wretched financial condition, and politically bankrupt. It had tried for three years to obtain assistance in the markets of the world, to secure loans in order to enable its people to rebuild their devastated country and again start on a career of usefulness and progress. They have been saved almost from starvation. There was no agency in the world to which they could apply for relief except the League of Nations. Let this body, that has so repeatedly derided the League of Nations, know the good work which has been accomplished by it in relieving one of the most wretched and destitute of nations. I ask the Secretary to read the portion of the Evening Star of yesterday which I have marked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

[Washington Evening Star, Friday, February 2, 1923.]

GUARANTEE AUSTRIAN LOAN.

The financial salvation of Austria was announced to the council by the Earl of Balfour as virtually an accomplished fact, and M. Viviani, who referred to the league as "the last resort for nations and States whose problems have become insoluble," said the council now was ready for other problems.

The committee's report to the council set forth that the needed loan of 650,000,000 gold crowns had been guaranteed to the amount of 84 per cent by Great Britain, France, Italy, and Czechoslovakia; that 9 per cent more had been pledged by Spain, Belgium, and Switzerland; and that Sweden, Denmark, Norway, and Holland would guarantee the balance. Thus bankers will be fully guaranteed for any loans they make to Austria up to the total fixed by the committee.

Chancellor Seipel, of Austria, thanking the council for coming to the rescue of his country, said it enabled Austria "to preserve its political independence," which was taken as an allusion to the declarations made prior to the league's intervention that if Austria's finances were not restored she would fall into the arms of Germany.

WANT BARRIERS CUT.

The chancellor announced that all the reforms demanded as a condition of the loans had been put into effect, and said that the successful progress of the league's efforts had "revived the sunken hopes of the Austrian people. But it is not yet all," he added; "we must be freed from the economic chains that have been stretched around us since the war."

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "General Staff Corps, contingencies, Military Intelligence Division," on page 6, line 10, after the word "offices," to strike out "and garages," and in line 19, after the word "information," to strike out "$130,000" and insert "$162,680," so as to read:

For contingent expenses of the Military Intelligence Division, General Staff Corps, including the purchase of law books, professional books of reference; subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals; drafting, clerical, and messenger services in the Military Intelligence

Division in Washington, D. C.; and of the military attachés at the United States embassies and legations abroad and rental of offices for such military attachés; the cost of special instruction at home and abroad, and in maintenance of students and attachés; for the hire of interpreters, special agents, and guides; and for such other purposes as the Secretary of War may deem proper, including $5,000 for the actual and necessary expenses of officers of the Army on duty abroad for the purpose of observing operations of the Secretary of War States at war, to be paid upon certificates of the Secretary of War that the expenditures were necessary for obtaining military information, $162,680; to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if there was sufficient evidence before the Committee on Appropriations to justify the increase here proposed?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The committee restored the item of the Budget Bureau estimate because they thought the evidence was sufficient.

Mr. KING. I suppose the hearings before the House committee were very full and complete upon the item?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Quite full, although there is nothing in the House hearings to disclose the reason for the reduction.

Mr. KING. What did the Budget recommend?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The same figures.

Mr. KING. One hundred and thirty thousand dollars?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Budget estimate was $162,500.

Mr. KING. What did the War Department request?

Mr. WADSWORTH. One hundred and sixty-two thousand five hundred.

Mr. KING. The Budget gave what was requested?

Mr. WADSWORTH. This was the mechanism of the Budget so far as the War Department was concerned. The different subdivisions of the War Department all made their estimates to the War Department budget officer. That officer, under the direction of the Secretary of War, made up the aggregate of the estimates for the War Department, many reductions being suggested at that point of the procedure. Then that aggregate of the estimates of the War Department itself was submitted to the Director of the Budget and to the President. A further reduction was ordered or requested by the Director of the Budget and the President, and an outside figure set, the War Department then being left to arrange the details of the different inside appropriations in order that the aggregate of them should be within the figures set by the Budget.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 6, line 21, before the word "shall," to strike out "$70,000" and insert "$88,680," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That not more than $88,680 shall be expended for drafting, clerical, and messenger services in the Military Intelligence Division, General Staff Corps, in Washington, D. C.

The amendment was agreed to.

DEPARTMENTAL USE OF AUTOMOBILES.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I do not believe that the subject to which I now desire to advert arises under the amendment which has just been agreed to, but I wish at this time to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. WADSWORTH] a question. Were any reductions made in the bill this year on account of the purchase, upkeep, and expense of operating automobiles, or are the same appropriations made for that purpose which were made last year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the expenditure for the purchase, upkeep, and maintenance of automobiles is carried under the appropriation headed "Transportation of the Army and its supplies." The Senator from Tennessee will find that there is a proviso on page 35 reading as follows:

And provided further, That none of the funds appropriated or made available under this act or any of the unexpended balances of any other act shall be used for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger or freight carrying vehicles for the Army except those that are purchased solely for experimental purposes.

The Army has not purchased any trucks or passenger-carrying automobiles since the World War, and the annual appropriation for transportation of the Army and its supplies has been growing smaller and smaller.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I call attention to the report of the Secretary of War, which in itself seems rather to indicate that some automobiles have been purchased, although the report does not say so in words. In answer to a resolution of the Senate on this subject, the Secretary of War on January 29 filed a report, to which I wish to call the attention of the Senator from New York. The table accompanying the letter of the Secretary of War shows that as of January 26, 1923, the Secretary of War had furnished to him two automobiles, and under the head of "Cost of vehicles" are the figures $11,431. I notice in a note at the foot of the report the statement as to these vehicles that they were "All purchased during the World War." The salary of chauffeurs per month was $158.33.

The Assistant Secretary of War had one automobile, the cost of which was $3,221.

General of the Armies, four vehicles, at a cost of $32,800, which it is stated are chauffeured by enlisted men.

Office of the Chief of Staff, cost of vehicle $869, which is chauffeured by enlisted men.

Deputy Chief of Staff, two automobiles, at $16,400. Evidently those were automobiles which cost $8,200 apiece. Those also were chauffeured by enlisted men.

Commanding general, district of Washington, $3,221, for automobile, and chauffeur at $75 per month.

Office of commanding general, district of Washington, one automobile, which cost $2,298.

Commanding officer, general intermediate depot, $3,065 for one automobile, and a chauffeur at $75 per month.

One for the district motor transport officer, $869, and chauffeur's salary $75 per month.

Office of the quartermaster supply officer, one at $3,155, and a chauffeur at $150 per month.

One for the welfare service, $869, with a chauffeur at $75 per month.

As a pool for attending surgeons, six automobiles, which cost $5,214; chauffeurs, $600 a month, with two shifts.

Five for general service, at $11,490; chauffeurs, $375 a month.

Two for funerals, which cost $4,596; chauffeurs from general pool.

Five for State Department for conference on Central American affairs, $11,490, with two chauffeurs; enlisted men, I presume.

Fort Myer, three; cost, $4,959.

Fort Washington, Md., two, at $3,934.

Fort Humphreys, Va., two, at $3,167.

Bolling Field, two, at $3,167.

Walter Reed Hospital, two, at $3,167.

Washington Barracks, two, at $1,738.

Army War College, three, at $6,388.

There are three Government garages, and the monthly salaries of various employees of those garages are stated to be $450, $3,343.31, and $3,965.43, respectively.

For one garage the rental per year is $3,000; another is United States property; and the rental of the third is $7,182 a year.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the report of the Secretary of War in full and also the matter accompanying the Secretary's report, being the figures for the Engineer Department, all showing the extravagant use of automobiles.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 29, 1923.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: In response to Senate Resolution No. 399, directing the head of each department to furnish certain information concerning the number of passenger automobiles in use by such department, by direction of the President I transmit to you:

(a) A report from the Chief of Engineers covering the Office of Public Buildings and Grounds and the District Engineer, appended and marked "(a)."

(b) A report from the Quartermaster General, appended and marked "(b)."

These two reports cover all the motor passenger transportation in use in the city of Washington, D. C., under control of the War Department.

Reports covering the motor passenger transportation in use outside of the district of Washington and under control of the War Department will be transmitted to you as soon as the necessary compilations have been completed.

Respectfully,

JOHN W. WEEKS, Secretary of War.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the time was when it was thought that a Cabinet officer was rather extravagant in having a carriage and a pair of horses. Now, we contribute to Cabinet officers as much in the way of automobiles and expenses incident thereto as we do in salary.

I call attention to the report of the Attorney General, for instance, which is now before me. I quote:

Harry M. Daugherty, Attorney General, Washington, D. C., cost of automobile (Packard), $6,857.

There is a note which reads:

Cost of the car is amount paid exclusive of allowance on old Hudson car.

The cost of operation and upkeep of this new Packard is stated to be $1,785.52, and salary of the chauffeur for one year is fixed at $2,040. Not knowing how much the Hudson car cost, it is difficult to get the exact amount the Packard car cost the United States Government. Assuming that it was a $10,000 Packard and the allowance for the old Hudson made up the difference, then this car cost the Government nearly $14,000. My recollection is that we pay as salary to the Attorney General of the United States the sum of $12,000.

So, Mr. President, the reason why I am asking that these reports be printed in the Record is because I feel that the extravagant use of the people's money should be made public. We should know what we are doing. Think of it! We pay our Attorney General $12,000 a year and then furnish more than $12,000 a year to keep him in an automobile; and other members of the Cabinet the same way.

I refer again to our distinguished Commanding General of the Army, a man for whom I entertain the highest esteem and respect and regard. We furnish him four automobiles, and the cost of those automobiles is put down at $32,000, and the cost of upkeep, maintenance, and chauffeurs amounts to many, many thousands of dollars more.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the report in regard to the Attorney General's office may be printed in the Record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be printed in the Record.

The report is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 30, 1923.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: In response to Senate Resolution 399, dated January 6, 1923, which calls for certain information relative to passenger automobiles in use by the various departments of the Government, I have the honor to submit herewith report pertaining to the Department of Justice.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have here a report from Hon. Edwin Denby, Secretary of the Navy, which I ask to be printed in the RECORD also as a part of my remarks. I call attention to the fact that the Secretary of the Navy is much more modest in his use of automobiles or the kind of automobiles that he uses. He rides in a car that cost only $3,500.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the report will be printed in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,

NOTE A.—This report covers the latest quarter year for which returns have been received. The fiscal year 1922 is not taken as a basis for this report for the reason that many cars in use during the year are not now in use, while some now in use were not in use during that year. Variations in cost of upkeep and operation are due to differences in mileage and character and extent of repairs during the quarter. Chauffeurs operate different cars as required. All cars are over 4 years old, and consequently expensive to maintain and operate. The law forbids purchase of new cars.

NOTE B.—Passenger automobiles are not assigned exclusively to any official or person, and no names are therefore reported. The following instructions are in force: April 2, 1917. The bureau (Yards and Docks) has been directed by the Acting Secretary of the Navy to inform commandants that all passenger-carrying automobiles are to be used for official purposes of the navy yard or station, and are to be available for the use of any of the officers or employees whose official duties require the service of the automobile, and that they are not to be considered as having been furnished for the exclusive use of the commandant.

INDEPENDENT OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13696) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
February 2, 1923.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 5, 6, and 7 to the bill (H. R. 13696) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes," and concur therein.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert:

"The General Accounting Office is hereby authorized to destroy United States Government checks that have been paid six full fiscal years, issued by the Bureau of Pensions for the payment of pensions, by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and the United States Veterans' Bureau for the payment of military and naval compensation on account of death or disability, and checks for the payment of salaries and wages of officers and employees of the Government of the United States, after all unpaid checks have been listed as outstanding as now required by law, and all claims on account of checks of the foregoing classes appearing as having been paid shall be barred if not presented to the General Accounting Office within six full fiscal years after the date of payment."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: Of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out ", to be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert:

"DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE BUILDING.

"The responsibility for the care, maintenance, and protection of the building or buildings occupied by the Department of Commerce in the District of Columbia and the disbursement of the funds appropriated therefor, together with all the machinery, tools, equipment, and supplies used, or for use, in connection therewith, shall be transferred on July 1, 1923, from the Secretary of Commerce to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings.

"Department of Commerce Building—Salaries: For the following employees, for maintenance and protection: Engineer and electrician, $1,400; carpenter, $1,000; electrician, $1,000; three elevator conductors at $720 each; five guards at $720 each; three firemen at $720 each; assistant forewoman, $720; twenty-one laborers at $660 each; toilet attendant, $480; in all, $26,380.

"For fuel, lights, repairs, miscellaneous items, and printing, $18,650: Provided, That amounts aggregating $51,500 of the appropriations made to the Department of Commerce for the fiscal year 1924 for care, maintenance, protection, fuel, light, etc., for the Department of Commerce Building are hereby transferred to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings and made available to the extent of $45,030 for payment of the salaries and expenses herein set forth, and the remainder ($6,470) shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of the surplus fund."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert:

"DEPARTMENT OF LABOR BUILDING.

"The responsibility for the care, maintenance, and protection of the building or buildings occupied by the Department of Labor in the District of Columbia and the disbursement of the funds appropriated therefor, together with all the machinery, tools, equipment, and supplies used, or for use, in connection therewith, shall be transferred on July 1, 1923, from the Secretary of Labor to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings.

"Department of Labor Building—Salaries: For the following employees, for maintenance and protection: Engineer, $1,200; general mechanic, $840; 3 elevator conductors at $720 each; 3 firemen at $720 each; 4 guards at $720 each; 12 laborers at $660 each; toilet attendant, $480; in all, $17,640.

"For fuel, lights, repairs, miscellaneous items, and printing, $9,000: Provided, That amounts aggregating $33,300 of the appropriations made to the Department of Labor for the fiscal year 1924 for care, maintenance, protection, fuel, light, etc., for the Department of Labor Building are hereby transferred to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings, and made available to the extent of $26,640 for payment of the salaries and expenses herein set forth, and the remainder ($6,660) shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of the surplus fund."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert:

"DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE BUILDING.

"The responsibility for the care, maintenance, and protection of the building or buildings occupied by the Department of Justice in the District of Columbia and the disbursement of the funds appropriated therefor, together with all the machinery, tools, equipment, and supplies used, or for use, in connection therewith shall be transferred on July 1, 1923, from the United States Attorney General to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings.

"Department of Justice Building—Salaries: For the following employees, for maintenance and protection: Engineer, $1,200; electrician, $1,000; carpenter, $1,000; 3 firemen at $720 each; 5 elevator conductors at $720 each; 5 guards at $720 each; 15 laborers at $660 each; toilet attendant, $480; in all, $22,940.

"For fuel, lights, repairs, and maintenance items, and printing, $11,000: Provided, That amounts aggregating $42,550 of the appropriations made to the Department of Justice for the fiscal year 1924 for care, maintenance, protection, fuel, light, etc., for the Department of Justice Building are hereby transferred to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings and made available to the extent of $33,940 for payment of the salaries and expenses herein set forth, and the remainder ($8,610) shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of the surplus fund."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert:

"CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION BUILDING.

"The responsibility for the care, maintenance, and protection of the building or buildings occupied by the Civil Service Commission in the District of Columbia and the disbursement of the funds appropriated therefor, together with all the machinery, tools, equipment, and supplies used, or for use, in connection therewith, shall be transferred on July 1, 1923, from the United States Civil Service Commission to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings.

"Civil Service Commission Building—Salaries: For the following employees, for maintenance and protection: Carpenter, $1,000; general mechanic, $840; 2 elevator conductors at $720 each; 3 guards at $720 each; 4 laborers at $660 each; toilet attendant, $480; in all, $8,560; for fuel, lights, repairs, miscellaneous items, and printing, $4,000; in all, $12,560, which sum is hereby appropriated."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert:

"INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION BUILDING.

"The responsibility for the care, maintenance, and protection of the building or buildings occupied by the Interstate Commerce Commission in the District of Columbia and the disbursement of the funds appropriated therefor, together with all the machinery, tools, equipment, and supplies used, or for use, in connection therewith, shall be transferred on July 1, 1923, from the Interstate Commerce Commission to the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings.

"Interstate Commerce Building—Salaries: For the following employees, for maintenance and protection: Assistant superintendent, $2,000; engineer, $1,600; electrician, $1,600; carpenter, $1,400; 3 firemen at $840 each; 6 elevator conductors at $720 each; 5 guards at $720 each; assistant foreman, $1,000; assistant forewoman, $720; 24 laborers at $660 each; toilet attendant, $480; for fuel, lights, repairs, miscellaneous items, and printing, $19,000; in all, $54,080, which sum is hereby appropriated."

That the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 10 and 25.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate numbered 8, 16, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 33, that the Senate further insist upon its amendments numbered 10 and 25, and ask for a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. HARRIS conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by title and referred to the Committee on Finance:

H. R. 10816. An act to fix the annual salary of the collector of customs for the district of North Carolina;

H. R. 13770. An act to amend the revenue act of 1921, in respect to capital gains and losses, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 13827. An act relating to the sinking fund for bonds and notes of the United States.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Army War College," on page 8, line 13, before the words "at $1,600 each," to strike out "six" and insert "seven"; in line 16, before the word "watchmen," to strike out "four" and insert "five"; in line 17, before the word "firemen," to strike out "three" and insert "four"; and in line 20, to strike out "$58,220" and insert "$61,260," so as to make the paragraph read:

For expenses of the Army War College, being for the purchase of the necessary special stationery; textbooks, books of reference, scientific and professional papers and periodicals; maps; police utensils; employment of temporary, technical, or special services and expenses of special lecturers; and for all other absolutely necessary expenses, including $25 per month additional to regular compensation to chief clerk for superintendence of the Army War College Building; also for pay of the following: Chief clerk, $2,000; clerks—2 at $1,800 each, 7 at $1,600 each, 6 at $1,400 each, 6 at $1,200 each, 3 at $1,000 each; chief engineer, $1,400; assistant engineer, $1,000; captain of the watch, $900; 5 watchmen, at $720 each; 4 firemen, at $720 each; packer, $840; 3 messengers, at $720 each; laborers—1 $720, 1 $600; gardener, $720; 5 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $61,260.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General Service Schools, Fort Leavenworth, Kans., on page 9, at the end of line 5, to strike out "$45,000" and insert "$42,200," so as to make the paragraph read:

For the purchase of textbooks, books of reference, scientific and professional papers, instruments, and material for instruction; employment of temporary, technical, special, and clerical services, including the services of one translator at the rate of $150 per month; and for other necessary expenses of instruction, at the School of the Line and the General Staff School, Fort Leavenworth, Kans., $42,200.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator why the amount at the top of page 9 was cut down from $45,000 to $42,200?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the item to meet the general expenses of the general service schools at Fort Leavenworth. The appropriation this year was $35,000. The Budget estimate for the necessary expense of those schools was $42,200. The House of Representatives appropriated $45,000. We could find nothing in the House hearings which justified the increase over the Budget, so we reduced it to the Budget figure.

Mr. McKELLAR. Which was very, very proper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Military post exchanges," on page 9, line 21, after the word "established," to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$85,000," so as to read:

For continuing the construction, equipment, and maintenance of suitable buildings at military posts and stations, for the conduct of the post exchange, school, reading, lunch, amusement rooms; for the conduct and maintenance of libraries, service clubs, chapels, and gymnasiums, including repairs to buildings erected at private cost, in the operation of the act approved May 31, 1902, and including salaries and travel for civilians employed in the hostess and library services, and for transportation of books and equipment for these services; for the rental of films, purchase of slides, for and making repairs to moving-picture outfits, and for similar and other recreational purposes at training and mobilization camps now established, or which may be hereafter established, $85,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 22, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$37,500," and in line 24, after the word "exceed" to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$37,500"; so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That not to exceed $37,500 from this appropriation may be expended for the conduct and maintenance of libraries and not to exceed $37,500 may be expended for the conduct and maintenance of hostess houses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 9, after the word "regulations," to insert a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That no part of the $85,000 herein appropriated shall be used for payment of teachers or for equipment of schools for children at military posts.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should be very glad if the chairman of the committee would explain that item. Why is that proviso inserted?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The committee believes that it is not the function or the obligation of the Government to pay for the education of the children of the officers of the Army; hence the proviso forbidding the use of any of this money for the employment of teachers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator tell us about how much was used for that purpose?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Ten thousand dollars was expected to be used.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then should not the item have been reduced by $10,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the estimate of the Budget was $85,000. It is true that the House reduced that by $10,000. The Senate committee inserted the proviso to which the Senator has referred, but felt so strongly that the hostess service and the library service of the Army should not be cut down to the extraordinary extent suggested that we agreed to propose $85,000, to be dispensed solely for libraries and hostess houses; none for teachers. There is no increase in the appropriation.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is an increase of $10,000 over the House appropriation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I meant none over that of this year. It is a decrease.

Mr. McKELLAR. The House fixed the amount at $75,000, and the Senate raised it $10,000, and then took out the amount of $10,000 usually given to the schools, making a virtual increase of $20,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; the $10,000 can not be counted twice. I hope the Senator will not do that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; it can, because the committee gave them $10,000 more than the House gave them, and then it struck out one of the items that the House included—namely, the schools, $10,000—which would in effect make a difference of $20,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We gathered from the hearings and from our knowledge of the ideas of the Members of the House who drafted this bill that they, too, are not in favor of the employment of teachers for the education at Government expense of the children of Army officers. They cut $10,000 from the estimate. We surmised that they did that for the purpose of preventing the employment of teachers. We wanted to make it certain, so we put in the proviso. Then we came to the consideration of how much we could permit to be spent for the hostess houses and for the libraries for the soldiers. This year the appropriation was $115,000. Most of the hostesses have had to be discharged. Most of the librarians have had to be discharged. I think together, in the two categories, there are only 30 now employed, and we believed that the estimate of $85,000 should be granted and all of it used for those two purposes equally divided.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator entirely about the necessity for this appropriation for the hostess houses. I think it is a very proper and really a necessary thing, but I think the committee is mistaken in reference to the teaching of the children. I am a great believer in education. I do not know whether or not the children of these enlisted men will be able to get education unless the Government does furnish it. It seems to me that no $10,000 could be expended any better, perhaps, than that expended for the benefit of the children in a case like this, and I regret very much that the committee has put on this proviso. I do not object at all to the increase in the amount to $85,000, because I have no doubt the House has left it too low, and I really wish it could be made more.

It is one of those worthy cases where it ought to be made more. The hostess houses are necessary, and the teachers for the children are necessary, and both ought to have been allowed. I would a great deal rather vote to use the people's money for worthy purposes, such as the two here, than vote for the extravagant waste of money in the use of automobiles for almost all the officers. I think it would be very much wiser, and I am going to vote against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head "Organized reserves," on page 10, at the beginning of line 16, to strike out "$900,000" and insert "$1,100,000"; at the beginning of line 18, to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$300,000"; in the same line, after the word "mileage," to strike out "$250,000" and insert "$275,000," and at the end of line 19, to strike out "$1,350,000" and insert "$1,675,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

Officers' Reserve Corps: For pay and allowance of reserve officers called to active duty for 15 days' training, $1,100,000; for pay of reserve officers called to active duty for more than 15 days in accordance with law, $300,000; for mileage, $275,000; in all, $1,675,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 20, to increase the appropriation for pay of Enlisted Reserve Corps from "$5,000" to "$7,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 21, after the word "For," to insert "divisional and regiment headquarters and the," and at the end of line 25, to strike out "$350,000" and insert "$494,400," so as to make the paragraph read:

For divisional and regimental headquarters and the establishment and maintenance of camps for training of the Organized Reserves, including transportation, operation of motor cars, water and disposal of sewage, preparation of camp sites, and incidental expenses, $494,400.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator about the language in line 21, and the increase of the item in line 25.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the insertion of the language on line 21 the committee considers absolutely vital to the success of the Organized Reserves.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand from my very hasty examination of the report, the Senate committee has added very greatly to the Organized Reserves. Is this one of the items that will affect the addition that the Senate committee has made?

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is one of them; yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be very glad to hear what the Senator has to say.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As I was saying, the insertion of the words printed in italics on line 21 is regarded by the committee as absolutely vital. The Senator probably knows that one of the elements of the Army of the United States as laid down in the national defense act is the Organized Reserves. It is the purpose, of course, as expressed in the act, to make that element of the Army of the United States the receptacle, as it were, of the man power of the country if the country is ever involved in a war of first magnitude.

We have at present 69,000 reserve officers, all of them, or nearly all of them, veterans of the World War. They are scattered over the country. The War Department, in response to the command of the Congress as expressed in the national defense act, has endeavored to organize, and has succeeded in organizing, in highly skeletonized form a certain number of Organized Reserve divisions. To all intents and purposes there are no enlisted men in the Organized Reserves—I think there are less than 300—but there are 69,000 officers.

In conformity with the command of the Congress, and in its effort to organize these reserve divisions, and thereby to assign as many as possible of the 69,000 reserve officers to skeletonized units locally organized or allotted all over the United States the department has sent out about 250 regular officers to establish and maintain the headquarters of these skeletonized Organized Reserve divisions. Those men are on duty now. They constitute the connecting link, the absolutely necessary connecting link, between the individual reserve officer and the War Department and the general new citizen-army scheme. Without those locally established headquarters to which these reserve officers and enlisted men may come, through which they will get their instructions, through which they will get their bulletins, their correspondence-school instructions, their advice, you have no Organized Reserves at all. If this language is not adopted in the law of this year, as has been contemplated by the acts of Congress of the past, instead of having an Organized Reserve we will have a disorganized reserve; and officers of that category, of course, having all liaison with the War Department destroyed, will simply say: "What is the use? We will resign."

That is my opinion of this situation, and I think the committee felt as I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator's statement is very interesting to me, I assure him, and I want to ask him this question about it: In organizing the reserve, is any attention paid to former organizations, organizations in the World War, or are they made up into a separate organization? For instance, the Senator will recall that in Tennessee we had in part the Thirtieth Division.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is National Guard.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Thirtieth Division of the National Guard; yes. Are those officers in this?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are not in this at all. They are under the National Guard. The Thirtieth Division, which made its name so famous in the smashing of the Hindenburg line, is still maintained in the general organization of the National Guard, and there is to-day a Thirtieth Division of the National Guard located in the States of Tennessee, North and South Carolina.

In regard to the Organized Reserves, the national defense act specifically states that in so far as it is possible the War Department in organizing the National Guard troops and the Organized Reserves of the country shall retain the names and numerals and designations of those units which fought in the World War, and all the Organized Reserve divisions which are to-day organized in highly skeletonized form are the replicas or repetitions of the famous National Army divisions of the late war.

Mr. McKELLAR. They come under this head?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They would come under this head; and it is for those restored and maintained World War divisions that these regimental and divisional headquarters are necessary.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the Senator entirely about it. As I understand it, like provision is made for the National Guard headquarters in other parts of the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Exactly.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I would like to add a word to what the Senator from New York has said as to the necessity for this increase. There are a very large number of reserve officers who had actual service in the last war who have continued their reserve commissions and have been assigned to these reserve divisions, which are at present paper divisions. If by a little summer training those men can be kept in touch with the Army organization, I can not conceive of any finer insurance or any cheaper insurance for the United States than that expense, and I earnestly hope that the full amount recommended by the committee will be allowed by the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from New York, who has charge of the bill, why the House appropriated $350,000, and why the committee made the increase. Possibly the Senator may have explained that. He was in the midst of his presentation of this item when I entered the Chamber. I have a good deal of sympathy with the view that this Officers' Reserve Corps ought to be maintained. I think I can see where there is an opportunity for very great usefulness, but I did not quite understand why the one amount was adopted in the House and the other amount presented here.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the Budget estimate requested the use of the phrase "divisional and regimental headquarters," but the House eliminated that, and did it, of course, intentionally, in order to prevent the spending of the money for the maintenance of these Organized Reserve divisional and regimental headquarters; and I can only surmise that, having for-bidden, indirectly but none the less effectively, the maintenance of any one of the headquarters now being maintained all over the country, the House thereupon reduced the appropriation. That is the only explanation I can give. The $494,000 is the Budget estimate.

Mr. POMERENE. Is it the view of the Senator that the phrase "establishment and maintenance of camps for training," and so forth, would not be broad enough to include, specifically, divisional and regimental headquarters?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; the phrase "divisional and regimental headquarters" implies office space in cities and towns.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask the Senator what provision is made for the professional branches of the service, if any? For instance, do we keep up an organization of physicians in the Army? Is there anywhere in the bill a like provision for the maintenance of a reserve corps in the medical department?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It would come under this.

Mr. McKELLAR. The whole scheme is included in this?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly. Medical reserve officers are assigned to reserve divisions in the proper proportion. For example, in the State of Pennsylvania there has been reestablished the Seventy-ninth Division, a division which existed during the war, which distinguished itself, came home, and was discharged. A thousand reserve officers, living in the State of Pennsylvania and near by, who served in that division, have signified their assent to still belong to the Seventy-ninth Division Reserve. Some of them are the medical officers, and to-day that division, although highly skeletonized as to enlisted strength, contains 1,000 officers, which is almost a full complement of a division in time of war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was out of the Chamber when the Senator made his explanation as to some of these items. May I inquire whether there was evidence offered before the Senate committee, in addition to that offered before the House committee, which induced the Senate committee to make the increases covered by the language on page 10, lines 13 to 25, inclusive?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Most assuredly. If the Senator will permit me, I believe this item, together with the National Guard item, taken in the aggregate, are the two most important items in this bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. My attention was distracted a moment. To what is the Senator now referring?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am endeavoring to answer the question asked by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. McKELLAR. To what did the question relate?

Mr. WADSWORTH. To the item on page 10, the same one we were talking about. In no case, with the exception of the item on line 25, page 10, do we come up to the Budget estimate even. We propose, through the appropriation on line 16, to permit 11,000 reserve officers to go to camp next summer for 15 days. They will cost an average of $100 per officer. The item which next follows, of $300,000, is to pay reserve officers who are called to active duty during the next year for more than 15 days.

Those officers fall under three categories. First, there are about a dozen to fifteen reserve officers on constant duty in the War Department with the General Staff, in order to inject into the professional General Staff mind the citizen-soldier viewpoint, and that has been a maneuver of immense value.

Second, a limited number of reserve officers, with their own consent, and, indeed, at their own request, will be permitted to attend the Army service schools, such as Camp Benning, Fort Riley, Fortress Monroe, Camp Knox, to brush up on the last word in the technique or tactics of their several arms.

The third category of the reserve officers which can be taken care of out of the appropriation of $300,000 includes those reserve officers who signify their willingness to attend the civilian military training camps for the young boys and assist in the instruction of those young boys alongside the Regular officers who have control of that instruction. Those camps last 30 days.

The $300,000 is $26,000 below the estimate. The War Department hopes and the Budget requests that 15,000 reserve officers be sent to camp this summer for 15 days. We allow only 11,000. The House allowed only 9,000. We think 9,000 is too few. Eleven thousand is none too many. If those officers are sent to camp at the rate of 11,000 per year, an officer of the Organized Reserves can only get that 15 days' training once in seven years, as there are 69,000 of them. My own hope is that at a future time we can increase this appropriation so that 15,000 or 20,000 of these men, who number 70,000 in round figures, can go each year; and that would mean that each reserve officer of the United States could get 15 days' training once in three years in brushing himself up to the last word in tactics and regulations.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was the $1,100,000 the Budget estimate?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; the Budget estimate was for $1,500,000 for that item. They wanted 15,000 men, at $100 apiece. We give 11,000 men at $100 apiece.

Mr. McKELLAR. The committee cut the item under the Budget estimate?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are all cut under the Budget, but not cut as severely as the House cut them.

Mr. KING. How does the department arrive at a means of selecting those who are to attend the camps? The Senator says there are 69,000 officers, but only 11,000 will go. How is the selection made?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The selection is decentralized all over the country through the corps area commanders. The commander of each corps area has the task imposed upon him of supervising generally the training of the citizen elements of the Army of the United States. That corps area commander, who, in the case of the Second Corps area, for example, is General Bullard, with headquarters at New York, communicates with the Regular officer who is maintaining divisional headquarters and who knows personally every reserve officer in the district. That headquarters officer communicates by mail weeks in advance with all the reserve officers and ascertains which among them desire to go to the camp; and Senators would be surprised at the percentage who desire to go and who can afford to go and leave their business. He makes the distribution through the different grades, from second lieutenant to colonel, inclusive, makes up the list in consultation with the reserve officers themselves, sends the list to the corps area headquarters commander, and the list is there approved.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Reserve Officers' Training Corps," on page 13, line 5, after the numerals "1920," to strike out "$3,250,000" and insert "$4,000,000," so as to read:

For the procurement, maintenance, and issue, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, to institutions at which one or more units of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps are maintained, of such public animals, means of transportation, supplies, tentage, equipment, and uniforms as he may deem necessary, and to forage at the expense of the United States public animals so issued, and to pay commutation in lieu of uniforms at a rate to be fixed annually by the Secretary of War; for transporting said animals and other authorized supplies and equipment from place of issue to the several institutions and training camps and return of same to place of issue when necessary; for the establishment and maintenance of camps for the further practical instruction of the members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and for transporting members of such corps to and from such camps, and to subsist them while traveling to and from such camps and while remaining therein so far as appropriations will permit; or in lieu of transporting them to and from such camps and subsisting them while en route, to pay them travel allowance at the rate of 5 cents per mile for the distance by the shortest usually traveled route from the places from which they are authorized to proceed to the camp and for the return travel thereto, and to pay the return travel pay in advance of the actual performance of the travel; for pay for students attending advanced camps at the rate prescribed for soldiers of the seventh grade of the Regular Army; for the payment of commutation of subsistence to members of the senior division of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps at a rate not exceeding the cost of the garrison ration prescribed for the Army, as authorized in the act approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act approved June 4, 1920, $4,000,000, to remain available until December 31, 1924.

Mr. KING. I would like to make an inquiry of the Senator from New York. I am a little confused. It seems to me that a part of this $4,000,000 item would be embraced within the item of $1,675,000 on page 10. Of course, I perceive that the item on page 10 is for pay and allowances of reserve officers called for active duty, but the language, as I read it, seems to indicate that it is to cover the compensation of officers of the Reserve Corps as well.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The item is for the Reserve Officers' Training Corps. Those are the college boys. The item which precedes it is for the reserve officers themselves. The item of $4,000,000, on page 13, is for the support of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, which is maintained in the universities, colleges, and high schools of the country. It is from the Reserve Officers' Training Corps that we must get our reserve officers, but as they pass to the advanced courses of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps and are given their diplomas, they are eligible for commissions as second lieutenants in the Reserve Corps. The $4,000,000 is for the support of the units organized in the colleges.

Mr. KING. Approximately how many belong to the Reserve Officers' Training Corps?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There are at present 104,000 students in all the colleges, universities, technical schools, and secondary schools, including high schools which have units. There are 342 units organized throughout the educational institutions of the country. The estimate for this purpose was $4,400,000. We come within $400,000 of the estimate.

Mr. KING. Is this as much as was appropriated last year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is more. Last year we appropriated $3,100,000. The increase is largely accounted for by the fact that we have not to-day the same amount of surplus and reserve supplies to continue the issue which we have made free of charge to the units in the last two or three years since the war. In other words, our surplus stocks and in some instances our reserve stocks are either gone entirely or reduced to the point where they will no longer furnish large amounts to supply the National Guard, the Organized Reserve, or the Reserve Officers' Training Corps.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether the experience with these organizations in the schools is entirely satisfactory and meets the approval of the General Staff and the Secretary of War?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, decidedly.

Mr. KING. Is it so encouraging as to justify the continuance of the policy?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Decidedly; and the most encouraging thing about it is that the educational institutions themselves are practically unanimous in expressing the hope that it will never be curtailed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I know it is in successful operation in my State. Its success there has been very satisfactory. I do not believe there is any item in the bill that is more worthy or will be more beneficial to the country at large than the training offered the boys in the schools and colleges. It is an excellent plan for the training of our boys.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It may be of interest to the Senator from Utah, in view of our discussions in past years about the number of officers in the Regular Army, to recollect that there are 651 Regular Army officers detailed to this work alone.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the memorandum which I have indicated that the number last year was 104,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is correct.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And that we expect this year 110,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is correct.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have been trying to recall how the justification was reached for increasing by $900,000 the appropriation on that comparatively small increase in the number of students.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There are two principal elements accounting for the increase. The first is that the supply of the units can no longer depend to such a large degree as it has in the past upon reserve stock and surplus stock from the War Department. Secondly, this year there will be 12,000 college boys in the advanced course, many more than last year and the year before. The system only started really to work in 1919. The boys in college who took the course started then as freshmen and sophomores and are now in their junior and senior years where they take the advanced course, and the whole time they are under military discipline. They go to camp in summer under rigid military discipline and are getting their final training as reserve officers, during which time they are paid 40 cents a day. Of course, as these men have come up from the lower classes in college and are now in the junior and senior classes, the number of advanced students is higher. That accounts for the increase.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 11, after the word "issue," to strike out the comma and the words "in so far as said stocks are in excess of actual requirements of the Regular Army for the fiscal year 1924," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That uniforms and other equipment or material issued to the Reserve Officers' Training Corps in accordance with law shall be furnished from surplus or reserve stocks of the War Department without payment from this appropriation, except for actual expense incurred in the manufacture or issue.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Civilian military training camps," on page 15, line 7, after the word "camps," to strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$2,200,000," so as to read:

For furnishing, at the expense of the United States, to warrant officers, enlisted men, and civilians attending training camps maintained under the provisions of section 47-d of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920, uniforms, including altering, fitting, washing, and cleaning when necessary, subsistence, and transportation, or in lieu of such transportation and of subsistence for travel to and from camps, travel allowances at 5 cents per mile, as prescribed in said section 47-d; for such expenditures as are authorized by said section 47-d as may be necessary for the establishment and maintenance of said camps, $2,200,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1923, to remain available until December 31, 1924.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 11, after the word "over," to strike out "27" and insert "24"; and, in line 12, after the word "age," to insert "except those who received training in a previous civilian military training camp and except veterans of the war with Germany who may be accepted if not over 35 years of age," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the funds herein appropriated shall not be used for the training of any person who is over 24 years of age except those who received training in a previous civilian military training camp and except veterans of the war with Germany who may be accepted if not over 35 years of age.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what reasons induced the House to fix 27 years of age and then what testimony induced the Senate committee to change it to 24? I have no criticism of the action of either the House or the Senate committees; I am asking for information.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The current law provides that 27 normally shall be the age limit for admission of these men into the C. M. T. C. The Senate committee believed that, with the exception of World War veterans, who, of course, we want to have attend the camps if they desire to do so—it is all on the volunteer basis—admission to the camps should be confined to what might be termed youths, young men between 18 and 24, we will say. After a man passes the age of 25, he usually has some pretty steady employment, perhaps some business obligations, indeed may be married and have domestic obligations, and we want the spirit of the whole thing conducted along the lines of the training of youth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 21, after the word "issue," to strike out the comma and the words "in so far as said stocks are in excess of actual requirements of the Regular Army for the fiscal year 1924," so as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided further, That uniforms and other equipment or material furnished in accordance with law for use at civilian military training camps shall be furnished from surplus or reserve stocks of the War Department without payment from this appropriation, except for actual expense incurred in the manufacture or issue.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Finance Department, pay, etc., of the Army," on page 17, strike out the colon and the proviso beginning in line 9, in the following words:

Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used to pay for the allowance or subsistence of any captain promoted after the passage of this act in the Army until all first lieutenants in the Army, otherwise eligible, who were demoted from the grade of captain under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 30, 1922, as amended by the act of September 14, 1922, shall be promoted to the grade of captain in advance of officers who were serving in the grade of first lieutenant on June 30, 1920, notwithstanding the names of some of these demoted captains are carried on the promotion list below the names of some such first lieutenants: Provided, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be utilized for the recruiting or enlistment of boys under the age of 21 years without the written consent of the parents or guardians, if any, of such boys, or unless the applicant furnishes a birth certificate or the affidavit of two disinterested witnesses showing such applicant for enlistment to be 21 years of age.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, to strike out the colon and the proviso beginning in line 16, in the following words:

Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for increased pay on flying status to more than 500 enlisted men.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from New York to explain the amendment just agreed to, on page 17, beginning in line 9.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There are two amendments on that page. The first one has to do with a very technical subject and which I will do my best to explain, although I doubt my ability. It provides that no part of the money appropriated for the pay of officers shall be used to pay for the allowance or subsistence of any captain promoted after the passage of this act in the Army until all first lieutenants in the Army otherwise eligible, who were demoted from the grade of captain, shall be promoted before him. It does not accomplish what the author of the amendment expected. It was offered upon the floor of the House.

Here is the situation: In the demotions which took place last August something like 800 captains were demoted to the grade of first lieutenant. Their relative positions upon the promotion list of the Army are not changed. About 275 of those captains who were demoted are found upon the demotion list since that time among the first lieutenants. They lost the grade and rank of captain. Their places on the promotion list are exactly the same as they were before. They can not, under existing law, be restored or promoted back to the grade of captain until several first lieutenants, whose names stand ahead of theirs on the promotion list, are promoted to the grade of captain. This language was intended to cure that situation, but it does not do it. It does not accomplish the desired purpose. All it does is to say that any first lieutenant who was not demoted from the grade of captain and who is promoted hereafter to the grade of captain shall not be paid for it, which is, of course, an absurd conclusion. The fact, however, is that the situation sought to be corrected by the amendment will not arise for two years, so we struck out the provision.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New York a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that the demoted officers are still receiving the pay and allowances of the rank from which they were demoted?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I think that ought to be understood by the Senator, so that he will realize that no injustice is done to the demoted officers by striking out the provision.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The injustice is in the future, and not at the present.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the injustice has been in the past and in the present, and it will be in the future. Many of these captains were examined—in fact, all of them were examined. They passed competitive examinations. After such examinations they were given commissions as captains and enjoyed them for awhile, and then were demoted to the grade of first lieutenants.

I did not know we had reached the provision. I have an amendment which I wish to offer to it. On page 17, I move to strike out the proviso, beginning in line 9, down to and including the word "lieutenants" in line 20, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used for the pay and allowances of officers on the "promotion list" who shall be promoted to the grade of captain after the passage of this act unless said promotion shall have been made in the following manner, which is hereby established as the method of promotion to the grade of captain of officers on said promotion list, to wit: "So long as there shall remain in the grade of first lieutenant any officer discharged in the grade of captain and recommissioned in the grade of first lieutenant in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 30, 1922, as amended by the act of September 14, 1922, who was appointed in the grade of captain in the Regular Army under the provisions of section 24 of the act of June 4, 1920 (Pub. No. 242, 66th Cong.). Promotions of officers on the promotion list to the grade of captain shall be made solely from such officers.

Mr. President, I offer this amendment in justice to the captains. The promotion list has been construed so as to demote those men. They came into the Regular Army on the assurance that the result of their examinations would determine their fitness and their places in the Army. They received captaincies as a result of this examination. So long as they are making proper officers, the Government is under a moral contract with them to retain them in the grade of captain.

I think it is little short of monstrous that the Government of the United States should conduct an examination and hold out to men who take the examination the promise, "If you make a certain grade, if you come within certain requirements, the Government will appoint you to the position of captain," and then after they have made that grade, after they have secured these positions, demote them to a lieutenantancy and promote second and first lieutenants over them. That, to my mind, is an act of bad faith on the part of the Government. After having invited these men to take the examination, after having urged many of them to come back into the Army, we owe it to them not to demote them unless they have by their acts committed an offense which requires them to be demoted or discharged. I ask Senators to join me in doing the right and fair thing by these men. The House provision does not give them what they are entitled to have, and I ask that the amendment which I offered may be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. This is rather a terra incognita to me. I have received some complaints by individuals who have insisted that an injustice had been done them. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Tennessee upon what theory, after a man has been promoted as a result of an examination, he is demoted for the purpose of advancing over him officers of lower grade. Is it for the purpose of advancing those who have been through West Point over those who have come in from civil life? Is there any favoritism growing out of the fact that one man is a West Pointer and the other is not?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, all I can say about that is that charge is made by many of those who have had to undergo this demotion. It is "passing strange" that the Government, after having given the commission of captain to a number of men and after they had accepted that commission and entered into a solemn contract, changing, perhaps, the whole course of their lives, should undertake to demote them to the grade of second lieutenant or first lieutenant, as the case may be.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Congress specifically commanded that to be done.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know that, and that is what I am complaining of; but Congress never dreamed that it was commanding that to be done. That construction of the act of Congress I believe to be wrong, and have believed it to be wrong ever since it was first placed upon the language of Congress. What I propose is that Congress should right that wrong, so far as it can. It can not right it entirely, perhaps. Many of the captains who have been thus demoted to first lieutenantcies have resigned from the Army rather than submit to demotion, and probably they were right. Those who have resigned from the Army on that ground have been greatly injured.

We can appreciate the situation. The Government invited these men to take an examination, and as a result of that examination, as a result of their record, as a result of their competency and efficiency, they were appointed captains. They had a right to expect to be made captains and to retain their captaincies; but, without any reason except that certain legal officers of the War Department construed the act to mean something that was never even vaguely in the mind of Congress, in my judgment, they have been so demoted. They have been humiliated and disgraced in the minds of their friends in a way they ought not to have been. There is no reason for it. If it was the fault of Congress in the beginning, as the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has stated it was, surely Congress can remedy that wrong, can remedy that mistake, can remedy that injustice; and now is the time to do it. The matter is involved in the pending bill.

I wish here to read what one of these captains has said about the matter. It is a technical matter and one which from that standpoint, perhaps, I do not understand; but I do understand what the result is. The result is wrong. It is a wrong that no Government ought to be willing to perpetrate upon its citizens whom it invites to take an examination. I now read from a statement of one of these officers:

The Army reorganization act of June 4, 1920, increased the commissioned personnel of the Army and also created the "Promotion list."

Which is commonly known, I may say, as the signal list of promotion.

The act provided that the newly appointed officers in the grade of lieutenant colonel and major should be placed on the promotion list in their respective grades with the lieutenant colonels and majors of the Regular Army. The newly appointed lieutenant colonels and majors were arranged in their respective grades according to age and were then placed on the promotion list with the Regular Army officers of those grades as of July 1, 1920.

The law with reference to arranging the captains and lieutenants on the promotion list was entirely different. It provided that the newly appointed captains and lieutenants should be placed on the promotion list with the Regular Army officers of those grades according to length of commissioned service between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, and regardless of the grade to which appointed.

In other words, let me put the case as I understand it. Two young men had been in the late war; one was a second lieutenant all through that war and the other was a captain; the second lieutenant had been appointed prior to the time when the other young man was appointed a captain. The lieutenant had been in the service, say, two weeks longer than the captain. After the war was over these two officers were discharged; both came forward to take a new examination upon the invitation of the Government to go into the Regular Army. The second lieutenant, we will say, had been in the very company in which the other officer was a captain. The captain had by his ability, his efficiency, and his devotion to duty and his heroic action on the field of battle not only maintained his captaincy but had become a major or a lieutenant colonel, perhaps, and in one case, I believe, the officer was made a lieutenant colonel.

The second lieutenant held on to his second lieutenantcy all during the war and did nothing to distinguish himself as a lieutenant. The lieutenant colonel and the second lieutenant came forward after the war to take the examination. Upon being graded, the lieutenant colonel is offered a captain's commission and the second lieutenant, who served during the war as a second lieutenant, not having distinguished himself for efficiency particularly, but still capable of being a second lieutenant, received a second lieutenant's commission. Under the strained construction of the lawyers of the War Department the second lieutenant goes ahead on the promotion list of the captain, who had been a lieutenant colonel during the war. No regard is paid to the examination. The fact that one man was examined and found qualified to be a captain cuts no figure at all; the fact that he had performed remarkable service as a lieutenant colonel cuts no figure at all; but, solely because the second lieutenant went into the World War two weeks before the lieutenant colonel, the second lieutenant, under the present interpretation of the law, is promoted over the lieutenant colonel. So the second lieutenant comes before the captain or the first lieutenant on the single list, and of course becomes a captain while the officer who has been a captain is demoted. In the rearrangement, while many first lieutenants and second lieutenants have been promoted to captains, many captains, I believe, have been demoted to first lieutenants. That is not fair. That would not be done in private life. No Senator would invite a man to take an examination, if he were going to employ him, and tell him that he was going to give him a place as the result of that examination, and then take it away from him. There is no Senator on the floor who will say that what has been done in this case is fair dealing.

If the legal officers of the department are right—and we must assume they were right in their construction—in their construction of the provision Congress placed in the law in 1920, ought we not to right the wrong which has been done? We have a chance to right it now; we can do it as to those officers who still remain in the Army, and we ought to right that wrong as nearly as possible. My amendment proposes to right that particular wrong, and I hope the Senate will adopt it.

I continue to read:

The result of this arrangement was that if a second or first lieutenant had more service than a captain, the lieutenant was placed above the captain on the promotion list.

That is all wrong—

After the new appointments had been made the promotion list was prepared as above outlined. The newly appointed captains were scattered from near the top of the list of captains to near the bottom of the list of second lieutenants. The first and second lieutenants were arranged in the same way—all according to length of service and without regard to grade, age, experience, or qualifications.

After the promotion list was prepared, promotions were made to fill vacancies created by the act of June 4, 1920, which had not been filled by appointments from the emergency officers. Promotions were made according to standing on the promotion list. Over 2,000 first and second lieutenants were promoted to the grade of captain with rank from July 1, 1920; some of these were from the emergency forces and some from the Regular Army officers who were lieutenants on July 1, 1920. These emergency lieutenants had been examined by various boards and had been found qualified for the grade in which they were appointed. However, because of the law with reference to arrangement on the promotion list they immediately became captains with rank from July 1, 1920, and as such outranked any newly appointed captain on the promotion list who was unfortunate enough not to have had greater length of commissioned service.

HOW DEMOTION HAS AFFECTED THE EMERGENCY CAPTAINS.

The Army appropriation bill of June 30, 1922, as amended by the act of September 14, 1922, authorized the reduction of the commissioned personnel of the Army and required that a number of officers in each grade should be discharged and recommissioned in the next lower grade. This legislation made it necessary to discharge and recommission in the next lower grade in the inverse order of their standing on the promotion list approximately 800 captains. Of this number approximately 300 had been originally appointed in the grade of captain under the act of June 4, 1920. The remainder, approximately 500, had been appointed first and second lieutenants under the act of June 4, 1920, or were first lieutenants in the Regular Army, July 1, 1920. Of the demoted captains originally appointed in that grade, 275 stand on the promotion list among the first lieutenants and are scattered from almost the top to almost the bottom of the list. Unless there is some legislation in their behalf, these demoted captains will not again attain the grade of captain until they are reached in the ordinary course of promotion. Some of them will not reach the grade of captain again for 10 or 15 years.

I stop here long enough to ask what must we think of a Government that will invite a young ex-service man to come into the Army as an officer, and, after he makes as a result of a competitive examination the grade of captain, and is appointed to that grade, will say to him afterwards, without any fault of his own: "We are going to demote you, and you can not become a captain for 15 years"? Yet that is what we are doing if we let this law stand.

These are the ones near the bottom of the list of first lieutenants. (This statement is made on the estimate that approximately 150 vacancies in the grade of captain will occur each year.)

Although approximately 300 captains, originally appointed as such, have been demoted and will not again attain that grade for a long time, there are still hundreds of captains who were originally appointed as first and second lieutenants, or were Regular Army officers of those grades, as of July 1, 1920, and who were immediately promoted to the grade of captain and who have not been demoted. This is due to the fact that they were so high on the promotion list that they were not reached in the process of demotion.

It is submitted that the captains originally appointed as such under the act of June 4, 1920, should not have been demoted when officers originally appointed in the grade of first and second lieutenants at the same time and who were immediately promoted to the grade of captain were not demoted. This situation can be remedied by any one of the following methods, viz:

1. Create a surplus in the grade of captain by at once restoring these 300 demoted captains to their original rank and permit them to be carried as surplus until absorbed in the ordinary course of promotion. This method will create an excess of 300 in the grade of captain, which will be slowly reduced as promotions occur. It will constitute no saving in money.

2. Immediately restore these 300 demoted captains to their former rank and demote an equal number of captains who have been promoted to that grade since July 1, 1920. This method accomplishes substantial justice, i. e., these lieutenants should not have been promoted in the first place. If they are demoted at this time they will be placed where they ought to have been placed in the first instance, and yet they will get the pay of the advanced grade. This method also accomplishes a substantial saving in pay, because the first lieutenants who have never been captains but who are ahead of the demoted captains on the promotion list will not be promoted until all demoted captains have been restored to that grade.

3. As fast as vacancies occur restore to the grade of captain the 300 captains appointed in that grade who have been demoted before the other demoted captains are restored to that grade. This accomplishes substantial justice and also a substantial saving. It will take about two years for the last demoted captain to get back his original rank, but it causes no further demotions and creates no surplus in the grade of captain.

Mr. President, in order to remedy this wrong that has been done to this class of our citizens, to remedy the unfairness and the injustice that has been done to them, I have offered the amendment which I sent to the desk, and I hope it will be adopted. I hope the chairman of the committee will accept it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I have a few observations to make.

This situation has arisen solely and entirely as the result of the acts of Congress. No law officer of the Government, no person in the War Department, nobody in the Army, through any construction given to language or through any arbitrary act of his, is to blame for it. Only the Congress is to blame. The language of the two statutes involved in this situation is so plain that there could be no appeal whatsoever, although appeals were attempted time and time again against this construction.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. WADSWORTH. I protested myself against this demotion; but the pacifists in this country were so strong, and the Congress was so carried off its feet by all the silly twaddle that was talked about here last year, that it passed the legislation which finally compelled the discharge from the commissioned strength of the Regular Army of 1,400 officers, and the demotion of 1,800 more. The Senate conferees begged and implored that no such severity should be indulged in. The Senate conferees begged and implored that the very men to whom the Senator has referred be not subjected to demotion. We could not get our way. The best we could secure was a compromise—a compromise between the extreme of the pacifistic proposal, which was for the purpose of putting out of the Regular Army 2,500 officers instead of 1,400—

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just a moment. Now, this situation has arisen:

There are about 270 former captains in the Army who have been demoted to the grade of first lieutenant, and who find themselves literally in a morass so far as future promotion is concerned. The Senator has described that, and the letter which he has read describes it correctly. Unfortunately, no legislation that we can pass correcting it can take effect for two years. The officer states, in the letter which the Senator read, that the last or junior captain who was demoted will not be reached for promotion again for two years. That is not accurate. The senior captain among that group who are low down on the single list will not be reached for two years. The amendment which the Senator offers will not become operative for two years. Nothing can be done about it, because there will not be enough vacancies occurring in the grade of captain and above to reach down and absorb or commence to absorb these outraged officers until two years have gone by.

That is the fact. I am in complete sympathy with the intent of the Senator from Tennessee to amend the promotion law so that these demoted captains who are now first lieutenants, and are far down on the promotion list, shall be promoted back again to the grade of captain before any undemoted first lieutenant is promoted. That is what he is driving at.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is what my amendment proposes. Why should we not adopt it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have not declined to accept it; but will the Senator please permit me to proceed a moment?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes; I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I merely want to say to the Senator and to the Senate that, whether it is accepted in conference or not, it makes no difference this year or next year—none whatsoever.

Mr. McKELLAR. But we will have done what we could to right a wrong which the Senator agrees with me should be righted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Here is my fear, and I will say it quite frankly:

The matter is exceedingly technical. The mistake of a word or two in the final phraseology, if there shall be any final phraseology, coming out of the conference and adopted by both Houses, may destroy the whole thing. What I should prefer is that the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate be given an opportunity to examine this amendment. I have already introduced a bill recommended by the War Department for this very same purpose, expressed somewhat differently. This may be better; I do not know.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will not the Senator do this: Will not the Senator accept the amendment, and I, for one, will be entirely willing to leave it to the Senator's good judgment as to the wording worked out in conference? I know that the Senator has as good knowledge of these matters as any man in the United States, and I would be perfectly willing to take his judgment about it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have expressed my fear, which is very great. I have described as best I could the situation. I shall not raise a point of order against this amendment, on the theory that it may go to conference, and there may emanate from the conference—I will not promise it—the proper, accurate, deadly accurate, legislation that shall cure this situation; but in any event there are no tears to be shed, even if it fails this year, because it does no good for this year.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will let it pass and be part of the act, and then I am sure he will attempt to work it out in a way that will make it a workable measure.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I was just going to ask the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, in charge of the bill, a question. It would seem, even though no results can happen for two years, that if we have committed an error, or if we want to rectify a situation, the sooner we start to do it the better. If we put it off another year it will be still farther and farther away.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, generally speaking, the Senator is correct; but the Senator knows how dangerous it is to attach a highly technical piece of legislation to an appropriation bill which must be handled by Members of the House and Members of the Senate who are not thoroughly familiar with the legislative history of the case; that is all.

Mr. FLETCHER. I agree to that, but I still think that, although it may not result in much benefit for two years, the sooner we start upon it the better. I was going to ask the Senator whether the provision on page 17 which the committee strikes out of the House bill has any bearing upon this?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. The amendment adopted upon the floor of the House is absolutely inoperative. It shows the danger of trying to legislate in that hasty way. It does not mean anything. It accomplishes nothing for these outraged officers.

Now, I desire to know if the Senator wants to substitute his amendment for the House amendment?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. I imagine the way to do would be to agree to this as a substitute for the House provision.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It can be made in two motions—to agree to the committee amendment striking out the first proviso, between lines 9 and 20, inclusive, and then the Senator from Tennessee can offer his amendment, to go in at that point.

Mr. McKELLAR. All right.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, let me suggest that it all ought to be one amendment, to strike out and insert, so that it will be considered in conference at one time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I think so. I think the Senator from Washington is entirely right about that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator's suggestion is a good one. That throws the whole thing into conference.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. I just want to agree to the whole amendment with an amendment substituting the provision which I have sent to the desk.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the committee was adopted.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has it been adopted?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not know that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the request for reconsideration.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question for information. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], by the illustration which he gave of an injustice which might be done to a lieutenant colonel, following the illustration of a captain, by demoting them and elevating to a position above them a man who was a second lieutenant, and who had exhibited no particular ability to entitle him to elevation over the others, has illustrated that that situation arose under the law of Congress. What I am trying to get at is, How will the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee or the amendment offered by the Senator from New York, which is now pending before the committee, cure that evil? Will they demote the second lieutenant who has been elevated?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The second lieutenant has not been elevated. It is the captain who has been demoted; and we are going to provide, the Senator from Tennessee and I, if we have our way about it, in appropriate language that the captain who was demoted last year as the result of the arbitrary act of Congress shall be the first one among the first lieutenants to be promoted again; that is all.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am in entire sympathy with this legislation, and I think a very great wrong was done—

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a wrong against which I protested at the time.

Mr. KING. But I am at a loss to perceive just how the wrongs which have been done are going to be corrected. I rely, however, upon the wisdom of the committee and the duty of the War Department to right a wrong and do justice to those to whom injustice has been done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on reconsidering the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Commencing on line 20, that should be treated as a second amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It should read "Provided further," and the committee proposes to strike it out.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That has been adopted. I merely want it printed as a separate amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Where is it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. At the bottom of page 17. It has nothing to do with the promotion of officers. It is another matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. The motion upon which we have acted, I understand, then, is to strike out the first proviso and to insert what the Senator from Tennessee has proposed?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, striking out the second proviso.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, in the item for pay of enlisted men, Aviation Corps, on page 18, line 16, to strike out lines 16, 17, and 18, as follows:

Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for increased pay on flying status to more than 500 enlisted men.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator explain that? The Senator knows that I was not on this committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The proviso reads:

Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for increased pay on flying status to more than 500 enlisted men.

We do not propose to increase the amount of money which the Chief of the Air Service may expend in paying enlisted men of the Air Service for flying service, but we do propose to strike out the limitation on the number. For example, the Chief of the Air Service testified to the committee that from time to time he wants the opportunity and the right to order an enlisted man in the Air Service upon flying duty for a month, or two months, or three months, and while on such duty, of course, the man is entitled to an increase in his pay on account of the risk. With the limitation inserted by the House, the Chief of the Air Service could not put upon flying duty more than 500 different men among the enlisted men in the entire calendar year. He would like to have the opportunity of using more than 500 men, but using some of them for only a part of the year.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator's explanation is entirely satisfactory to me, and I thank him for giving it.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator with respect to the item, on lines 5 and 6, for aviation increases to commissioned and warrant officers of the Army, $950,000, whether it is proposed to increase the number of Army officers and warrant officers who are engaged in aviation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; it is not. Every officer on flying status receives 50 per cent increase in his base pay under the law passed by Congress.

Mr. KING. Was that provided in the Army reorganization bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but I think that in turn was a repetition of previous legislation.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator believe that there should be that great difference between the base pay and the flying pay?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do, Mr. President, when I remember that the casualties among the fliers of the United States Army are 10 per cent a year.

Mr. KING. I was inquiring for information as to whether the committee had investigated that, and it was their judgment that that distinction should be permitted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, yes.

Mr. KING. Is that the distinction which prevails in other countries?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; the flying services in all other armies are paid at higher rates than the other branches.

Mr. KING. Must there be so many hours per month or per year in order to entitle them to the increase?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; habitual and continuous flying.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 20, page 18, the last paragraph read being:

For pay of the enlisted men of the Philippine Scouts, $1,060,140.

Mr. KING. I inquire of the Senator with respect to the item under the head of Philippine Scouts, what part of those are natives, and what part are the Regular Army?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are all natives. They are a part of the Regular Army. They number 7,000 men, in round figures.

Mr. KING. And the proposition is, of course, that we shall care for them and pay them for the coming year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, on the 16th day of March last, that being the calendar day of March 30, I offered a resolution which, in effect, called for the withdrawal of the United States from the Philippine Islands. It reads as follows:

Whereas the Congress of the United States, by the act approved August 29, 1916, entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands," vested in the Philippine Legislature, created by said act, general legislative power with respect to the Philippines, in order that by the use and exercise of popular franchise and governmental powers, the people of the Philippines might become prepared to assume the responsibilities and enjoy the privileges of complete independence; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States, in said act, expressly declared that it was the purpose of the Government of the United States to withdraw its sovereignty from the Philippine Islands and to recognize the independence of the islands as soon as a stable government should have been established therein; and

Whereas, in conformity with the provisions of said act, a stable government, founded upon principles of political liberty and upon popular franchise, has been erected in the Philippine Islands and is exercising political powers therein, subject only to the powers vested in the Governor General of the Philippines and other officials appointed by the President of the United States, and certain supervisory powers exercised by the Secretary of War, and the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from final judgments and decrees of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the President enter into negotiations with the powers having territorial interests in the Pacific, or adjacent thereto, for the purpose of concluding a treaty or treaties whereby said powers agree to recognize the Philippine Islands as an independent State, and covenant to respect the political independence and territorial integrity of such Philippine State, when such State shall have been established and declared by the United States, and that upon the execution and ratification of such a treaty or treaties the sovereignty of the United States over the Philippine Islands shall be transferred to an independent Philippine Government, and that thereupon all sovereignty by the United States over the Philippine Islands shall cease and determine.

I think the time has come, in view of the promise made by solemn enactment of Congress, for the United States to withdraw from the Philippine Islands and to surrender whatever authority it is now exercising to the people themselves and to the Government which they may establish. Our persistent retention of sovereignty, and our exercise of power and jurisdiction over the islands and the people, are provoking resentments and suspicions, indeed, fears upon the part of some Filipinos that we intend to disregard the solemn promise made and to retain the Philippine Islands for an indefinite period if not permanently. I believe the time has come when we should withdraw from the islands. The people of the Philippine Islands have demonstrated their capacity for self-government. The progress which they have made during the past 15 or 20 years is remarkable. They want independence and desire that the United States withdraw its authority and control. Recently a delegation of distinguished Filipinos came to the United States and conferred with the President, and, as I am advised, with the Secretary of State. They made a strong appeal for the independence of their country, and presented reasons which can not be controverted for the redemption of the provisions made to them by this Government. In view of our declarations and protestations, and in view of the historic ground which we have occupied in favor of the right of peoples to govern themselves I can not understand why we persist in retaining sovereignty and jurisdiction over the islands and denying the prayers and petitions of these people.

Before we conclude the discussion of this bill, I shall offer as an amendment to it the resolution which I have just read.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment was, on page 19, at the end of line 3, to increase the appropriation for pay of retired enlisted men from "$7,000,000" to "$7,200,000."

Mr. McKELLAR. Before that is adopted, will the Senator from New York state why an additional $200,000 was appropriated for the pay of retired enlisted men?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The number of retired enlisted men is known accurately. The amount of money to which each and every one of them is entitled under the statute is calculated accurately.

Mr. McKELLAR. And the House did not appropriate enough?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Budget estimate and the Division of Finance in the War Department estimate is $7,200,000 to fulfill the obligations of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 7, to increase the appropriation for pay of nurses from "$650,000" to "$680,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 18, after the word "any," to strike out "child" and insert "married child or any unmarried child over 21 years of age," so as to make the paragraph read:

None of the funds herein, heretofore, or hereafter appropriated shall be used for payment of the six months' pay (authorized by the act of December 17, 1919, to be paid to certain specified beneficiaries of officers or enlisted men of the Regular Army who died from wounds or disease not the result of their own misconduct) to any married child or any unmarried child over 21 years of age of a deceased officer or enlisted man who is not actually a dependent of such deceased officer or enlisted man.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 21, to strike out:

None of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used for payment of any officer of the Army on the active or retired list while such officer is engaged in the business of selling supplies or services to the United States, or is employed by any individual, partnership, or corporation which engages in such business.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from New York explain that amendment? To what does it refer? I have not had time to go into the matter and I am not familiar with it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This amendment was put in upon the floor of the House. It was not reported by the House committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is that the amendment commonly known as the Harbord amendment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It prevents the receipt of retired pay by any retired officer of the Army employed by any concern which sells any goods or performs any services for the Government. In my humble judgment, without intending to be over-critical, I think it should be entitled, "A provision to impoverish retired officers."

The committee has stricken it out. We have just compulsorily retired a thousand officers from the Army, not because they were deficient in any degree, but because we insisted upon reducing the number, and if this were to remain in as it is, it would mean that no one of those men, most of whom were retired at very modest pay, could work for any railroad company, any telegraph company, any telephone company, for very few banks, and for any number of industries which at some time or other might sell something to the Government or perform some service for the Government.

Unfortunately the name of one officer was brought in in connection with this amendment—the name of General Harbord—who, I think, was mentioned and has been mentioned rather conspicuously in connection with this amendment. He has recently accepted employment with the Radio Corporation of America. It may be of interest to know that the Radio Corporation of America did $60 worth of business with the Government last month, and, that company having done business with the Government of the United States, General Harbord would be denied his retired pay.

It seems to me that this thing has reached a point where we are asked to distrust all the officers of the Army, active and retired, and deny to them the right, upon retirement, to take up some modest employment here and there to eke out the very small sum which they receive in their middle and old age to support themselves and their families.

Mr. McKELLAR. This is a more important matter than it might appear to be. I want to say so far as General Harbord is concerned—and I regret that his name has been mentioned in reference to the matter—I have known him as being one of the highest minded men in the country. There is no question about his honor and integrity, and I take great pleasure in bearing testimony, so far as I can, to his integrity and uprightness. But a very wise Man said a long, long time ago that no man could serve two masters. We have a legal inhibition in our law against a man representing the United States Government in any way and dealing with it. I think that law is a very wise one. I doubt very much whether any of our retired officers ought to engage in such business as would bring them in contact with the purchasing powers of the Government. A man who has been in the Army, say, 30 or 40 years and is in touch with it, and who leaves and begins business with that very organization, the Army, does something that I am sure ought not to be permitted by the Congress. I doubt if any agent of the Government ought to be permitted to do such a thing.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. SPENCER. When we retire an officer in good health and pay him retired pay, as we do in some cases, $20, $40, or $50 a month, and he has a family to support, what possible employment could he enter if this provision were in the law, except teaching school? Can the Senator name a single employment that he might enter?

Mr. McKELLAR. He could enter into any business, as I understand it, except the business of buying from the Government or selling to the Government. There is a general statute, as the Senator knows, that prohibits that now.

Mr. SPENCER. But the Senator has not answered my question.

Mr. McKELLAR. He is still an officer of the Government. There is such a statute. I do not recall the exact citation of it at this moment, but I remember we discussed it here some years ago when we found men who were engaged in business and who were serving the Government as officers at the same time. We found quite a number of officers who were buying for the Government on the one hand and selling to the Government through their houses on the other hand. That was prohibited by law. It has always been prohibited by law.

I doubt very much the wisdom of permitting any officer of the Government to buy from the Government or sell to the Government while he is an officer of the Government. I think that is as far as we should go. Of course, we should not prohibit a man from engaging in any business that he might wish to engage in, but merely to prohibit him from buying from the Government or selling to the Government as long as he is an officer of the Government it seems to me is not going too far. I think it is a very wise provision of the law and I hope it will not be interfered with.

I am not in any way criticizing any of our splendid Army officers. We have a great many on the retired list who are engaged in other business. I do not know of any of them who are engaged in the business of buying from or selling to the Government, but those who are so engaged ought not to be permitted to do it, is my humble judgment.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, the provision which is stricken out, I may say to the Senator from Tennessee, prohibits a retired officer from accepting employment with any corporation, individual, or partnership that may at any time sell supplies or service to the Government. He could not keep books for a corporation that was selling anything to the Government. He could not counsel with a corporation if that corporation was selling service or material to the Government. I do not hesitate to say that a more ridiculous proposition could not be written into the law.

I asked the Senator a moment ago if he could name one single line of employment, outside of teaching school, which a retired Army officer could enter into if that provision were in the law. I do not believe he could name one.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes; I am quite sure many such could be named.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am inclined to agree with the Senator from Missouri as to that portion of the bill which begins on line 25 after the words "United States." I think it is very well to strike out the remainder of the provision, including the words "or is employed by any individual, partnership, or corporation which engages in such business." But down to the words "United States" in line 25 I can see some very good reasons for the provision. It takes care of a situation where a retired officer of the Army actually engages in the business of selling supplies or services to the United States.

I question very much if a retired officer of the Army, drawing pay from the Government and in that attitude and that status connected with the Government, ought to engage in the business of selling supplies or services to the United States. But it does seem to me it is going too far to exclude him from employment by any partnership or corporation that may be engaged in such business. There he is not brought directly, necessarily, in contact with his brother officers, his late associates in the service, and could not be influenced in the same way as if he himself was actually engaged in the business of furnishing services or supplies to the Government.

Mr. SPENCER. May I ask the Senator from Florida a question? When the Government gets through with an officer we say to him, "You are no longer needed. You are retired, but if a war arises we may call upon you again. You are not in active service. You must find such employment as you can. We can no longer employ you." Why should not that officer be free to accept any honorable employment anywhere he can get it? If his experience is such as to enable him to be best employed either in the buying or selling department of a corporation or partnership, why should not he be free to do it?

Mr. FLETCHER. My answer to that is simply that we are never through with an officer. He is never disconnected from his relation with the Government. He is always subject to be called into active duty again. He is always on the pay roll of the Government. He is always available as an officer of the Army. He can do anything else in the world except engage in the business of furnishing services or supplies to the Government, because he is in a sense a part of the Government. I am perfectly willing to leave the whole field open to him beyond that to find employment by any partnership or corporation; and he ought not to be deprived of that, in my judgment. But for a retired officer, while holding that relationship to the Government and being on the pay roll of the Government and liable to be called into service at any time, actually to engage in the business of furnishing supplies or services to the Government it seems to me would be a very gross impropriety.

Up to that point, without reference to any individual, because I have no individual in mind at all, but upon principle I am inclined to think the provision is all right and ought to remain. Beyond that I think it goes too far. I would be willing to amend the action of the committee by striking out what occurs after the words "United States," in line 25, down to the end of the sentence.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Missouri said such a contention was ridiculous as that here proposed. The Senator is a member of the Judiciary Committee and is familiar with the statutory laws of the United States. There has been a statute on our books providing for the exact principle which is contended for here almost ever since our Government was established. There is a provision of law now, and always has been since the very early years of the Government, providing that an official or employee of the Government could not trade with the Government.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I have wondered whether the discussion is academic or whether it is practical. I am a little curious to know if there has been any abuse under the system which it is proposed to correct. I have been unable to ascertain that there has been. The very distinct impression that I get is that this provision, put in the bill elsewhere, is aimed directly and solely at General Harbord, who is one of the best officers that we have ever had in the Army. If that is so, as I think it is, I shall vote here, as I voted in the committee, against incorporating it in the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I may say to the Senator that not a single instance has ever been cited of a retired officer abusing the confidence of the Government in this connection.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I inquire how many cases have ever come to the attention of the Senator where a retired Army officer has been in the employ of some concern, or running the concern itself, where they entered into a contract with the Government to do work for or sell something to the Government?

Mr. WADSWORTH. None have been specifically called to my attention, except the case of General Harbord.

Mr. HARRISON. Is that the only case which the Senator recalls?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the only case that has been specifically called to our attention. General Harbord is the president of the Radio Corporation of America, which is an immense concern. Their total business with the Government of the United States, however, last month was only $60. Under this provision he will be stricken from the list of retired officers of the United States Army, so far as receiving any emolument is concerned, on the ground, of course, that he can not be trusted.

Mr. HARRISON. What is the practice with respect to naval officers? Is there any provision of law similar to this provision that would apply as against naval officers on the retired list?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is; and that arose from the specific case back in the nineties where some retired naval officer was made the head of a plant which, I think, was making battleship armor. The Navy Department wanted him there. He knew how to make such armor, and no one else in the country knew how to do it. So he was retired in order that he might go there and run the plant so that the Government, in turn, could get the proper kind of armor; but it did create a row at the time, and back in the nineties legislation preventing that or something of that kind was enacted with respect to naval officers. I doubt if it is as drastic and wide-sweeping as is this. That is the only instance that anyone has been able to remember.

Mr. HARRISON. But it is now the law as applied to naval officers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know what the law is as applied to naval officers. There is something of that kind upon the statute books.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator would have no objection to the amendment going over, because the bill must go over until Monday next?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HARRISON. Then we may take it up and in the meantime examine the provision with respect to naval officers. If there is a similar provision as to those officers, it would seem to me that it should either be repealed or should apply to Army officers the same as to naval officers. I can not see any difference in the proposition at all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I myself think the whole situation from the practical standpoint is nonsense.

Mr. HARRISON. But the Senator has no objection to this amendment going over until Monday?

Mr. WADSWORTH. None at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from New York doubtless recalls that only recently there have been a number of indictments found in the District of Columbia against certain ex-officers of the Army who traded with the United States while they were officers. The Senator recalls that, does he not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but that has nothing to do with this matter. This only has reference to the retired officers of the Regular Army.

Mr. McKELLAR. One is a class of retired officers who are receiving Government pay, and the others were officers in the Army who were receiving regular pay from the Government. I am talking about the principle. I want the Senator to understand that so far as General Harbord is concerned there is no difference of opinion between him and me as to the perfect rectitude of that officer. I am not speaking about that proposition at all but of the principle involved.

As I recall, on the very principle which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] characterized as ridiculous a while ago, recently a number of indictments have been found based on a statute of the United States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But, Mr. President, I think the Senator from Tennessee will find that those to whom he has reference were indicted for conspiracy to defraud the Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; but because as officers they dealt with the Government.

Mr. SPENCER. That was not the ground of the indictment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That was not the reason for the indictment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think several were indicted on that ground.

Mr. SPENCER. Can the Senator from Tennessee name one?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mack somebody, it was—although I do not recall his name correctly now. It was not, however, McKellar.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask that the amendment may go over, then, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head "Quartermaster Corps," on page 24, line 3, after the word "including" to strike out "enlisted men of the Enlisted Reserve Corps," so as to read:

Subsistence of the Army: Purchase of subsistence supplies: For issue as rations to troops, including retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, civil employees when entitled thereto, hospital matrons, applicants for enlistment while held under observation, general prisoners of war (including Indians held by the Army as prisoners, but for whose subsistence appropriation is not otherwise made), Indians employed by the Army as guides and scouts, and general prisoners at posts; for the subsistence of the masters, officers, crews, and employees of the vessels of the Army Transport Service; hot coffee for troops traveling when supplied with cooked or travel rations; meals for recruiting parties and applicants for enlistment while under observation; for sales to officers, including members of the Officers' Reserve Corps while on active duty, and enlisted men of the Army.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York explain the reason why the amendment striking out the words "enlisted men of the Enlisted Reserve Corps" is proposed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Whatever subsistence is ever used for the enlisted men of the Enlisted Reserve Corps is taken care of under the Organized Reserve appropriations and should not be chargeable to this appropriation. That same observation applies to several similar amendments following this point in the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I noticed there are several such amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 25, line 7, after the word "including," to strike out "enlisted men of the Enlisted Reserve Corps and," so as to read:

Provided further, That no competitor shall be entitled to commutation of rations in excess of $1.50 per day, and when meals are furnished no greater expense than that sum per man per day for the period the contest is in progress shall be incurred. For payments: Of commutation of rations to the cadets of the United States Military Academy in lieu of the regular established ration; of the regulation allowances of commutation in lieu of rations to enlisted men on furlough, enlisted men when stationed at places where rations in kind can not be economically issued, including retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, and when traveling on detached duty where it is impracticable to carry rations of any kind, enlisted men selected to contest for places or prizes in department and Army rifle competitions when traveling to and from places of contest, applicants for enlistment and general prisoners while traveling under orders.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, at the end of line 1, to increase the appropriation for subsistence of the Army from $14,250,000 to $14,500,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. I presume that that appropriation is within the Budget estimate?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Budget estimate is for $15,000,000. It is $500,000 lower than the estimate, but as it is an item in which the incurrence of a deficiency is authorized by the statute we can take our chances.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 26, line 5, after the name "Alaska," to insert "Philippine Islands, and China," so as to make the paragraph read:

None of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used for the payment of expenses of operating sales commissaries other than in Alaska, Philippine Islands, and China, at which the prices charged do not include the customary overhead costs of freight, handling, storage, and delivery, notwithstanding the provisions of the act of July 5, 1884.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask the Senator from New York for an explanation of that amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The committee thought it was unfair to the personnel stationed in the Philippine Islands and China to be called upon to bear the entire share of the extra overhead cost of the running of the commissary sales stores in those far-away places. It would raise the cost of goods which the soldiers bought in those stores considerably above the cost chargeable to the soldiers here in the United States, where overhead is much less. The word "Alaska" is in the current law. The same situation, to a greater or less extent, exists in the Philippine Islands and China.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 27, line 4, after the word "including," to strike out "enlisted men of the Enlisted Reserve Corps, and," so as to read:

Regular supplies of the Army: Regular supplies of the Quartermaster Corps, including their care and protection; construction and repair of military reservation fences; stoves and heating apparatus required for the use of the Army for heating offices, hospitals, barracks and quarters, and recruiting stations, and United States disciplinary barracks; also ranges, stoves, coffee roasters, and appliances for cooking and serving food at posts in the field and when traveling, and repair and maintenance of such heating and cooking appliances; and the necessary power for the operation of moving-picture machines; authorized issues of candles and matches; for furnishing heat and light for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers, enlisted men, warrant officers, and field clerks, including retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, at the beginning of line 14, to strike out "$4,500,000" and insert "$4,900,000," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That from this appropriation not to exceed $710,000 shall be expended for the pay of civilian employees; not to exceed $1,250,000 shall be expended for power, heat, and electric current; not to exceed $40,000 shall be expended for maintenance and repair of buildings (including repair of machinery) for laundries; not to exceed $200,000 shall be expended for the maintenance and repair of heating apparatus (other than stoves); not to exceed $150,000 for maintenance and repair of electric wiring and fixtures; not to exceed $10,000 for the repair and exchange of typewriters; not to exceed $3,750,000 for fuel; not to exceed $4,900,000 for forage, including salt and vinegar and bedding for animals, and straw for soldiers' bedding; not to exceed $200,000 for ice; and not to exceed $100,000 shall be expended for stationery.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 20, after the word "including," to strike out "enlisted men of the Enlisted Reserve Corps and," so as to read:

Clothing and equipage: For cloth, woollens, materials, and for the purchase and manufacture of clothing for the Army, including retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, for issue and for sale.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, at the end of line 23, to strike out the comma and the words "members of the Officers' Reserve Corps, enlisted men of the Enlisted Reserve Corps," so as to read:

Transportation of the Army and its supplies: For transportation of the Army and its supplies, including transportation of the troops when moving either by land or water, and of their baggage, including warrant officers and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, including the cost of packing and crating; for transportation of recruits and recruiting parties, of applicants for enlistment between recruiting stations and recruiting depots.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I inquire of the Senator if the transportation of those officers is provided for in some other portion of the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; it is provided for in the appropriations for the Organized Reserves.

Mr. FLETCHER. Not only as to transportation but as to other items as well?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. In arranging the bill this year an effort has been made, and, in fact, that object has been accomplished, to put into one place the entire expense of the support of the Organized Reserve, including mileage, subsistence, transportation, pay, camp expenses, headquarters, and everything.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 35, at the end of line 5, to increase the appropriation for transportation of the Army and its supplies from "$15,500,000" to "$16,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 9, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$50,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

Water and sewers at military posts: For procuring and introducing water to buildings and premises at such military posts and stations as from their situations require to be brought from a distance; for the installation and extension of plumbing within buildings where the same is not specifically provided for in other appropriations; for the purchase and repair of fire apparatus, including fire-alarm systems; for the disposal of sewage, and expenses incident thereto; for repairs to water and sewer systems and plumbing; for hire of employees, $2,025,000: Provided, That not to exceed $50,000 of this appropriation shall be expended for new construction work.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Horses for Cavalry, Artillery, Engineers, etc.," on page 37, at the beginning of line 1, strike out "$200,000" and insert "$210,000," so as to read:

For the purchase of horses of ages, sex, and size as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War for remounts for officers entitled to public mounts for the Cavalry, Artillery, Signal Corps, and Engineers, the United States Military Academy, service schools, and staff colleges, and for the Indian scouts, and for such Infantry and members of the Medical Department in field campaigns as may be required to be mounted, and the expenses incident thereto (including $25,000 for purchase of remounts and $150,000 for encouragement of the breeding of riding horses suitable for the Army, including cooperation with the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, and for the purchase of animals for breeding purposes and their maintenance), $210,000:

Mr. FLETCHER. Under the head of "Horses for the Cavalry, the Artillery, the Engineers, and so forth," it is proposed to take care of the horses for the National Guard?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No. That item is taken care of in the Militia Bureau appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Military posts," on page 38, at the beginning of line 12, strike out "$154,875" and insert "$239,875," and in line 17, after the name "Georgia," to insert "$85,000 for barracks at Langley Field, Va.," so as to make the paragraph read:

For the construction and enlargement at military posts of such buildings as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be necessary, including all appurtenances thereto, $239,875, including $124,875 for continuation of construction at Fort Benning, Ga., $85,000 for barracks at Langley Field, Va., and $30,000 for an addition to the hospital at Fort Sill, Okla.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to inquire what is the nature of the particular improvement? I understand it is for barracks; but what is proposed to be done? Is Langley Field to be maintained permanently?

Mr. WADSWORTH. At Langley Field the machine shops, the headquarters building, and officers' quarters are all of permanent construction.

Mr. McKELLAR. When I was there it looked to me as if there were quite a large number of quarters, probably as many as were needed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true as to officers' quarters, but not as to barracks for the enlisted men; and that is the trouble. This item is for barracks for the enlisted men who are to-day at Langley Field living in the great hangars.

Mr. McKELLAR. They ought not to be, of course.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Senators can imagine the degree of comfort which they enjoy in a huge tin structure like a barn, which can not be heated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Military posts, Hawaiian Islands," on page 38, line 21, after the figures "$32,000," insert "for construction of six standard storehouses, $54,000; for one shop for care and preservation of ordnance material, $18,000"; and at the end of line 23, strike out "$313,500" and insert "$385,500," so as to make the paragraph read:

For completion of refrigerating plant, Schofield Barracks, including ice-making machinery and equipment therefor, $81,500; for continuation of construction of the Ku Tree Reservoir, $200,000; for construction of magazines for storage of ammunition, $32,000; for construction of six standard storehouses, $54,000; for one shop for care and preservation of ordnance material, $18,000; in all, $385,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Barracks and quarters," on page 39, line 13, after the word "including," to strike out "enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve," and in line 14, after the word "men," where it occurs the second time, to strike out the comma and the words "and members of the enlisted Reserve Corps," so as to read:

For barracks, quarters, stables, storehouses, magazines, administration and office buildings, sheds, shops, and other buildings necessary for the shelter of troops, public animals, and stores, and for administration purposes, except those pertaining to the Coast Artillery; for construction of reclamation plants; for constructing and repairing public buildings at military posts; for hire of employees; for rental of the authorized allowance of quarters for officers on duty with the troops at posts and stations where no public quarters are available; of barracks or authorized allowance of quarters for noncommissioned officers and enlisted men, men on duty where public quarters are not available, including retired enlisted men, when ordered to active duty; for grounds for cantonments, camp sites, and other military purposes, and for buildings or portions of buildings for occupation by troops, for use as stables, storehouses, and offices, and for other military purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 2, after the word "shall," to insert "be available for garages and stables of military attachés abroad but," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for garages and stables of military attachés abroad but not be available for rent for military attachés.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I desire to offer a perfecting amendment to the committee amendment. In line 2, after the word "for," I move to insert the words "rent of," so as to read "shall be available for rent of garages."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the committee amendment on page 40, line 2, after the word "for," it is proposed to insert the words "rent of."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator object to the amendment to the amendment?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to the amendment to the amendment, but I wish to ask the Senator in regard to the original amendment reported by the committee. Does the Government furnish automobiles for military attachés abroad?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In the larger countries; yes. It is absolutely essential that the military attaché have some way of getting around. He has to visit posts and stations of a military character; he has to follow the troops of the country to which he is attached. For example, in a movement of troops, such as is going on now in Europe, if any military attaché representing the United States is to observe the operations, he must have an automobile or he is simply out of it. For years, under very strict regulations which allow such automobiles to be used only when necessity impels, the military attachés at certain of our embassies abroad have been furnished automobiles for their use.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, can the Senator tell us what attachés have these private automobiles furnished at Government expense and operated at Government expense?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have just told the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. How many are there?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know how many there are. There are very few.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was it brought out in the hearings in any way?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; not the number.

Mr. McKELLAR. As the Senator knows, I am making some investigation about the cost of passenger automobiles generally, not only in this department but in the other departments as well, and that was an item of automobile expense that I had entirely overlooked. It never has been called to my attention before.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is so small that I think the Senator could not find it with a spyglass.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know. If each of our foreign attachés has an automobile, run at Government expense, it would amount to very nearly as much as the salary of the attaché.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I happen to know that not all of them have it, and they are very few in number anyway.

Mr. McKELLAR. I notice just below, in line 7, that they have a provision for stables. Do these attachés have both automobiles and horses?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Some are actually required to have horses. It would be impossible for them to perform their duties from time to time without them. For example, the military attaché of the United States attending the maneuvers of a great army—and maneuvers are constantly recurring incidents in Europe—can not follow the maneuvers which he is supposed to observe and concerning which he is supposed to inform our War Department here at home unless he has a horse.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, would it be considered an ignoble thing for an attaché to hire a horse under circumstances like that, or hire an automobile under circumstances like that; or is it necessary for the Government to furnish equipage of this kind all the time, just so that the attaché can have it on hand when he desires to follow Army maneuvers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, if we put that expense on the military attachés—

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just a moment—if we put that absolutely necessary expense upon the military attachés, none but rich officers could be assigned to the duty. It is very difficult even now, with these allowances, which are very small in the aggregate, to find officers of the Army who can afford to go abroad and live at a foreign capital and keep up their end of the game, as it were, and not run into debt. The effort of the department since the Great War is to get the best educated, the best informed and best trained officers for this service, realizing as the result of experience in the war that information is the first thing that must be obtained before armies can move. Prior to the war we were hopelessly behind. We had nothing in the way of military information; and the War Department under Mr. Baker hoped, and this department hopes, and I for one hope, that we never shall be found that way again. We had to withdraw military attachés from nine posts last year. There are several important countries which were not covered at all because the Congress slashed the appropriations. The House proposes to slash them again in this bill. Whatever the number that are left available for service, their comparatively small automobile and horse charges are carried under this item.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it is so late on Saturday that I am not going to ask for a record vote on this question; but it does seem to me that we are being exceedingly extravagant if we provide, just in order to have automobiles when necessary to observe Army maneuvers, that military attachés shall be given machines and their upkeep and garages and chauffeurs and all the other expenses, costing, doubtless, much more than their own salaries and expenses cost. It seems to me that we are being exceedingly extravagant in the use of automobiles if we do that, although no more extravagant there, I will say, than we are here, where practically every officer seems to have a machine at his disposal and a chauffeur to run it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am sure the Senator does not want to make that observation seriously.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have just put into the Record—

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just a moment, if I may beg the Senator's pardon. He has just said that it appears that nearly every officer has a machine at his disposal.

Mr. McKELLAR. Here in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There are only 30 automobiles in the service of the War Department in the District of Columbia—

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator is very greatly mistaken.

Mr. WADSWORTH. According to the report which he put into the Record himself.

Mr. McKELLAR. The report will show the number. I do not recall the exact number, but it seemed to me to be quite a large number, and included practically all the general officers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I am insisting that this be done accurately. May I have that report? The Senator put it in himself.

Mr. McKELLAR. That will show for itself.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; it will.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not remember how many there are.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There are 30 in the District.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, if the statement I have just made differs from the statement of the War Department, I refer to the War Department's statement for accuracy.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator will remember that he said that nearly every officer had one.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There are only 30 in the District. How could every officer have one? It is an extravagant statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. I remember that there were six or seven in one pool. There are quite a number of officers who have them.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator, as a matter of fact, that I happen to know that even the Surgeon General of the United States Army, with the rank of a major general, does not have a car at his disposal.

Mr. KING. Why should he?

Mr. WADSWORTH. He has to travel a great deal on official business.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and the Senator from Missouri, representing the great State of Missouri in this body, and needing an automobile virtually all the time, is not furnished with an automobile by the Government. I do not see that the services performed by the Surgeon General of the Army, as important as they are, are any more important than the services performed for his Government by the Senator from Missouri, who is addressing me at this time.

Mr. President, as I said, I am not going to ask for a ye-and-nay vote on this subject. The Senator from New York said that there were only a few officers, a few military attachés, who have automobiles. If that is correct—and, of course, the Senator from New York is very accurate about such matters; he studies these questions, and he can be relied on to state them accurately—what I want to call attention to is this: If just a few of them have automobiles, and garages, and chauffeurs to run the cars now, it will be only a short time before they will all have them; and why should they not? If one officer has them, other officers should have them, just as in the case of the Surgeon General. I can easily understand why he should complain of the Government if the Government gives other officers of like rank automobiles and chauffeurs, and does not give them to him. It is a discrimination against him. If there are other officers, probably of less rank—and I think the report of the War Department shows it—who have automobiles, and chauffeurs, and upkeep accounts charged to the Government, it is hardly fair to the Surgeon General; it is hardly fair to these officers. We ought to limit the use of these automobiles, as I have often said before.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the able Senator from New York a question, with his permission. Where do you draw the line in supplying automobiles to officers of the Army?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The department, of course, is confined in its expenditures of this kind by the appropriations, and the allotments made from the appropriations. The reduction in the use of the automobile has been immense in the last three years, due in part to the reductions made in the appropriations by the Congress, and due in equal part, in my humble judgment, to the business ability of Secretary Weeks. The automobile is assigned where it is most needed to save time, and hence money, in the transaction of the Government's business; that is all.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, that is undoubtedly a very reasonable explanation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, in some activities, the automobile is a tremendous money saver; in others, it would be an extravagance.

Mr. KING. Undoubtedly, Mr. President, there has been a very great abuse in various departments of the Government in the use of automobiles. There is an abuse now in some of the departments—I shall not say in the War Department, because I am not sufficiently advised. That, in part, grew out of the fact that following the war the Government had a very large number of automobiles. There was a sort of scramble upon the part of the executive branches of the Government to reach out and gather into those various executive agencies as many automobiles as possible, and hence there grew up a very great abuse. Of course, we have decentralized authority here in Washington; we have demobilized the great Army that was mobilized to fight the World War, and with that demobilization necessarily there has come a diminution in the use of automobiles in the District of Columbia. The compliment paid by the able Senator from New York to the present Secretary of War undoubtedly is deserved.

RETIREMENT OF CIRCUIT JUDGE WILLIAM W. MORROW.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement. When the nomination of Mr. Frank H. Rudkin for circuit judge in the place of Judge William W. Morrow, retired, was sent in, the nomination was sent in in this form:

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT JUDGE.

Frank H. Rudkin, of Washington, to be United States circuit judge, ninth circuit, vice William W. Morrow, resigned.

Judge Morrow, of the circuit court, has written a letter to the Secretary to the President complaining of this, stating that he did not resign, but retired. There is a distinction in the law about that, and he wants the RECORD corrected. I have here a copy of the letter which was written to the President's secretary, which I think would correct it, and that is the only correction that can be made in the RECORD.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator whether, when the nomination came—

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Rudkin's nomination was sent in as circuit judge, "vice William W. Morrow, resigned." Judge Morrow objects to the word "resigned." He says he did not resign; he retired; and he wants that correction made.

Mr. KING. Has Judge Rudkin been confirmed?

Mr. NELSON. Oh, yes. The nomination was confirmed several days ago, and I do not know any other way of correcting it in the RECORD than to have this letter printed.

Mr. KING. What I wanted to ask the Senator was this: Has anything been done, based on the President's nomination, that would affect the retirement pay and privileges of Judge Morrow?

Mr. NELSON. No; nothing at all. The law permits judges, when they have served 10 years and have attained the age of 70 years, to resign or to retire. If they simply retire, they are still in the service. In both cases they draw full pay; but they are still in the service, and may be called for duty, if they have retired instead of resigning. Judge Morrow states that he sent in notice to the President that he would retire, and that he did not resign. When the nomination of Judge Rudkin was sent in, it stated that he was nominated in place of Circuit Judge Morrow, "resigned"; and it is to correct that statement that I wish to have this letter printed in the RECORD.

Mr. KING. I understand that. While the Senator is speaking about judges, may I inquire how many judges have been nominated by the President under the recent act which provided for an increase to the number of 24?

Mr. NELSON. My recollection is that 13 judges have been nominated out of the lot—I think the lot was 24—and 11 of them have been confirmed, and the nominations of 2 will come before the committee next Monday.

Mr. KING. Without desiring to be partisan at all—I disclaim that—

Mr. NELSON. I simply ask, Mr. President, that this copy of the letter of Judge Morrow be published in the RECORD. That is the only correction that is possible, so far as I can see.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

JANUARY 19, 1923.

Hon. GEORGE B. CHRISTIAN, Jr.,
Secretary to the President, White House, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 5, 1923, page 1306 the nomination of Frank H. Rudkin, of Washington, to be United States circuit judge, ninth circuit, is stated to be "Vice Wm. W. Morrow, resigned."

This is of course an error. I did not resign, but applied for retirement under section 6 of the act of February 25, 1919 (40 Stats. 1157), which the President approved.

Will you kindly correct this error where it may have been made and repeated and advise the printer of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the permanent edition of the RECORD?

Very truly yours,

WM. W. MORROW.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator understands, as I do, that Judge Morrow's idea in wanting to be considered as having retired instead of resigned is that he wants it understood that he is willing to be considered as available for further service if called upon.

Mr. NELSON. Certainly; that is the idea.

Mr. KING. I inquired of the Senator from Minnesota how many appointments had been made under the recent act.

Mr. NELSON. I stated the number.

Mr. KING. I wanted to follow that by another question. Does the Senator know whether or not there has been a single Democrat named among that number?

Mr. NELSON. I do not know. I do not know the politics of any of these judges.

Mr. KING. Of course the understanding was that there was such a tremendous amount of business in the United States that, the courts being so much behind, it was imperative that we pass that law and create 24 additional judgeships, and that they must be filled immediately because of the great urgency in the public business. We passed the law months ago; 13 judges have been named; and I fancy they are all Republican. I merely mention it to illustrate the nonpartisanship of the present administration in the matter of our judiciary.

APPENDIX TO REPORT OF ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent. After the great Pullman strike in Chicago in 1894, which resulted in an injunction case known as the Debs case, the Attorney General, at the instance of Congress, published an appendix to his report. That was in pursuance of a resolution to Congress. It is an appendix which contains simply the orders, the telegrams, and proceedings which passed between the Department of Justice and the various officials of the Government. There is only one copy of it left, which the secretary to the Attorney General brought to me.

The Attorney General would like to have permission to publish a similar document in respect to the recent strike in Chicago. It contains no opinions, and nothing but the correspondence between various officers of the Government of the United States and the Department of Justice. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the concurrent resolution which I send to the desk may have immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. KING. Let the resolution be reported.

Mr. NELSON. It is to be printed as an appendix to his annual report, not as an independent document.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is to be paid for, of course, out of the appropriations for the Department of Justice?

Mr. MOSES. Oh, yes; it will be paid for out of the Department of Justice appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 35) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Attorney General be, and is hereby, authorized and instructed to print, as an appendix to his last annual report, full copies of all telegraphic and other correspondence between the Department of Justice and public officers and agents, private persons, railroad companies, and their officers and agents, in the year 1922, relative to the disorders in the United States of America during said year, and to the action taken by the Government of the United States in suppressing the same.

SENATOR NELSON'S EIGHTIETH BIRTHDAY.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I noticed in the morning papers that the distinguished senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who has just offered the concurrent resolution as chairman of the Judiciary Committee, yesterday attained the age of 80 years, and I know I am voicing the sentiments of both sides of this Chamber, Republican and Democratic, when I extend to him our heartiest felicitations and best wishes for many recurrences of that anniversary.

The senior Senator from Minnesota became a Senator a few years after I came, as a young man, to the House of Representatives. I came over to the Senate and made his acquaintance early, and since that time I have watched his career as a Senator, and I feel that there is no public man in America who has rendered more distinguished, patriotic, and efficient service to his country than has the senior Senator from Minnesota. I feel that I am voicing not only the sentiments of his colleagues on both sides of this Chamber, but that I am voicing the sentiments of an appreciative American public, when I express the wish that he may live long and serve his country as patriotically and efficiently as he has done in the past.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, permit me to say only a word in reference to what the Senator from Virginia has just said. I assure the Senator that it is a great comfort to me that I have the confidence and good will of my associates in this body on both sides of the Chamber. I have always aimed to conduct myself in such a spirit of fairness that no one could complain of any injustice on my part, and that will be my aim in the future. I assure the Senator from Virginia and the Senators on the other side of the Chamber that I appreciate very much their confidence and good wishes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, as one of those who have come but recently into the Senate I wish merely to say that the Senator from Minnesota was a gallant Union soldier, and all my people followed the Stars and Bars. He is a Republican, and all my people are Democratic. Such a magnificent character, however, has the distinguished Senator from Minnesota that he disarms me of all the prejudice I have cherished through my life, and sometimes I almost feel that I have a grievance against him. He is such a good man that I feel that I was mistaken when I hated the Republicans.

It is, indeed, an inspiration to have known a man who has been in public life more years than some Members of the Senate have lived, and to know that through it all he has brought down to a ripe old age nothing but the honor and respect and good opinion of all men, so that after 40 years of public service not a man rises up to charge him with an act that was little or mean or that was not inspired by high motives and a patriotic love for his country. It is an inspiration, and it arouses a hope that there yet lives in the Republic a spirit that appreciates public service where it has been rendered by one who has so fittingly discharged the duties of high public station.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I wish to say only a word in this connection. When I came to the Senate I became a member of the Committee on Commerce. Shortly afterwards the distinguished Senator from Minnesota became the chairman of that committee, and I served with him a number of years while he was chairman of the Committee on Commerce. I have served with him also upon the Committee on the Judiciary and in other relations here, and I simply rose to concur in what has been said by the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Arkansas and to speak another word wishing him many years of usefulness and of happiness.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, my relations with the Senator from Minnesota commenced some threescore years ago, and my feeling for him and our relations here are such that I regard him almost as if we were of one family. Therefore I rise to thank Senators on the other side for speaking so highly of one whom I love as a brother. If all that I own and all my interests here and elsewhere were in his hands I would know that I would always get what we in the western country call "a square deal."

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On behalf of the committee I offer an amendment, on page 40, line 3, after the word "rent," to insert the words "of offices." That is so as to distinguish between the two kinds of expenditures.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 40, line 3, after the word "rent," insert the words "of offices," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for rent of garages and stables of military attachés abroad but not be available for rent of offices for military attachés.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is so as to make it certain what the expenditure is for.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 40, line 7, after the word "garages," to insert the words "and stables."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I not appeal to the Senator from New York at this hour to consent to an adjournment? After the felicitations paid to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] it seems to me we are getting down to grossly material things in talking about garages and money and stables and the Army. Let us cherish the friendship and the love and affection for our distinguished friend and take an adjournment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am informed that it is the desire of several Senators to have an executive session. I am sure the Senator from Washington desires to have the unfinished business laid before the Senate, as it is my intention to move an adjournment instead of a recess until Monday.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business may be laid before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 5, 1923, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 3, 1923.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

In Thy own way, O Lord, be with us this day, and above all things may we value Thy presence. Where there is weakness, give strength; where there is uncertainty, give assurance; where there is ignorance, give understanding; where there is doubt, give faith. Bless our whole country with a wealth of happiness and plenty. O let time, the teacher of wisdom, the soother of grief, and the healer of wounds, be most merciful unto us. Quench not the light of hope and love in our homes. In them may life be rich and joyous, ever a foretaste of that life which is to come. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4287. An act to provide credit facilities for the agricultural and live-stock industries of the United States, to amend the Federal farm loan act, to amend the Federal reserve act, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4390) to amend the last paragraph of section 10 of the Federal reserve act, as amended by the act of June 3, 1922.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 4287. An act to provide credit facilities for the agricultural and live-stock industries of the United States, to amend the Federal farm loan act, to amend the Federal reserve act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, the Committee on Enrolled Bills reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 11731. An act to provide for the renting of the first floor of the customhouse at Mobile, Ala., to the Mobile Chamber of Commerce; and

H. R. 12473. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Winco Block Coal Co., a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River in Mingo County, W. Va.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 4390. An act to amend the last paragraph of section 10 of the Federal reserve act as amended by the act of June 3, 1922.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my remarks on the bill H. R. 13827, relating to the sinking fund, which we discussed yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD his remarks on the bill indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DOGS.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of an agricultural bulletin.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, we could not hear the gentleman's request.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman repeat it louder?

Mr. HAWES. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the necessity of an additional agricultural bulletin.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of an additional agricultural bulletin. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the document referred to:

THE DOG.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. Speaker, the Department of Agriculture issues many useful bulletins upon nearly every conceivable subject that relates to agriculture and, in addition, upon domestic fowls and animals.

The work of these department bulletins has been of great benefit, and the demand for these publications from foreign nations has done much to impress the world with the care and thoroughness of the work performed by the competent men and women directing their issuance.

The subjects covered by these excellent bulletins are so varied and cover such a wide range of subjects that I was surprised to find that no bulletin has been issued upon the subject of our "domesticated" animal, the dog.

The subject of any bulletin, to justify its issuance, should be practical, useful, and of sufficient general interest to justify the expense of preparation and printing.

My remarks shall be directed to the subject of popular interest and to the matter of practical utility.

HISTORICAL.

Evading the Darwinian theory as applied to the dog, for fear it may become involved in that broader field of present debate, it may be said that the modern dog has developed in much the same way as our domestic fowl and utility animals, but he must not be classed with those, because his association with man is closer and more personal and is better described as "domesticated" than "domestic."

We find his drawing upon the tombs of Egyptian kings, upon the tiles of the Assyrians, in the sculpture of the Greeks and Romans.

Wherever civilization has advanced to the art of painting or printing he finds a place.

He has not been neglected by history or forgotten by the poets.

The religious books of all Pagan nations find a place for him, and he is mentioned in both the Old and the New Testament.

Columbus discovered him in the West Indies, our American Indians found him useful, and whether at the North Pole or the Equator he has had a home and a place in the affairs of men.

OCCUPIES A SPECIAL PLACE.

There are more different breeds of dogs than of horses, cattle, sheep, or poultry.

He is the oldest domesticated animal, and assisted his master to procure food and defend against his enemy before horses, cattle, and poultry came under control.

His story runs back to prehistoric times. He was used as a sacrifice upon the altar of Pagan gods. His place in history, art, fiction, and poetry ranks second only to man.

Next to man he ranks highest in intelligence, being susceptible to all human passions—hatred, love, fear, hope, joy, distress, courage, timidity, and jealousy.

Man requires service from all animals, but only from this one receives friendship. He is the only animal that eats all of man's food, flesh, and vegetables.

Man is taught chivalry; the dog has it naturally. He never attacks the female of his species, even when feeding.

He is the delight of the poor man's hovel and the rich man's mansion. Faithfully follows his master who tramps the dusty roadside, and sits proudly upon the cushioned seat of the millionaire's de luxe machine.

Wealth, caste, social distinction are all one to him. He is content and useful in every station assigned to him by fate.

But he knows the just from the unjust, the kind from the unkind, the charitable from the uncharitable, the true from the false, the man from the hypocrite.

Disguise does not deceive him. Paint, tinsel, silk, and jewels are no more to him than tatters, rags, worn shoes, or ragged hat. But it is what these things cover, the man, who wins his affection or dislike.

His master's friends are his friends, his master's enemies are his enemies, no matter what their station.

He does not count the cost, but gives his life at his master's command, and even without command, in his master's defense.

When master is gay he is merry; when sad, he grieves and understands his master's moods.

The destruction of an army, the fate of a nation has been decided by a dog's bark.

With teeth bared, eyes ablaze, and hair a-bristle, he has saved a wife and child from assault and then played nurse all day.

With devoted strength he has rescued his master from a watery grave and dragged a child from an angry fire.

Over bleak and frozen mountains he has carried food and drink and brought assistance to the wounded and those in dire distress.

Peary could not have reached the North Pole nor Scott the South Pole without the faithful dog.

He has taken the place of the horse and the ox, his skin has been used for shelter and for clothes, his flesh as food, his eyes have found the things his master sought, his nose has bared the trail his master could not find.

And in return he asks but a little consideration and a few kind words:

Never yet the dog our country fed
Betrayed the kindness or forgot the bread.

USE.

As friend, companion, and confidant I like him best. His manifold uses need little discussion.

One small dog in a home has more terror for the burglar than an armed man outside. In the yard he sounds the warning and the night prowler sneaks away.

In hunting he is almost indispensable.

An American, Paul Rainey, surprised the sporting world by hunting the lion in Africa with dogs raised and trained in Mississippi and Louisiana.

When properly trained he can handle cattle, sheep, and swine better than a man. He excels as a ratter and destroyer of mink and other vermin.

All have seen the blind man's dog, cup in mouth and attached to a string, leading his sightless master.

Before the days of cooking stoves each household had its open chimney and "turnspit" worked by a dog, and even to-day the dog on a treadmill churns the butter.

The expressman and peddler, in delivering their packages and wares, usually leave a four-footed guardian in charge.

Troupes of performing dogs delight the audiences in our vaudeville houses and demonstrate what they can do when skillfully trained.

Hagenbeck has a lion tamer who always enters the lion's cage accompanied by two magnificent Great Danes. He informs me the dogs are not there for exhibition purposes, but for the protection of the keeper. At the first attempt of the lion at attack their duty is to attack him. Twice they have saved the trainer's life.

Many fire departments have their mascot, which attends all fires and in idle hours entertains the company.

Some of the leading professional baseball teams take their dog mascot with them, and have some doubts of success if he is absent.

There are many thousands of farms in the United States. Practically all have one dog; frequently two or more. They guard the home, destroy destructive animals, act as companion and care for the stock, and protect the garden and orchard.

Some of the leading fanciers, judges, owners, and handlers of dogs in the United States were gathered at my home one afternoon. In order to start the conversation, I asked the innocent question: "Which is the best breed of dogs?" There was a long silence and an effort to change the subject. I persisted, and started an argument. It started a fight and broke up the party, and to this day I do not know.

Each has its especial advocate and each its particular use.

For the farm, however, it is my judgment that the rough-coated Scotch collie is one of the best general utility dogs, besides being beautiful and companionable.

The word "collie" is simply the old Highland term for "sheep dog."

The dogs have been used for centuries in handling all kinds of domestic animals. They are serviceable as companions, watch dogs, and have an all-around general utility. They are adaptable, loyal, and easily trained to perform all sorts of service.

The tests to which they are put in sheep-dog trials are most severe. A long course is marked out by flags and the dog is compelled to conduct three strange sheep over the course, which is interrupted by hurdles, and deliver the sheep into a pen. These dogs are directed only by the voice and signals made by the hands and arms, and are unaccompanied by the owner, who must remain at a distance.

During the last war the French, Belgians, and Germans successfully trained many thousands of war dogs.

These war dogs, like soldiers, are taught implicit obedience, their acute hearing and sensitive nostrils were used in giving notice of enemy approach, discovering the wounded, and many times gave first aid for the Red Cross.

And then what fun and companionship they provided for the men in the trenches!

It would be unfair to forget the ladies and their pet or toy dogs.

While not fancying these little toy dogs myself, they seem to fit into the city household very comfortably, and are intelligent and companionable. They display a degree of affection unequalled in the animal world.

We all remember the account of the lap dog of Mary, Queen of Scots, which accompanied her beautiful mistress to the scaffold and continued to caress the body after death, refusing food, and dying of grief a few days later.

The bench show brings into competition the best dogs of the various breeds. The dog winning 10 blue ribbons in open competition in different shows becomes a champion. This is not easy and sometimes requires years for its accomplishment.

Field trials are held for sporting dogs in various portions of the United States. The setter and pointer here compete in speed, bird sense, deportment, and scenting qualities. They extend all the way from Manitoba, Canada, down through the Eastern and Southern States, the championship being run in Tennessee each January.

Greyhound coursing matches are held under much the same conditions, and the contest between beagle hounds is particularly attractive. The dogs winning their championships only under the most exacting conditions then become exceedingly valuable.

Time will not permit of a more extended discussion of these enjoyable trials, in which the dog of the poor man contests with the dog of the rich, and the happy owner of the winner is more elated than by any other sporting event.

The life of the dog is usually about 12 years—sometimes longer—but the end comes all too quickly; and one can but join with Kipling:

Buy a pup and your money will buy
Love unflinching that can not lie—
Perfect passion and worship fed
By a kick in the ribs or a pat on the head.
Nevertheless, it is hardly fair
To risk your heart for a dog to tear.

We have our compensation in the pleasure of studying a pup while developing into maturity. His early surprises, mishaps, and mischief have a humor all their own. He teaches his lesson, and especially to our own "kid," who takes command of his education.

VALUE.

Some years ago I met a well-known journalist. As we were chatting, he pointed to a gentleman and said: "That is Colonel —, a lawyer, now making an important investigation for the Government." My journalist friend said: "I want you to talk dogs to him. He spends $30,000 a year upon dogs."

I asked the journalist how he knew I was interested in dogs, and he related the following experience:

Having been well acquainted with Mark Twain, he was sent by one of the great New York papers to a little town in Connecticut to report his death. He finished an elaborate story on the great humorist's demise and hurried to the telegraph office and told the operator to put the story on the wire immediately. The operator said he could not do it until he had sent a telegram. The journalist stormed and persisted; the telegraph operator was firm. Finally, with great indignation, he said: "What telegram can be more important than sending the news of Mark Twain's death to the people?" The telegraph operator said: "I have a telegram here for a man named Hawes, in St. Louis. It's about the shipment of some of our best dogs to a dog show; and I'm going to send this telegram first, no matter what you think." The journalist said this was how he discovered that I was a dog man.

In this little Connecticut town they have a famous kennel and everybody was interested in this kennel coming back with blue ribbons. The telegraph operator shared in this local pride and sent the dog telegram in preference to the account of Mark Twain's death.

The president of the American Kennel Club has associated with him, on its board of directors, some of the wealthy men of the Nation. They have elaborate quarters, issue a newspaper, and spend large sums annually in preserving records of breeding and chronicling the awards of bench shows.

At a field trial which I attended some years ago a wealthy man from Cincinnati who was riding with me behind the dogs saw a black-white-and-tan setter which he greatly admired, and told me he was going to buy it. I heard him offer the owner $500 for the dog, which was promptly refused. He raised it $1,000, was again refused, and just before he left for home he offered the owner $3,500, which was again refused. The owner of the dog was a man of very moderate means, living in a little town in Alabama. He said he would not sell the dog for two reasons: His service fees would bring him in that amount in a short while, and he would be afraid to go home to the "missus" without him.

I saw $2,000 refused a number of times for small dogs at bench shows.

A good dog costs as much as a horse. Champions of bench shows and field trials bring prices that make the horseman jealous. And these are not prices paid for fancy pet dogs for the fashionable dame. They are dogs that bring a high price because of their conformation, type, and correct form, and are used for the future improvement of the breed.

There is no sentiment in these values; they are considered investments. Sentiment, of course, does enter into the matter occasionally. I had some fancy dogs quail shooting one season with a friend of mine. They were too fast and ranged too far for a hilly country. A farmer who was with us had a pointer named "Sank," who knew his country and performed admirably. My friend asked me to buy him for him, which I did for $75. A month later my friend called me up on the telephone and asked me for the address of the farmer. I gave it to him and inquired what he wanted it for. He replied: "I am ashamed to have only paid $75 for that dog; I want to send the man $50 more, and he is worth twice as much."

This old "Sank" came out of a barn. He now lives in the finest mansion in the Mississippi Valley.

While calling on the owner recently my host excused himself and later returned smiling; he had just assisted his youngest son to slip "Sank" upstairs in violation of the household rules. This he did every night, so that "Sank," instead of sleeping in a barn, now sleeps in one of the finest bedrooms in the western country.

A trained shooting dog to-day is cheap at $150, and most of them bring a higher price, and this price is brought at a year old. A horse or a cow has to be kept for three years before the same amount could be realized.

An old darkey put this estimate on the value of his dog:

Dar's a mighty fine monument standin' right nigh,
But to me dis poor mound looks bigger,
For dar's a monument money can't buy—
A yaller dog's love for a nigger.

Thanks to some of our rich men, we yearly import to this country some of the best prize winners of Europe. We have been taking so many of their best that they are now beginning to come to us for stud dogs. This is particularly true of the setter class.

My fad at one time was Irish terriers. The terrier is a very bright, intelligent little fellow, with a shaggy coat, bright eyes, and an engaging disposition. He is an agitator, a regular devil for a fight, and fond of visiting the neighbors. While breeding these dogs I had occasion to send one to a reverend gentleman of Gananoque, Canada, for service, for which I paid $50.

Some years later I met the reverend gentleman at the Detroit dog show and was introduced with much ceremony to Celtic Badger, the champion Irish terrier of America. I asked him what he would sell the dog for, and this splendid man replied: "Well, Mr. Hawes, I don't know. I have a very poor parish in Gananoque, and Celtic Badger does much to support it. Last year I received $1,800 for his services. I do not know how the parish could get along without him. I have been offered $2,200 for him and, as we need a church addition, I may have to sell him, but I hope not."

There are more than 15 weekly and monthly publications devoted exclusively to the subject of the dog. Take up Country Life in America, or any one of the other big periodicals dealing with kindred subjects, and you will find more advertisements for dogs than for all other kinds of animals combined. American Field, one of the oldest sporting publications printed, devotes pages to him in each issue. There are at least 10 large factories manufacturing dog foods and dog biscuits, and as many more patent-medicine houses that make a speciality of dog medicines.

These illustrations indicate his value.

Strange to say, the average man considers the dog of little commercial value and, while he would not ask you for a horse or a cow, he would think nothing of asking for a dog.

I was on a four days' shoot with a friend some years ago, who had a very fine female setter. The dog was much admired. As we went from farm to farm he was frequently asked for a pup and, while extolling the virtues of his dog, he freely promised a pup not only to those who asked, but offered one to many who made no request. I watched this performance for several days, and one evening I said: "Do you know you have promised 22 pups and will never be able to deliver them?" He thought for awhile and then said: "Hawes, it's a mighty poor man who won't promise a pup."

ADVICE.

If I have aroused an interest in the dog which may lead to the publication of a bulletin in his behalf, some general advice while waiting for the bulletin may be of assistance.

Buy a pup over three months old and, unless you are sure of forming his acquaintance, do not buy one over 18 months old unless purely for breeding purposes.

Keep your dog's pedigree. It will only cost $1 to register. It adds to both your enjoyment and the value of the dog.

Feed a pup frequently and an old dog but twice a day.

Feed from a pan, never on the ground or floor.

Dogs are classified by weight and feed accordingly: First, those under 12 pounds; second, those from 12 to 20 pounds; third, those from 25 to 50 pounds; fourth, those over 50 pounds; fifth, those over 100 pounds.

Scraps from the table, when fresh, are the best food, and cost nothing.

Feed the dog yourself; you will control him better.

Feed morning and evening; the big meal at night, as the dog should not be worked immediately after eating.

Do not feed chicken bones; they are covered with a hard substance which frequently cuts through the intestines.

No other animal shares as fully the life affairs of men as does the dog. He resents injustice and has the same respect for fair treatment and decision as does the human being.

The kennel should be dry, clean, and frequently white-washed.

Use a leather collar, not one made of metal. Don't chain unless necessary.

If the dog sucks eggs, open one end of an egg and put in red pepper.

The master is responsible for a vicious dog. If it is vicious, it is largely his fault.

Properly introduced to the cat, there will be no "cat and dog time."

If he jumps upon you in caress, gently press your shoe upon a hind foot. Do this a number of times and he will stay on the ground.

The pup will imitate an old dog; but don't try and train two young dogs at the same time; give each a private lesson.

Put your own name and address on the collar—not the dog's.

Do not kick your dog or strike him on the head. Use a switch or, grasping him by the neck and back, give him a shaking.

Do not "holler" at a dog unless he is at a distance. Talk to him in a moderate tone. He is guided more by intonation than words. You exhaust your emphasis in continuous "hollering" and he fails to understand.

Do not let your dog chase horses or autos on the road. It is a very bad habit.

Do not use more than three letters in your dog's name. If you want to use a longer one for his pedigree, give him a short kennel name.

Do not borrow a dog and do not lend one. You may spoil your friend's dog or he yours. A dog must know his own master.

Do not punish a dog long after his fault has been committed. Be sure he knows exactly for what the punishment is administered.

Do not keep a dog in a hot room all day and put him out in the cold at night.

Try and keep a breed that will not require to have their ears or tails trimmed. This is a custom which is properly growing in disrepute.

The English owners of various terriers have long believed that biting the tail off was better than cutting it.

A friend recommended his English coachman to me to perform the operation and sent him to the house. One squeal from the first pup was enough. A red head appeared in the doorway, soon followed by the indignant form of the cook, armed with a broom. On this one occasion, at least, the Irish beat the English—that is, with a broom—but the English beat the Irish to the front gate, since which time I have tried to get along without this practice.

Take your dog into the chicken yard when young and let him stay by your side while you work with the chickens. He will then learn to know that they are your property and respect them. If he is old when you get him and he kills a chicken, try a thrashing. If that fails, tie the dead chicken around his neck and let him carry it all day. He will soon get enough chicken and will leave them alone. This is a favorite method of "bird-dog men" in breaking a pointer or setter from chasing rabbits.

DOG POPULATION.

We issue over 25,000 dog licenses each year in the city of St. Louis. It is safe to say this is not one-third of the total number.

It is estimated that there are over 300,000 dogs in Missouri, and in the United States an approximate estimate would be over 7,000,000.

Each of the 48 States has legislation of some kind affecting the dog.

Every city of 5,000 inhabitants has some municipal regulation upon the same subject.

And in this town a dog was found,
As many dogs there be;
Both mongrel, puppy, whelp, and hound,
And curs of low degree.

Putting a valuation of only $5 upon each dog would make the national investment $35,000,000.

Every large city in the United States has an annual dog show.

In Great Britain over 700 dog shows are held each year, with over 20,000 entries.

There are in the United States some 15 monthly publications devoted exclusively to the dog.

CONTENTS OF A BULLETIN.

If the number of dogs, their value and utility, should impress the Department of Agriculture with their practical use and cause demand for a bulletin, it should contain this information:

1. Description of useful breeds and their standards. 2. Feeding. 3. Housing. 4. Disease. 5. Breeding. 6. House training, farm training, and special training. 7. Digest of State and municipal laws. 8. Outlaw and criminal dogs, sheep killers, etc.

State legislatures frequently have before them the matter of licensing or regulating the dog, and this is true of legislative bodies in the cities.

FINALLY.

We have in Missouri a Fox Hunters' Association, with a membership of 3,000, which issues the Red Ranger, a monthly paper devoted exclusively to fox hunting and fox hounds.

The members of this association are the "salt of the earth," who meet annually in a tented city and spend a week with nature and the hounds.

They are the big mule raisers, whose animals served with the armies in Mexico, the Philippines, France, in the Boer war, in China, whose voice, next to the "houn' dawg," makes the loudest, if not the sweetest, music. They are lawyers, doctors, farmers, and men of good kidney and fine digestion, who worship in the big outdoors while their dogs sing en masse, if not in mass.

Of course there are men like one who visited our fox hunters' encampment and was cautioned to be still and listen. "Listen to what?" he queried. "Listen to the music, man. Don't you hear it? It's now getting stronger, sweeter, and clearer," chided the fox hunter. "No," said the city dweller, "I don't hear nothing but 'a lot of damn dogs.'"

If large interest does not appeal, if investment does not argue and utility persuade, perhaps I may be excused for introducing the late Senator George Vest, of Missouri, to conclude my statement.

Senator Vest illumined this subject in an address to a jury. Time and changed political issues may cause us to forget his great speeches, but this classic will always be preserved:

Gentlemen of the jury: The best friend a man has in this world may turn against him and become his enemy. His son or daughter that he has reared with loving care may prove ungrateful. Those who are nearest and dearest to us, those whom we trust with our happiness and our good name, may become traitors to their faith. The money that a man has he may lose. It flies away from him; perhaps when he needs it most. A man's reputation may be sacrificed in a moment of ill-considered action. The people who are prone to fall on their knees to do us honor when success is with us may be the first to throw the stone of malice when failure settles its cloud upon our heads. The one absolute, unselfish friend that man can have in this selfish world, the one that never deserts him, the one that never proves ungrateful or treacherous, is his dog. Gentlemen of the jury, a man's dog stands by him in prosperity and in poverty, in health and in sickness. He will sleep on the cold ground where the wintry winds blow and the snow drives fiercely, if only he can be near his master's side. He will lick the wounds and sores that come in encounter with the roughness of the world. He guards the sleep of his pauper master as if he were a prince. When all other friends desert, he remains. When riches take wings and reputation falls to pieces he is as constant in his love as the sun in its journey through the heavens. If fortune drives the master forth an outcast in the world, friendless and homeless, the faithful dog asks no higher privilege than that of accompanying him to guard against danger, to fight against his enemies, and when the last scene of all comes, and death takes the master in its embrace and his body is laid away in the cold ground, no matter if all other friends pursue their way, there by his graveside will the noble dog be found, his head between his paws, his eyes sad but open in alert watchfulness, faithful and true even to death.

EASTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my remarks made in the Committee on the Judiciary on the bill (H. R. 6376) to amend the act establishing the eastern judicial district of Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following are the remarks referred to:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY, Wednesday, January 31, 1923.

The subcommittee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m., Hon. RICHARD YATES (chairman) presiding.

Present: Messrs. BOIES, HICKEY, and BIRD.

STATEMENT OF HON. F. B. SWANK, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. YATES. Representative SWANK, of Oklahoma, appears in support of the bill (H. R. 6376) "To amend the act establishing the eastern judicial district of Oklahoma," the bill being as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That two terms of the court of two weeks each, or more, in the discretion of the presiding judge, in the eastern judicial district of the State of Oklahoma, for the trial of civil and criminal cases shall, after the passage and approval of this act, be held at Pauls Valley, Okla., each year in said district."

Mr. SWANK, we will be glad to hear you.

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, some time ago I introduced H. R. 6376, a bill to make Pauls Valley, Okla., a Federal court town, and wish to thank the committee for giving me the privilege of appearing before you to-day to present my argument and the facts in support of the bill. I would have asked for a hearing earlier, but waited for the passage of the bill creating additional Federal district judges. That bill is now a law and gives another district judge to the eastern district of Oklahoma, but the President has not yet made the appointment. When the appointment is made, the eastern district will have two judges, and they are needed, as also is another place to hold court.

In order to have the criminal laws of the country properly administered it is essential that the proper machinery be provided and courts conveniently located that trials may be speedy under our laws and the Constitution. Nothing known to criminal law is more to the advantage of the person charged with crime than delay in trials. It encourages the criminal and breeds a disrespect for the law and our courts. Violations of the law should be promptly tried with reasonable haste or in many cases it may be impossible to try them at all. Delays and continuances in trials are not only beneficial to the criminal and the person charged but greatly increase the court costs in additional witness and jury fees and service of process. A defendant should be given his constitutional right to a speedy and impartial trial, no difference what the charge may be. This is for the good of the public and society as well as to preserve the rights of the defendant.

Litigants in civil cases also have the right to have their cases heard in a reasonable time without running, at great expense, from one end of the district to the other. The courts are instituted for the enforcement of the law and to settle civil disputes among our citizens, and they should be established at convenient and easily accessible places. The people pay the expenses of the courts the same as the other expenses of the Government, and they should be protected in their rights, among which are law enforcement and the settlement of civil cases.

Oklahoma is divided into two Federal court districts, with the old Indian Territory comprising the eastern district and old Oklahoma Territory the western district. There are seven court towns in the eastern district, viz: Muskogee, Vinita, Tulsa, Hugo, McAlester, Ardmore, and Chickasha. For the convenience of the people in this district and to save expense to the Government another court town should be created. This would make eight places to hold court, or four towns for each of the two judges in the district. In making a selection for the eighth court town I have not only chosen the most convenient and easily accessible place but one of the best towns in the entire State. With permission of the committee, I hereby attach information about Pauls Valley and Garvin County, Okla., taken from the Pauls Valley Enterprise, one of the State's leading weekly papers:

"PAULS VALLEY FACTS THAT ARE TERSELY TOLD.

"A population of over 5,000. An altitude of 871 feet.
"Three banks: Aggregate deposits of over $2,000,000. Three lumber yards. A modern light and gas plant. An up-to-date ice and cold-storage plant. Four cotton gins. Large compress and cotton warehouse. Five wholesale houses. One flour mill. Two grain elevators. An efficient laundry and cleaning plant. A well-equipped sanitarium. Five churches.

"Three brick grade schools and a $185,000 new high school.
"Seventy-five blocks of pavement and more concrete walks than any city its size in the Southwest. Ample water supply and adequate sewer system.

"A building and loan association. A bit and spur factory. Two pipe-line pumping stations. A well-equipped bottling works. A machine shop.

"Two weekly newspapers. One hundred and fifty other business activities.

"Service by the main line of the Santa Fe and two branch lines of the same system.

"The largest city within a radius of 50 miles, giving it a well-defined trade territory that is responsible for its steady growth. Surrounded by an agricultural territory that is as productive as any in the whole

Southwest. Oil development in the county has reached a production of approximately 21,000 barrels a day, with prospects for further extensions.

"GARVIN COUNTY AND ITS RESOURCES."

"Garvin County is one of the south-central counties of the State, with a population of about 35,000 people. Altitude ranges from 750 to about 1,000 feet above sea level. The mean temperature is about 60 degrees, with an average annual rainfall of about 35 inches.

"It is the banner alfalfa county of the State, 800 to 1,200 cars being shipped annually, and has possibility of production that should make it the banner county of the world.

"It is an ideal section for the raising of pure-bred beef stock, as well as intensive development of the dairy activities, on account of both natural forage and bountiful crops of feedstuff.

"Climatic conditions are most favorable for the raising of poultry of all kinds. The county will produce about $350,000 worth of poultry and eggs this year.

"It is known the world over for its high standard of broom corn, and has in Lindsay, a town within its borders, the largest broom corn wagon market in the world. From 100 to 140 cars of broom corn are shipped from this community annually.

"Cotton production, 90 per cent of the long staple Acala being raised, averages from 40,000 to 55,000 bales a year.

"Pecans, fruit, berries, and grapes, as well as melons, grow successfully in this county.

"Corn, small grains, peanuts, sweet and Irish potatoes, besides the other crops mentioned, can be successfully raised here."

Mr. Chairman, this gives some explanation and idea of the place where I am asking that another court town be established. Pauls Valley is more than 50 miles from Oklahoma City, Chickasha, and Ardmore, the nearest court towns.

I ask permission to insert a letter from the clerk of the United States District Court at Muskogee, Okla.

Mr. YATES. Without objection, the statement will be inserted in the record.

Mr. BOIES. I do not know that I have any objection to it, but it is rather a peculiar situation to me. The northern district of Iowa has a population of between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 and terms of court are held at only five places in the State.

Mr. YATES. Without objection, the statement submitted by Mr. Swank will be inserted in the record at this point.

The statement is as follows:

DECEMBER 22, 1922.

Hon. F. B. SWANK,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your inquiry we find that we have pending cases as follows, to wit:

Law cases:

Filed (during 1922, 196)—

Garvin County	2
McClain County	5
Murray County	1
Pontotoc County	1
Seminole County	1

Pending (all counties, 267)—

Garvin County	4
McClain County	4
Murray County	2
Pontotoc County	3
Seminole County	0

Equity cases:

Filed (during 1922, 140)—

Garvin County	1
McClain County	0
Murray County	1
Pontotoc County	5
Seminole County	0

Pending (all counties, 234)—

Garvin County	1
McClain County	0
Murray County	2
Pontotoc County	4
Seminole County	1

Bankruptcy cases:

Filed (during 1922, 479)—

Garvin County	13
McClain County	0
Murray County	4
Pontotoc County	21
Seminole County	2

Pending—

Garvin County	11
McClain County	0
Murray County	4
Pontotoc County	19
Seminole County	2

Criminal cases:

Filed (during 1922, 1,232)—

Garvin County	21
McClain County	6
Murray County	0
Pontotoc County	11
Seminole County	32

Pending—

Garvin County	10
McClain County	4
Murray County	0
Pontotoc County	6
Seminole County	17

Yours truly,

W. V. McCLURE, Clerk.

This letter shows the following cases filed in Garvin, McClain, Murray, Pontotoc, and Seminole Counties, to which counties Pauls Valley would be the most accessible: Law, 10; equity, 7; bankruptcy, 40; criminal, 70, making a total of 127 cases filed in these counties in 1922, and 94 of these cases pending. In Oklahoma there is a probate and county court, with civil and criminal jurisdiction for each county, and a district court of general jurisdiction established in each county for the convenience of the people and the more economical enforcement of the law. This report from the clerk of the Federal court for the eastern district shows that another court town is needed in this district, and Pauls Valley is the place where it should be established.

That the committee may more clearly see the condition of the docket for the eastern district and the need for an additional court town, I ask permission to here insert a statement by the clerk of the Federal court at Muskogee.

Mr. YATES. Without objection, the statement submitted by Mr. Swank will be inserted in the record at this point.

Mr. SWANK. You will see from this statement that the present status of the docket is 2,672 cases. The statement also shows that the fees collected for 1922 amount to $23,729.77, a large increase over previous years.

A few days ago in Garvin County, in the county seat of which I am asking Congress to establish a Federal court for the convenience of the people, one of the greatest oil wells of the country was brought in, and the papers state that it is producing 14,000 barrels per day, and many of the largest oil companies in the country are making further development and exploring new fields. In addition to this great oil development, the production of gas in the county amounts to about 350,000,000 cubic feet daily. There was no oil production in Garvin County prior to July, 1921. There is oil production and many wells going down in the other counties which adjoin or are near to Garvin County.

I mention these facts for the reason, as the committee knows, oil and gas development bring increased litigation, and much of it is in the Federal courts. Litigants have their right to have their cases tried and settlement made at convenient places. The people have the right to have their Government brought as near to them as possible, and it should always be done, and especially when it brings no increased burdens in the way of expenses.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I was raised from early boyhood to manhood in Garvin County, Okla., the county in which I am asking this court to be established, and know the people and the conditions of the country. This county and the other counties I have mentioned contain an intelligent, educated, Christian, industrious, and progressive citizenship. Garvin County is traversed from east to west by the famous Washita River, whose large and beautiful valley is as rich as the fabled valley of the fertile Nile. The same can be said of the Rush Creek and Wild Horse Valleys. In 1919 the people of Garvin County voted bonds upon themselves in the sum of $150,000 to build a courthouse, and it is one of the best in the entire State. It is large, sanitary, commodious, and convenient. It has ample room to accommodate the Federal court when in session in Pauls Valley. It has private rooms for the judge, two large and excellent court rooms, plenty of room for grand and petit juries and witnesses. The county commissioners of the county, who have charge of the courthouse, would be glad to give the Federal court the use of this fine courthouse at any time, and it would not interfere in the least with the work of the State courts or other county activities.

The courthouse is situated in a part of Pauls Valley where there is the least noise and there would be nothing to in any way interfere with the court or any of its officers. Then there would be no question of additional expense to the Government, for it would cost the county no more to maintain the building when Federal court was in session than it costs at other times. It would be no trouble or inconvenience for the judge, clerk, and other court attaches to go to Pauls Valley for court. There is already a United States deputy marshal stationed in Pauls Valley and a United States commissioner. By establishing this court the committee and Congress would be adding no additional expense to the Government, but, on the other hand, would be reducing expenses to the Government and to the people as well. Where else is an elegant and conveniently equipped courthouse furnished for the Federal court without additional cost? These people are progressive and will furnish these conveniences for the benefit of the people who attend court at this place if the committee will consent to the establishment of this court.

In addition to what I have already said, you would be making court more convenient to a large territory and to many people. This courthouse is four stories high, with a fine jail on top. There is every facility in Pauls Valley for the court and the officers. The county is thickly populated, as are the other surrounding counties. Pauls Valley, situated in the Washita River Valley, is one of the most beautiful cities on that historic river, and Garvin County has many other live, progressive cities and villages.

I make mention of these towns that the committee may know that this section of the State is populated with many people, and where there are many people there will be disputes to settle. The same is true in the other counties which would be benefited by the passage of this bill. There would be McClain County, of which Purcell is the county seat, on the north; Murray County, Sulphur county seat, on the south; Pontotoc County, Ada county seat, on the east; and Seminole County, Wewoka county seat, on the northeast. All these counties have litigation in the Federal court.

For six years I had the honor to serve as district judge in the fourteenth judicial district of Oklahoma, which district included Murray, Garvin, McClain, and Cleveland Counties, and am therefore familiar with conditions in the eastern district. In this district the Federal Government is a party to about 75 per cent of the cases filed.

The Government employs three tribal attorneys, one each for the Choctaws, Chickasaws, and Creeks, and eight probate attorneys in addition. It is the duty of these attorneys to look after the affairs of certain members of the tribes in the State and Federal courts and to assist in protecting the rights of these Indian litigants. No such condition exists in any other State so far as the laws are concerned, and no judge is called upon to construe as many difficult questions. In the trial of Indian land cases the court must not only construe the State statutes and acts of Congress affecting these tribes but in many instances it becomes necessary to construe various Indian treaties and often the statutes of the State of Arkansas, as the laws of that State were formerly extended over the Indian Territory.

With seven court towns and two judges, it is important for the eastern district that each judge have four places to hold court. It is no inconvenience to the judge and is a great convenience to the people who pay the expenses of the court. Why not report the bill favorably, when it will cost the Government nothing, can cost it nothing, but will decrease the expenses of the Federal court in this district? I earnestly and sincerely submit the facts, and know the committee will give this their usual careful consideration; and I hope that you will make a favorable report and recommend that the bill pass.

Mr. HICKEY. Have you court facilities at this point you mention?

Mr. SWANK. Yes; and I am asking that two terms each year of the Federal district court be held at Pauls Valley, Okla., in the eastern district. That is the old Indian Territory part of the State, and in this district there are seven court towns.

Mr. BIRD. Do you mean State courts?

Mr. SWANK. No; Federal district courts. State district courts are held in each county seat.

Mr. BIRD. You do not mean to say that in the Eastern District of Oklahoma a term of the Federal court is held at seven places?

Mr. SWANK. Yes; at seven different places.

Mr. HICKEY. Is your State divided into divisions as well as districts?

Mr. SWANK. No; there are two districts, the eastern and western.

Mr. HICKEY. And for the convenience of litigants and counsel, they have different places for holding court?

Mr. SWANK. Yes; at the present time there are seven places for holding court, and if this bill were passed there would be eight. That would be four places for each judge, when a new judge is appointed.

Mr. YATES. That is what this bill is for—to provide four places for holding court for each judge?

Mr. SWANK. Yes; and the bill provides that two terms of the Federal district court shall be held each year at this place.

Mr. BIRD. You mention eight places for holding court if this bill were enacted. Do you mean eight for the entire State?

Mr. SWANK. No; eight for the eastern district.

Mr. BIRD. If you should have two judges, that would make four places for each judge.

Mr. SWANK. Yes.

Mr. YATES. You ask for two terms of court at this place each year?

Mr. SWANK. Yes, sir.

Mr. YATES. The bill provides that two terms of court shall be held each year at Pauls Valley; is one term a year held there now?

Mr. SWANK. No, sir; this is not a Federal court town.

Mr. BOIES. How large a place is it?

Mr. SWANK. Pauls Valley has a population of about 5,000 people.

Mr. BOIES. What is the population of Oklahoma now?

Mr. SWANK. The population of the entire State is about two and a quarter millions.

Mr. BOIES. I never heard of terms of Federal court being held in as many places as that.

Mr. SWANK. In the western district of Oklahoma terms of Federal court are held in Oklahoma City, Guthrie, Enid, Lawton, and Woodward.

Mr. YATES. At how many places do they hold court in the western district?

Mr. SWANK. At five places.

Mr. BOIES. What is the nearest place to this town at which a term of court is held?

Mr. SWANK. About 50 miles.

Mr. BOIES. How many judges do you have now?

Mr. SWANK. Two Federal judges at the present time.

Mr. BOIES. How many criminal cases are pending there?

Mr. SWANK. The statement of the clerk shows 1,311 in the eastern district.

Mr. HICKEY. I suppose you have a great many oil claims that go into the Federal courts?

Mr. SWANK. Yes; Oklahoma produces more oil than any other State in the Union.

Mr. BIRD. What is the oil production in the five counties that would be affected by this bill?

Mr. SWANK. There are more than 31,000 barrels per day produced in this one county. They brought in a well a few days ago in Garvin County that produces 14,000 barrels a day.

Mr. YATES. What do you contend that these statements you have referred to show in regard to Federal court business?

Mr. SWANK. The statements show that in the eastern district of Oklahoma, on June 30, 1919, there were pending 1,883 civil cases and 696 criminal cases. The statement shows the present condition of the docket to be 1,311 criminal cases and 1,361 civil cases.

Mr. YATES. In the entire district?

Mr. SWANK. Yes; for the whole district; and, as I stated in the beginning, if this bill were enacted four places would be provided for each one of these judges to hold court when the other judge is appointed.

Mr. YATES. How much of a docket do you figure this out to be?

Mr. SWANK. The statement of the clerk shows the docket for the five counties affected.

Mr. YATES. Suppose this bill should pass and there should be two terms of court held at this place, have you figured out how large the docket would be?

Mr. SWANK. Yes; the statement of the clerk shows the cases filed in the five counties referred to—Garvin, McClain, Murray, Pontotoc, and Seminole—to be as follows: Law, 10; equity, 7; bankruptcy, 40; criminal, 70; or a total of 127 cases.

Mr. BIRD. I would like to go back to the oil question. What are the oil fields in those five counties?

Mr. SWANK. There is oil production in Seminole and Pontotoc Counties, and in Garvin County, where I am asking this court to be established, there is the Robberson oil field, which produces about 21,000 barrels of oil per day.

Mr. BIRD. That is from one well, is it not?

Mr. SWANK. No; the big well produces about 14,000 barrels per day. That is a new well. This field did not have any big wells up to that time. This field in Garvin County is also producing about 350,000,000 cubic feet of gas daily. You understand that when they strike an oil field, that causes much new litigation, especially in connection with Indian lands.

Mr. BIRD. I am trying to determine whether you have a permanent field or whether you are opening up a new field.

Mr. SWANK. This is a new field.

Mr. BIRD. This is fresh production?

Mr. SWANK. Yes; there was no oil in this county prior to July, 1921. Now this new well has opened up a big pool.

Mr. BIRD. There is one pool there, and then there are scattering wells in the other part of the field?

Mr. SWANK. In this county there are a great number of wells, and more are going down all the time. In the counties to the east there are many producing wells.

Mr. BIRD. Are they shallow wells or deep wells?

Mr. SWANK. It is what is considered a shallow field. I understand the big well mentioned is 1,400 or 1,500 feet deep.

Mr. BIRD. What does the present Federal judge say about this?

Mr. SWANK. I do not know, but do not think he will oppose the bill.

Mr. YATES. You are familiar with these five counties?

Mr. SWANK. Yes, sir.

Mr. YATES. Are they in your district?

Mr. SWANK. Three of them are.

Mr. YATES. Have you had any conference or consultation with the Department of Justice in regard to this matter?

Mr. SWANK. No, sir.

Mr. YATES. With the Attorney General or Assistant Attorney General?

Mr. SWANK. No, sir.

Mr. BOIES. What are the railroad facilities at this place?

Mr. SWANK. Good; there is the main line of the Santa Fe and two branch lines in Pauls Valley.

Mr. BOIES. Where are the main headquarters for the Federal court?

Mr. SWANK. The headquarters of the Federal court for the eastern district are at Muskogee.

Mr. BOIES. What are the railroad facilities from this town to Muskogee?

Mr. SWANK. The railroad facilities from Muskogee to Pauls Valley are good. You go direct from Muskogee to Oklahoma City and then on to Pauls Valley, which is nearer Muskogee than is Ardmore and 50 miles nearer than Chickasha. The judge must go from Muskogee to Chickasha to hold court, and that takes him 50 miles farther than Pauls Valley.

Mr. BIRD. Do you contemplate that Chickasha will still have a term of court?

Mr. SWANK. Yes; I am asking for one additional place.

Mr. YATES. I confess that the stumbling block to me is the fact that there are so many places for holding court in this district. The district in which I reside has over a million population, and terms of court are held in only three places—Springfield, Peoria, and Quincy. I realize, however, that in the western territory there are always more places at which terms of court are held.

Mr. SWANK. There are many more cases to try in this district and it covers more territory. Then a great number of the cases are more complicated than in other districts.

Mr. HICKEY. You have a class of litigation that we would not have.

Mr. SWANK. Yes.

Mr. YATES. Is it customary in western districts to have five, six, or seven places at which court is held?

Mr. SWANK. There are more places for holding court by reason of the larger territory included in the districts and the greater number of cases.

Mr. BIRD. There are five places for holding court in the entire State of Kansas.

Mr. YATES. How is it in your district, Mr. Boies?

Mr. BOIES. There are five places for holding court in the northern half of Iowa.

Mr. SWANK. There would not be nearly so many cases as in this district.

Mr. BOIES. I do not think the number of cases cuts much figure. It is a question of the convenience of the people.

Mr. SWANK. Yes; it is a question of convenience to the people, and the number of cases show that the court is needed. That is why a State district court is established at each county seat.

Mr. BOIES. Those places at which terms of court are now held are only 50 miles apart.

Mr. SWANK. Pauls Valley, where I am asking a Federal court to be established, is about 50 miles from the nearest place where Federal court is held.

Mr. BOIES. You would divide the territory so that the places at which terms of court would be held would be 25 miles apart?

Mr. SWANK. The nearest Federal court town would be about 50 miles from Pauls Valley. The enactment of this bill would not only be a great convenience to the people in this part of the State but would cost the Government nothing.

Mr. BOIES. It might not cost anything just now, but at any time the county felt disposed to charge them, it could do so.

Mr. SWANK. But this county would not make any charge. I believe this statement covers the proposition unless some member of the committee desires to ask further questions which I shall gladly answer.

Mr. YATES. I would like to have some statement from the Department of Justice in regard to this.

Mr. BOIES. I think we should have a statement from the Department of Justice and also from the Federal judge out there.

Mr. BIRD. Yes; the Federal judge should be consulted about it.

Mr. SWANK. The reason I did not ask the Department of Justice for an opinion upon the bill was because I preferred to have the chairman of the committee ask for it. I wish to thank the committee for your patient hearing.

Thereupon the subcommittee adjourned.

APPRAISEMENT OF TRIBAL PROPERTY OF INDIANS.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution (H. Res. 490) and report (No. 1527) from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas submits a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Kansas yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] know that this will be called up?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 490.

Resolved, That immediately on the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 13835, "A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to appraise tribal property of Indians, and for other purposes." General debate on said bill shall be limited to two hours, one-half to be controlled by those in favor of the bill and one-half by those opposed. At the conclusion of the debate the bill shall be read for amendment, after which it shall be reported to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommitt.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order what is known as the omnibus Indian legislative bill. A large number of matters have accumulated before the Committee on Indian Affairs growing out of the Indian Service, making it desirable to bring the laws down to the moment. I understand the report on the several items in the bill has practically the unanimous support of the committee. Some members of the committee, however, are opposed to certain items in the bill. At this time I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CHANDLER], who is opposed to certain items in the bill, be permitted to control the time in opposition. I understand there is no member on the Committee on Indian Affairs who is opposed to the bill.

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. SWANK. I am a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I oppose that part of the bill relating to the Osage Indians.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is the matter that the other gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CHANDLER] is opposed to?

Mr. SWANK. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Then, of course, I withdraw my request, Mr. Speaker, and suggest that the member of the committee control the time in opposition to the bill and make such division of the time as the circumstances may require.

Mr. Speaker, I think there is nothing further that I care to say, and I ask for a vote on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13835.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13835.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The gentleman from Alabama makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 267 Members have answered to their names.

Mr. MONDELL. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

OMNIBUS INDIAN LEGISLATION.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering H. R. 13835, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to appraise tribal property of Indians, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 13835, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, when the War Department appropriation bill was under consideration by the House a few days ago, I made some remarks on the Muscle Shoals project in the course of which I stated that I had taken it upon myself to make a study of the proposition so that I might be equipped to give you the benefit of such facts as my investigation might bring to light when the House was prepared to consider the question of policy to be pursued with respect to that venture.

Our late beloved colleague, Mr. Mann, was deeply interested in the Muscle Shoals project, and was making a study of it for the benefit of the House when he was so suddenly called from our midst. It is very much to be regretted that we are deprived of the valuable contribution that he would have made to the solution of the problem. I have earnestly endeavored, however, to fulfill the promise that Mr. Mann made to develop the facts for you. Of course, as you all know, his interest was aroused by his brother, Mr. Frank I. Mann, an acknowledged expert in this country on soil and farms. I will digress long enough to read a paragraph from a letter written to our late colleague by his brother, which was printed in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 29, 1920. He said:

If there is any possible and fair way to provide that the Muscle Shoals power might be used for fixing nitrogen, and that it might be obtained cheaply for farm use, it would be a wonderful step in the production of cheaper food and help to quiet the unrest of the present and future.

I have no interest in the matter one way or another except to see that we decide upon that course which will be of the greatest benefit to the country as a whole, and in the investigation I have made of the matter my aim has been to develop the facts with that sole object in view. That has been my single thought and purpose, and that must be your single thought and purpose in arriving at your decision, because the undertaking inherently is a national one, conceived first the better to provide for our national defense by enabling us to produce within our own borders all ingredients essential to the manufacture of explosives and, secondly, to make available to the American farmer an abundant and less costly supply of a kind of plant food necessary to be added or restored to the soil to promote food production.

I can recall of no other matters which would in a greater degree be so far-reaching in their effect. And, therefore, I say to you that we must dispose of this matter not as one that benefits any particular class of people or any particular section of the country, but as one which either directly or indirectly reaches out to every soul in every village, town, and countryside of the Republic.

If it be the intention to use Muscle Shoals for the purposes for which its commencement was authorized, and since the Congress has not declared any other policy, we must assume that to be the case, the solution of the question becomes comparatively simple. It would seem to resolve itself into determining whether it would be more economical for the Government to complete, maintain, and operate the project or whether it would be a better business policy to turn the entire venture over to private interests with proper and adequate guaranties for the fulfillment of the Government's needs in time of war and of the continual needs of the American farmer for an adequate and less costly supply of fertilizer possessing a proper nitrogen content. The ascertainment of which of these courses it would be the wiser to adopt is further simplified by the fact that but one proposal worthy of our attention thus far has been submitted by any outside interest. I refer to the offer of Mr. Henry Ford, which he delivered to the Secretary of War on January 27, 1922.

The question of disposing of the Muscle Shoals project to private interests is not a new one. As far back as the summer of 1919 the nitrate director of the War Department, Mr. A. G. Glasgow, endeavored to interest private capital in the venture. The success which attended his efforts is well summarized in the statement made by the acting director, Mr. George J. Roberts, before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in March, 1920. Let me read you what he said:

The question naturally arises: "Why does not private industry undertake the operation of these plants?" I shall not attempt to give what is in the minds of those who are most interested in the production of nitrates in this country. All I can state is that months of time were expended attempting to get the fertilizer industry interested in taking over and operating the Government plants. The presidents of all the larger fertilizer companies in the United States were seen and the matter fully discussed with them, and they were asked if they would undertake the operation of these plants if they were to pay no rental to the Government until they had received 9 per cent on their working capital, and after that the profit should be divided between them and the Government. A part of the agreement was that the United States would complete the plants so as to provide storage and bagging facilities, a sulphate of ammonia plant, and all the work outlined in Mr. Glasgow's letter of October 22. But they could not be brought to the point of making a formal offer. An effort was also made to get certain financiers in New York to undertake to form a company to operate these plants. Scant consideration was given to the scheme and no investigation undertaken. An appeal was likewise made to the coke-oven interests, with the same result. There seems to be a decided antipathy of capital to engage in any partnership arrangement with the Government.

The efforts to arouse private capital did not stop there, however. Very early after the advent of the present administration the Chief of Engineers of the Army, at the direction of the Secretary of War, sent out a formal invitation for offers to all private parties whom he thought would be interested, proposing, I might add, that the United States would complete the dam and hydraulic-power plant at Muscle Shoals. General Beach subsequently stated that he gave as wide publicity to this invitation as was possible and that Mr. Ford submitted what he considered the only genuine offer. And that holds true to-day. So, as between Government and private operation our problem is to analyze and draw our conclusions from the figures available to us as to whether the Government should continue at Muscle Shoals or accept the Ford offer.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield before he goes into that?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think I ought to yield. I think I ought to make this statement in consecutive form. I had rather not yield now, if the gentleman does not mind. I shall endeavor to give you the figures as clearly and concisely as I possibly can. I have devoted a great deal of time in gathering them for you and I feel that they may be relied upon as accurate—

Investment to June 30, 1922.

Construction cost:
Nitrate plant No. 1	$12,887,941
Nitrate plant No. 2 (including $1,302,962.88 on account of Waco Quarry)	67,555,355
Gorgas-Warrior plant and transmission line	4,979,782
Dam No. 2 (Wilson Dam) (including commitments under contracts)	16,281,760
	$101,704,838
Maintenance cost (including experimental operations at nitrate plants and research laboratory):
Dam No. 2	277,577
Nitrate plants:
No. 1	$907,966
No. 2	3,613,771
	4,521,737
Research laboratory	833,558
	5,355,295

These figures sum up to----- 107,337,710

and represent our total outlay or investment to June 30, 1922.

Now what do we have or what are we able to accomplish at this time?

1. Dam No. 2—Wilson Dam—is incomplete and Dam No. 3 has not even been started. So we have no water power.

2. Nitrate plant No. 1, originally designed to produce 9,000 tons of fixed nitrogen in the form of ammonium nitrate, employing a modification of the Haber process, has been completed only up to one-fourth of its capacity; was purely an experimental venture, and up to this time has not proven successful. The experiment has cost $12,887,941, and an additional outlay for new machinery costing in the neighborhood of $2,000,000 would be necessary if further experiments are to be undertaken. Furthermore, the employment of this method is fraught with great danger from explosion of the high-pressure tanks in which nitrogen and hydrogen are impounded. To put the plant on a production basis employing the latest approved methods, would cost approximately another $4,000,000.

3. Nitrate plant No. 2, employing the cyanamid process, has been completed to its designed capacity of 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen in the form of ammonium nitrate, and was operated successfully during a two-weeks trial run, but the cyanamid process is considered by the experts to be obsolete as a fertilizer process, which most probably will make it necessary to replace the machinery and to some extent the buildings.

That is a rather doleful picture after an expenditure of $107,000,000, but if you will take the time to delve into the mass of data bearing on the subject you will find that I have given you the actual facts. Now, having gone this far, what is the best way out? We have an obligation to discharge to the American people. We are responsible for there having been used well over $100,000,000 of their money and they expect and we owe them a proper return on it. Shall we go on in the face of what we have experienced and make renewed efforts to make a go of the thing ourselves, irrespective of what the ultimate cost might be? Let us examine carefully what this course would quite certainly mean.

In the first place we would have to complete the Wilson Dam (Dam No. 2), estimated to cost from June 30, 1922, an additional $25,000,000. And then, to make up for the defects or shortcomings of the present layout, so as to put the plants on a going basis that fertilizer of a suitable type, in adequate quantities and marketable at a reasonable price may be produced and that facilities at all times may be available for the manufacture of explosives and other war materials, we would find it necessary to appropriate approximately these additional sums:

1. Auxiliary or reserve water supply to stabilize the flow of the Tennessee River that a uniform amount of power would be available the year around	$20,000,000
2. For remodeling nitrate plant No. 1	4,000,000
3. For remodeling nitrate plant No. 2	10,000,000
4. For a phosphoric acid plant to meet the demand for a mixed fertilizer	15,000,000
5. Operating fund	10,000,000
Total	59,000,000

These make a total of $59,000,000. Add to that the $25,000,000 to complete the Wilson Dam and the $107,000,000 already invested and our total outlay will have amounted to $191,000,000. In other words, we will have to sink another $84,000,000 into the venture before we can function on an economical business basis, excluding, of course, let me emphasize, any return whatever on the investment. I seriously doubt if under Government operation we could even include in the selling price of the fertilizer other usual items of overhead and keep the price at a figure which the farmer could afford to pay. What is the alternative? We can not stop. We owe it to the Nation to see the thing through.

The farmer needs nitrates, and the very life of the Nation may at some time hinge upon our ability to supply this necessary munitions ingredient to the Army and Navy. The answer is to go ahead at all hazards, or, I should say, in spite of all hazards, or to let private enterprise step in and do the job for us.

Now, let us see what private enterprise has to offer. I refer to the Ford offer.

In the first place we must put up another $50,000,000, dating from June 30, 1922, to complete the Wilson Dam and to build Dam No. 3, to be located about 15 miles upstream from Dam No. 2, the work on both dams to be prosecuted by Mr. Ford at actual cost. That would end the demands upon the Federal Treasury. We would then have invested $157,000,000, instead of the $191,000,000 that would be necessary if the Government should determine to finish and operate the plants, and, of course, it should be borne in mind that the $191,000,000 does not include any money whatever for Dam No. 3, estimated to cost $25,000,000.

Having provided the money for the two dams, to complete one and to build in its entirety another, Mr. Ford then agrees—

First. To operate nitrate plant No. 2 in the manufacture of nitrates at its full present capacity, namely, 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen per annum, for a period of 100 years.

Second. To maintain nitrate plant No. 2 at all times in efficient modernized operating condition for the use of the Government in time of war.

Third. To provide fertilizer to the full capacity of nitrate plant No. 2, with profit, if any, limited to 8 per cent above the fair actual cost of production.

Fourth. To supply such quantity of fertilizers, mixed or unmixed. An agreement to furnish mixed fertilizer composed of nitrogen, phosphoric acid, and potash will necessitate the erection by Mr. Ford at his own expense of a phosphoric acid plant at Muscle Shoals, estimated to cost $15,000,000, which the Government would have to do if we should decide to operate ourselves.

Fifth. To research fertilizer production and to employ such improved methods as may be found successful.

Sixth. That the capital of $10,000,000 of the company to be formed shall be liable for the fulfillment of the contract, backed up—please note this—by Mr. Ford's entire personal estate and that of his heirs and assigns.

I do not think any of you entertain any question but that the purposes for which the undertaking was authorized will be entirely fulfilled under this offer, and I think you will all agree that the guaranties are wholly adequate. So assuming, I will now address myself to the consideration proposed by Mr. Ford.

In the first place, he offers to purchase nitrate plant No. 1, nitrate plant No. 2, the Waco Quarry and transmission line, and the Gorgas-Warrior power plant for $5,000,000 in cash, and agrees to valuable contract obligations. Let us analyze this for a moment. I have already told you of the contract obligations. We have invested in these four units $85,423,073, but, as I have shown you, they are practically valueless unless we sink another $84,000,000 into the entire venture, or $109,000,000 if, under Government control, it should be decided to build Dam No. 3; and I do not think there is any question but that this dam must not only be built but an auxiliary water flow provided besides, if sufficient power is to be generated at all times to make it possible to meet the demand for fertilizer. If this be true as to Government operation, it applies with equal force to Mr. Ford. He will incur no immediate expense on account of the dams, but he will have to put out $59,000,000 to get the plants on a going basis, the same as the Government would have to do. So he is not getting such a wonderful bargain after all. He agrees to pay $5,000,000 for what we have paid $85,000,000, but to use which he will have to expend another $59,000,000; and we must not forget that the $85,000,000 represents Government construction costs, and war-time costs at that.

That disposes of everything but the dams. To June 30, 1922, we had invested in the Wilson Dam, including maintenance costs, $16,559,337. Under Mr. Ford's offer we must commit ourselves to a further outlay for the Wilson Dam and Dam No. 3 of $50,000,000. Let us see what his proposition is as to these. After their completion, which he is to do, he agrees to lease the water power derived therefrom for a period of 100 years on the following terms:

1. To maintain at his own expense the power houses and all equipment incident thereto, returning the same at the end of the lease unimpaired.

2. To pay $35,000 annually for repairs, maintenance, and operation of Dam No. 2, its gates and locks, and $20,000 per annum for repairs, maintenance, and operation of Dam No. 3, its gates and locks, during the life of the lease. The sum of $55,000 has been estimated as sufficient for these purposes.

3. To pay $200,000 annually as rental for the first six years on Dam No. 2, and thereafter during the life of the lease 4 per cent interest on the sum necessary to be expended for the completion of said dam, power house, and machinery, and for completing the acquiring of lands and flowage rights.

4. To pay as rental for Dam No. 3, $160,000 per annum for the first three years, and thereafter 4 per cent interest on the entire cost of constructing said dam, power house, and machinery, including cost of lands and flowage rights.

5. To establish a sinking fund by the semiannual payment of $23,373, which sum, if compounded at 4 per cent semiannually, will amount to $49,071,935 at the end of the lease, and if compounded at 4½ per cent interest will amount at the end of the lease to $58,570,003. It has been claimed, and it is probably true, that this fund could be handled by the Federal reserve banks to accomplish this result, and practically without expense.

6. To furnish free 200 horsepower for operating locks at Dam No. 2 and 100 horsepower for operating locks at Dam No. 3. This would save the Government the cost of operating the locks on the Muscle Shoals Canal, estimated to range from $35,000 to $85,000 per annum.

When you analyze it, that is not a bad proposition at all. For a period of 100 years the Government is freed of any expense in connection with these dams, locks, and power houses and machinery, it receives a fairly substantial return on approximately two-thirds of its investment in the dams, and in the end has repaid to it practically the whole of such investment. And gentlemen, remember, that throughout that period the farmer will have been getting his fertilizer and the Government will have had at its disposal a plant fully and modernly equipped and ready to produce explosives and other war materials.

The Government will have been freed from all the hazards attendant upon such a vast enterprise, it will have been saved the expense of research and experimentation, and the burden will have fallen upon others to keep these plants equipped to conform with the march of progress.

Now, it is not my purpose to urge you to align yourselves on one side or the other of this proposition. I have striven to give you the plain unvarnished facts as I have found them so that you might be the better equipped to determine the matter for yourselves. It is a business proposition with me, purely and simply. I feel that we owe it to the taxpayer, to the farmer, and to the Nation to finish the undertaking and get it into operation at the earliest date practicable, and, so believing, my chief aim has been to get for you the facts so that you would be the better able to determine upon that course which will work out to the greatest advantage of the Federal Treasury, not just at this time, but throughout the years. I have no concern, if we choose to let others act for us, as to who they are, what section they hail from, or what their politics may be, other than to be certain that their past business record is beyond reproach and that satisfactory guaranties are given. I am perfectly frank to say that I know of no person or group of persons who have demonstrated a bigger capacity to handle a large undertaking of this character than Mr. Ford. [Applause.] Therefore, gentlemen, it resolves itself into just this: Do you wish to sink another $109,000,000 into this Muscle Shoals project, in the light of your experience thus far, to incur all the hazards incident to the conduct of the business, to commit the Government to the continual expense of upkeep of such a vast project, a large portion of which has only potential value, and to the expense of keeping the entire plant in a modern productive state, or do you think the wiser course would be to accept Mr. Ford's offer, put only enough additional in the venture to complete both dams, and sell and lease under the terms that he has proposed? My own conviction is that we should accept the Ford offer and get out of the business. [Applause.] I feel that by so doing we will have acted so as better to provide for the common defense and for the promotion of the general welfare. [Applause.]

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be recognized and yield to myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this bill, H. R. 13835, is a compilation of a number of bills which have been presented to the House and which have come from the Senate to the Committee on Indian Affairs. Each of these bills has been carefully investigated. Some of them have been in the hands of the committee for many months, and extensive hearings have been held upon them. Every item in the bill has been presented to the House by unanimous vote of the committee, so that, barring perhaps a few amendments which may be offered on the floor, every item in the bill is before you as I state, by the unanimous vote of the committee.

The reason for a bill of this character is that under the old rule these items were carried largely in the appropriation bills presented to the House by the Committee on Indian Affairs. Of course under the new rule that can not be done. That has made it necessary for us as a committee to adopt this policy, because of the fact that the Bureau of Indian Affairs, connected with the Interior Department, is practically a government within a government. It embodies nearly every activity of a government, everything I think except the Army and Navy. There are a great many different Indian reservations. There are a great many different conditions peculiar to particular reservations, so that a general law can very rarely be enacted that would be equitable or right for all the reservations alike. So, on account of the bureau having so many activities, it becomes necessary to have legislation affecting this department and that department as it applies to the general functions of the bureau itself.

The bill carries 19 different propositions, and there are scarcely any two of them that have reference to the same reservation or the same tribe of Indians.

It is not my intention to attempt to explain the bill in detail in general debate, but I will be liberal with explanations and liberal with the disposition of time under the five-minute rule. There are but one or two contentious points in the bill, and I think those have been cleared up since the bill came on the floor.

I have been connected with the Committee on Indian Affairs for about eight years, and it is to me a singular thing to observe how little information many of the Members of the House have with reference to Indian matters. I think this committee, of which I have the honor to be chairman at the present moment, has about as many difficult legislative problems to solve as any committee of this House.

We have before us now, and are investigating legislation which will perhaps come before the House later with reference to the Pueblo land titles, of which the House has heard so much in the way of propaganda. It has been generally understood by the public that the bills which have been presented to the House are against the interests of the Pueblo Indians themselves. I want to say to this House that, so far as the bill that bears my name is concerned, there is nothing in it that would be to the disadvantage of the Pueblo Indians, but everything in it that would be favorable and to their advantage.

Mr. WATSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. I see by this bill that the Secretary of the Interior is to decide these matters, and I would like to ask the gentleman if the Indian has any right of appeal?

Mr. SNYDER. No; there is no appeal. He has no right of appeal; under the present law the Indian is declared incompetent and can only be declared competent by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Certainly.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The first section of this bill provides for an appraisement of the value of the lands, timber, moneys, and other property of the Indian tribes, except the Five Civilized Tribes and the Osage Tribe in Oklahoma—does that include any of the disputed questions relating to the property of the Pueblo Indians?

Mr. SNYDER. None whatever. The Pueblo Indians are entirely a different type of ward than the others.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The section is general in its terms.

Mr. SNYDER. Yes; but we have no control over the Pueblos in that way. The Pueblo Indians have never been declared competent or incompetent. The titles are so involved and to such an extent that it makes this legislation absolutely necessary, and until it is cleared up nothing of that sort could take place.

The first section of the bill deals with the desire on the part of Congress to get rid eventually and entirely of the Indian here and there. For instance, in the Chippewa country there are about 12,000 Indians. They have something like $5,000,000 on deposit paying 5 per cent interest.

There are many Indians on the road who are participants in this fund and who receive their share of interest in this fund and who are as competent, probably, as any man in the House, and he may live in Kansas City or New York. It is impossible under the present law to divide up the tribal property in such a way that the Indian can be paid off and get his money and be discharged as a ward of the Government. What this proposes to do is to fix it so that when the Indian wants to become a citizen he can have the value of the property in which he is a participant appraised, his share paid to him, and leave the tribe and become an American citizen. There is no law to-day which permits that to be done. I have been trying ever since I have been a member of the committee to get out from under Government control as many of these Indians as it is possible. It is the first real proposition of that character that we have had that will permit it to be done.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I will.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I think the first part of the bill is absolutely correct in principle; but there is one provision which will be found on top of page 3, lines 1 to 6, which I do not believe ought to be enacted into law. That is this:

That any Indian who may be paid the amount of his pro rata share of the tribal properties as herein provided shall thereafter have no further interest in or claim upon the tribal property or funds of the tribe of which he is a member, and be required to sign an agreement in writing to this effect, and shall be dropped from the rolls of said tribe.

Now, it seems to me that this provision is too broad. I think that all the Indians should be required to do is to release all claim to the particular property involved, but here you have a clause which compels him in order to take his pro rata share of the distribution to give up his claim upon the tribal property or funds of the tribes which may come into its possession in the future.

Mr. SNYDER. That is the point exactly, that the property of the tribes shall be assessed and divided into equal parts for these participants, and those who desire to become citizens shall take their proportion and get out of the tribe entirely for the present and the future.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Let me say that at the present time there is pending in the Court of Claims, or will be in the near future, a suit involving the validity of the treaty by which the Indians conveyed the Black Hills, in South Dakota, to the United States Government. That suit will involve hundreds of millions of dollars. If a member of the Sioux Tribe of Indians in my State takes his share under this proposed law and signs an agreement, he will be cut out from receiving any benefit from this suit—

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman overlooks the fact that there is no compulsion on the Indian. He does not have to take it; he comes of his own volition and requests to have his share paid to him.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. No matter how competent he may be, he must leave his pro rata share in the Federal Treasury, under the law, or forfeit all interest in the Black Hills claim. It is all right for him to sign away his interest in the property of the tribe appraised, but I do not think he ought to sign away his future rights, which are of a character that do not admit of appraisement.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. I want to interpose a suggestion to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON] that no doubt the appraisers, if a suit was pending or about to be begun, as he suggests, would take that into consideration, and I doubt very seriously whether, under the provisions of this bill, a distribution could be made until some definite determination was made of the suit, and the gentleman will also observe that under the provisions of the bill the Indian is not required to accept settlement until fully satisfied, so that I see no possibility, if you take the act as a whole, of the Indian being injured in the least.

Mr. SNYDER. Of course, this section may not be perfect, but it is a move in the right direction. We find it very difficult to get Indians into the frame of mind where they want to become citizens. The quickest way to get them into that frame of mind is to show them some property of value that they can get by reason of becoming a citizen, and there is no reason why these funds should be kept from an individual who has demonstrated his competency. If he has $500 or $1,000 or $2,000 that might be his, if he be permitted to get it, he might be using it to the advantage of the country, whereas locked up as it is now, all he will ever get from it is a little annuity of $15 or $16 a year from the interest.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. ROACH. It has been suggested by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. LEATHERWOOD], I believe, that under the provisions of this section as written it would become the duty of the appraisers to appraise not only the tangible but the intangible property—in fact, all of the tribal property—including any suits that may be pending for their interests, but take it on page 3, line 5, and I do not believe there could be any objection to limiting that to the property actually appraised by the appraisers. That is the real spirit and intention of the law.

Mr. SNYDER. I would see no objection to that myself. To proceed where I left off with the Pueblo matter, I want to get before the House a little information in regard to that. A tremendous propaganda has been carried on throughout the country. There has been nothing like it in Indian affairs, so far as I know. I received, in three days, 250 telegrams stating that the senders were absolutely opposed to the so-called Bursum-Snyder bill and in favor of the Leatherwood-Jones bill. It is a fact, of course, that most of these people, perhaps 95 per cent of them, know absolutely nothing about the merits of those bills, but the consensus of opinion of those who do not know is that it is a measure to take something away from the Pueblo that he now has.

The facts are that there is no such intention upon the part of any bill. What the bill proposes to do is this: There is difficulty about the titles. Land has been squatted on, lands have passed to white people by deeds that have no color of title, and also by deeds that apparently have good title, and what we are proposing to do is to straighten the matter out, and if the Pueblo has had anything taken away from him, as a tribe, and they all operate as a tribe, it is the intention to pay that back to the Pueblos either in kind or in money value equal to that which was taken away from them in the beginning. That is all that any bill that I know of proposes to do, except that the Leatherwood bill proposes to start some new irrigation schemes out there. Yesterday the principal witness for the Pueblos was on the stand, and I put the question to him, "Can you point out anywhere in this bill bearing my name any section that proposes to take anything away from any Pueblo Indian that he now has?" and to that question nothing but an evasive answer could be obtained. Three times I put the question to him, and he was unable to show anything, and I am getting this into the Record now so that it can be clearly shown that in that bill there is nothing proposing to take anything away from the Pueblo that he now has.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is not one of the most controverted questions whether the rights of these Pueblo Indians shall be determined by existing judicial machinery or by a new court that is proposed to be established?

Mr. SNYDER. That is one of the things that is proposed, but that is not the principal thing.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. May not that be a very important and a principal question?

Mr. SNYDER. That might easily be the foundation for the whole thing.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. As the gentleman knows, I have been away and have just gotten back. I have not read the bill. The dangerous thing that I saw in one bill, I do not remember which it was—there has been so much propaganda about this that a man could not keep it all in his head—the one thing that seemed to me to be dangerous in one of the bills was that it made adverse possession of one day give a color of title. I understand that is eliminated from the gentleman's bill.

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. That was a dangerous thing, of course.

Mr. SNYDER. Of course I do not know what was in the Bursum bill. We never had that before our committee, but I do know that there was nothing in the bill that bore my name that would take a thing or an inch of property away from the Pueblos or anything of value that I know of that he now has.

Mr. CARTER. Of course, the gentleman is very familiar with the Pueblo people, because he made a trip among them. The lands that are valuable to the Pueblos are the lands adjacent to their little villages.

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. They live in villages, in houses something like apartment houses. They will not live any other place. Each village is a separate community, a separate tribe. The only land that is of real value to the Pueblo Indians is that land accessible to the village. Does the gentleman know whether any of these lands involved, and exchanges of land, would take away from the Indian the land near his village and give him lieu land too far away from his village to be of benefit?

Mr. SNYDER. It can not take away from the Indian anything that he now has; but the only question is about what he will get in lieu of what has been taken away from him, which has been taken away and which he can not get back—he gets everything back that he had before the last 40 or 50 years—and if he can not get back lands adjacent to his own lands of the type of which the gentleman speaks, or that might be fertile and used for agricultural purposes, he will be given the amount of money which would be the value of the land.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. In just a moment. Of course, there is nothing in this bill that has to do with the Pueblo matter at all. That is a later consideration that will come up, perhaps, months from now; certainly it will not come up in a few days.

Mr. KNUTSON. I notice, on page 2, the last proviso, at the bottom of the page:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, decline to pay the pro rata share as herein stated if he should deem it not for the best interests of said Indian, notwithstanding the Indian may possess a certificate of competency or have received a patent in fee for his or her allotment.

I understand that section is objectionable, at least to a number of Indians in our part of the country where the tribal funds have not yet been distributed. Who is to determine the competency of the Indian? How is his competency determined in the first place?

Mr. SNYDER. I imagine that was inserted in the bill for the purpose of giving some right to say that the Indian who had been declared competent, who had made arrangements for the receipt of his money, if something happened between that time affecting his competency, he might decide not to give the money.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I will.

Mr. HUSTED. The gentleman refers to what has been taken away from the Indian and speaks of giving something in lieu of what has been taken away. Do you mean lands taken away by court proceedings, ejectment suits, or matters of that kind?

Mr. SNYDER. No; what I meant was this: In the last three or four hundred years out in the Pueblo country, Indians who were members of the Pueblo have had assigned to them lands as a community assignment, who have perhaps traded for land with some other Indian, neither of them having any right to transfer the land. Later on the white man comes along, picks up whatever color of title the Indian had for transfer, and he gets the property and settles on it. Now, what we are trying to do is to determine whether to take the white man off the property and give it back to the Indian, or determine what that property is worth. We want to do justice to both the white man and Indian.

Mr. HUSTED. Does it also enter into determining the question of whether the Indian has the right to the land or the white man? I am trying to get the basis of the justice of giving the Indian something in place of what was taken from him. What is the real basis of it?

Mr. SNYDER. The basis of it is simply clearing up the title. There is a cloud apparently on the title. The whites have settled upon it. That was a right of occupancy within the Pueblo reservation. Now, much of that property, not much but a small per cent, has been taken over, parts of cities have been built on it, beautiful towns built on it of 1,500 to 2,000 people; but there is a cloud on that title, and these bills are for the purpose of trying to clear that up and give the Indian back, either in land or in money, the value of that which has been taken from him. Now, the people who have settled on it are being forced off by the Government itself in order to protect the rights of the Indians.

Mr. HUSTED. And in order to protect the people who have squatted on this property or obtained it in any legal way and have built upon it and improved it, you propose to give the Indians something in lieu thereof?

Mr. SNYDER. Certainly, that is what the intention is.

Mr. BURTNES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I will.

Mr. BURTNES. I arose because of the inquiry made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] in reference to the last two lines on page 2, where the Secretary of the Interior has the privilege in his discretion not to pay to an Indian his share even though the Indian has received a certificate of competency or patent in fee. I thought the inquiry of the gentleman from Minnesota was quite relevant, especially in the case of the Indians who have received certificates of competency, but as an excuse for retaining the language that is in the bill preventing the payment, in the discretion of the Secretary to those who have received patents in fee, I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that among the Chippewas, with which he is familiar, all mixed bloods received patents in fee, and no one will contend that most of them were actually competent.

Mr. SNYDER. That is right.

Mr. CARTER. Not all of them; only certain bands.

Mr. SNYDER. He said most of them.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I do not want to yield further.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield to me some time?

Mr. SNYDER. I will not object to the gentleman getting time under the five-minute debate.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield me some time?

Mr. SNYDER. I will not object to you getting time under the five-minute debate.

Mr. KNUTSON. I do not think a bill of this importance should be brought in here without an opportunity to discuss it fully.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, in closing, I simply want to say again that every measure contained in this bill comes in here by the unanimous vote of the committee after careful and painstaking consideration, and while I expect that the committee will accept some amendments without much discussion, I most earnestly hope that in general the bill will be accepted by the House as it is before it now.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York yields back three minutes remaining.

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, we had the opportunity of going very thoroughly into this Pueblo Indian land matter some two or three years ago on a committee of investigation which visited New Mexico, a committee of which the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] was chairman.

The situation, as I recall it, is about this: The Pueblo Indians hold their lands under a grant by the Spanish Government dating away back prior to the time that our Government got title to that part of the country. We acquired title by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and under that treaty the rights of the Pueblo Indians were reserved and guaranteed to them. They proceeded along, living in their little towns and villages, as they do, with houses all built like apartment houses, one next to the other and over the other, none of them living in the country. Under that system they improved, by irrigation and otherwise, the lands adjacent to their little towns. By the cultivation of those lands they have been self-sustaining for generations.

The Federal Government has never done anything for them except to provide a few schools, and here and there an Indian agent to settle differences between them and the white people, and so forth.

Under this condition white settlers have gone in and purchased, not from the Pueblo, as the tribe is called, but from the individual Indian, his right, title, and interest to the land, the tribe having given no sanction to the purchase in many instances. So the white men moved in and took possession of certain tracts of these lands without valid title, as it appears to me. When the State of New Mexico was admitted into the Union they passed an adverse possession law, the time limit being, I believe, 10 years. But that has never been applied to these lands, because they were Indian lands.

The white men are on many tracts of those lands, have possession of them, and are getting the use of them. The Indian is getting nothing from them. Thus has sprung up what is claimed to be a color of title.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. As I understand, under the laws of New Mexico now, all lands of the Pueblo Indians must be conveyed by deeds signed by the governor of the tribe, so called, so that a sale of Indian lands by an individual would be void, would it not?

Mr. CARTER. That is my understanding. The sale of land by an individual would be void unless it is approved by the governor of the tribe.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. ROACH. It is my information, at least, that the reservation was made in the enabling act, when New Mexico assumed statehood, reserving jurisdiction and control of all these Indian lands in the Government.

Mr. CARTER. That is true. The individual Indian can not sell, because he has never been allotted. He has never had anything but a community interest. He has nothing to sell. There has been no partition of the lands at all. There can be no valid sale without the governor or cacique of the village approving it, and then I take it that the approval of the Secretary of the Interior would be necessary to complete title.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. The gentleman says, and no doubt properly, that the sales of these lands from individual Indians were such in nature and character that title never passed?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; that is my opinion.

Mr. HUSTED. They are now proposing to give these Indians lands held by white men the title to which you contend is bad?

Mr. CARTER. I stated the case. The gentleman can draw his own conclusion.

Mr. HUSTED. What I wanted to get up to was this: Is there any provision for validating the title to the land now held by the white men whose title, you say, is not good?

Mr. CARTER. I do not know, because I have not examined closely the bill of the gentleman from New York. But one of the bills that I did examine, as I recall now, made an adverse possession of one day give this color of title.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CARTER. May I have three minutes more?

Mr. SWANK. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. CARTER. Of course, there has been an adverse possession of a good many tracts of one day that are not now in controversy, but they will be drawn into controversy hereafter.

Mr. BURTNES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. BURTNES. I want to say that toward some of the bills that have been introduced I am not favorably disposed. I have not read all of them, but I think there are some that have not that provision. I hope the gentleman will read them before leaving that statement appear in the Record without qualification, because I know the gentleman always wants his facts correct.

Mr. CARTER. That was the impression I got from reading the section with reference to possession.

Mr. BURTNES. The most extreme provision in that regard is in a bill which might be construed as providing that possession for 10 years would give title. But that is the most extreme provision I have seen in any of the bills, and I have examined them quite carefully.

Mr. CARTER. When I began to get these telegrams and letters, such as many of you no doubt have received about this matter, I began to get the bills and get them together and examine them. As I recall, I found one bill that undertook to give this color of title by possession of one day.

Mr. GENSMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. GENSMAN. Did the gentleman get that impression from the bill, or did he get it from some of the telegrams and letters he received?

Mr. CARTER. Oh, the gentleman knows me well enough to know that when I say it was from a bill, it was a bill; and I do not take such impressions from propaganda.

Mr. GENSMAN. I think the gentleman is confusing it with something he heard.

Mr. ROACH. These bills that are being discussed have certain provisions with regard to obtaining title by lapse of time. Some of the bills require the possession to be under color of title, while others of the bills require no color of title, but only mere actual possession.

Mr. CARTER. I have only five minutes.

Mr. ROACH. I wanted to help the gentleman to that extent. Perhaps that is where the difference is.

Mr. CARTER. The question of adverse possession is, in my opinion, the essence of the thing. If you make the adverse possession reach back far enough, why certainly a man who has been on this land for 40 or 50 years in quiet and peaceful possession can be said to have some rights; but the man who has simply moved on there since this controversy started, as I understand many of them have, ought not to acquire such benefits by reason of such uncertain occupancy. I would not have very much confidence in any rights that he claimed under adverse possession.

Mr. SNYDER. I will say to the gentleman that each one of these bills goes back to the enabling act of 1910 and then 20 years back of that.

Mr. CARTER. That would be 33 years.

Mr. SNYDER. It is 33 years now, but no one knows when the bill will pass, and it is until the passage of the bill.

Mr. CARTER. That would be 33 years ago now.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan having taken the chair, a message in writing from the President was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and resolution of the following titles:

On January 24, 1923:

H. R. 13559. An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

On January 25, 1923:

H. J. Res. 16. Joint resolution providing for pay to clerks to Members of Congress and Delegates.

On January 26, 1923:

H. J. Res. 261. Joint resolution for the appointment of three members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

On January 31, 1923:

H. R. 11626. An act to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Baton Rouge, La.;

H. R. 12777. An act granting the consent of Congress to the cities of Grand Forks, N. Dak., and East Grand Forks, Minn., or either of them, to construct, maintain, and operate a dam across the Red River of the North;

H. R. 13139. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Great Southern Lumber Co., a corporation of the State of Pennsylvania, doing business in the State of Mississippi, to construct a railroad bridge across Pearl River at approximately 1½ miles north of Georgetown, in the State of Mississippi;

H. R. 13195. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State highway commission of Missouri, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the St. Francis River in the State of Missouri;

H. R. 13474. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Winnebago, the town of Rockford, and the city of Rockford, in said county, in the State of Illinois, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Rock River;

H. R. 13493. An act to authorize the State road department of the State of Florida to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Escambia River near Ferry Pass, Fla.; and

H. R. 13511. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of St. Paul, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River.

TRIBAL PROPERTY OF INDIANS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I know that the Committee on Indian Affairs have given long study and conscientious thought to this measure, but there are certain provisions in the first and second sections of it to which the Chippewas of Minnesota take exception.

In line 19, page 2, the bill says:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, decline to pay the pro rata share as herein stated if he should deem it not for the best interests of said Indian, notwithstanding the Indian may possess a certificate of competency or have received a patent in fee for his or her allotment.

It seems to me that this provision confers arbitrary powers upon the Secretary of the Interior. This is of great importance to the Chippewas of Minnesota. It seems to me that in its present form the bill confers altogether too much arbitrary power upon the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SNYDER. I know that a good many people are afraid of that, but in my eight years' experience with the committee I have never seen the time when the Secretary of the Interior has used bad discretion in determining these matters. Unless there is some such provision as this, here is what will happen: Some of these Indians were declared competent many years ago, and some of them have become incompetent since these certificates were issued. The gentleman knows that some lawyer might easily prevail upon one of these Indians to ask for a division of his property, and although once declared competent he might now be absolutely incompetent, and in such a case as that some one ought to have discretion to determine the question.

Mr. KNUTSON. From the gentleman's point of view that may be all right.

Mr. CARTER. Let me cite a case to the gentleman. Suppose that an Indian has had his restrictions removed and has received a fee patent to his land. He proposes to dispose of his property. Since that time he has become an habitual drunkard or gambler. I think that in such a case the Secretary ought to have the right to say that his money shall not all be paid to him at one time, but paid to him in installments, in order that he may subsist. And there might be other cases.

Mr. KNUTSON. I presume that primarily the matter will be referred to the local Indian agent, and the agent might have a grudge against a certain Indian and he might refuse to recommend the claimant.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I am glad to yield to the gentleman, but I have only five minutes.

Mr. SNYDER. I will see that the gentleman gets five minutes more.

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman knows that it is impossible to enact any general law that will cover every individual case.

Mr. KNUTSON. I realize that, and I want to commend the committee for trying to throw proper safeguards around incompetent Indians. I am not criticizing the committee.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does the gentleman contend that all the Chippewas of Minnesota who have received patents in fee to their allotments are really competent?

Mr. KNUTSON. I do not like to pose as a competency court. I can not answer that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SNYDER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTNESS. I want to call attention to the fact that if the gentleman's desire should be acceded to it would also prevent the Secretary of the Interior from refusing to pay the share to a person who has received a patent in fee for his allotment, and the gentleman will recall that the mixed bloods, regardless of whether they have received certificates of competency or not, have received patents in fee.

Mr. KNUTSON. Of course, all the mixed bloods would come under my provision.

Mr. BURTNESS. If you eliminate this provision, all the mixed bloods who received patents in fee could demand their share of the fund, regardless of whether they are competent or not.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does not the gentleman think there should be some sort of judicial determination to determine a person's competency? It seems to me you are giving too much power to the Secretary of the Interior. It is a serious matter to declare a man incompetent. As I understand it, this is a measure to release as many Indians as possible from the jurisdiction of the Indian Bureau and enable the Indian Bureau to cut the Indians loose and let them shift for themselves.

Mr. BURTNESS. I would have no particular quarrel with the gentleman's proposition if he would limit it to those Indians who have actually received certificates of competency.

Mr. KNUTSON. I would be willing to accept such an amendment, but I think this is altogether too drastic.

Mr. ROACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Most of my time has been taken up by others, but I will yield to my friend from Missouri.

Mr. ROACH. I want to state to the gentleman that there are certain Indians who, although technically competent, it would be to their disadvantage to pay them their share of the fund; it would amount to almost a crime to pay the money over to them. There must be some discretion somewhere.

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, let us have the bill amended so that the payments shall be made only to those who have received a patent in fee.

Now, on page 3, at the top of the page, it provides—

That any Indian who may be paid the amount of his pro rata share of the tribal properties as herein provided shall thereafter have no further interest in or claim upon the tribal property or funds of the tribe of which he is a member, and be required to sign an agreement in writing to this effect, and shall be dropped from the rolls of said tribe.

Now, take the Chippewas in Minnesota. They have great wealth. Under the Cass Lake Forest Reserve act there is a claim for reimbursement for lands taken that amounts to more than $1,000,000. Would you expect our Indians to sign a quitclaim giving up that money which may come into the tribal fund thereafter?

Mr. BURTNESS. Could not the value of that claim be appraised as well as any other claim or property?

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman does not want the Indian to have his cake and also eat it?

Mr. KNUTSON. No; but I do not think he should be compelled to sign a relinquishment until he has received the last cent to which he is entitled. It seems to me there is opportunity here for fraud.

Mr. BURTNESS. If I get the gentleman's contention, his position is that if he had an interest in a quarter section of land and he gave a quitclaim deed for it, he would want to reserve to himself the right that whenever that quarter section of land became more valuable that he should receive his share in that increased value.

Mr. KNUTSON. Oh, no; I do not want any such thing. The gentleman is distorting and twisting my language. But suppose some Chippewa receives his share of the tribal funds this spring, will he have an interest in the money that comes into the tribal fund later?

Mr. BURTNESS. They could get their proportion of the value of all the property that belongs to the tribe, and that would include every claim that they may have against the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate numbered 8, 16, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 33 to the bill (H. R. 13696) making appropriations for the Executive Office and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

That the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments numbered 10 and 25 to said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives and had requested a further conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. HARRIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

TRIBAL PROPERTY OF INDIANS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER].

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, in my time I ask to have read an excerpt from a letter which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Extract from recent letter of French soldier to a friend in America who was in the Army with him.]

Everything is going wrong just now, my dear —, and we have numerous causes for worry—worries in the family; worries in that great family, the country. We are disgusted at the difficult position in which certain of our allies have placed us. We are obliged to go to Essen and Bochum, not to get our money but the coal for which we must pay in pounds sterling. We are again going to be accused of imperialism by certain probes, and yet look at the situation created for victorious France as compared to defeated Germany:

FRANCE.	GERMANY.
Two-thirds of her industries destroyed.	Industry intact.
Industrial production reduced to one-half.	Intense industrial activity due to the depreciation of the mark.
Wealth reduced to nothing.	Wealth intact in dollars and pounds sterling abroad.
Debts owed to foreign countries which she wishes to pay, etc.	Payments for devastations, murders, etc., which she will not make.

RESULT OF THE WAR.

France goes to her ruin if she does not make the boches pay, for our allies annoy us, not having suffered as we have suffered—2,000,000 killed—Frenchmen, and not Australians or Canadians—and having preserved their means of production they seek purely and simply the sale of their products.

Power in certain countries with whom we were till now united in an "entente cordiale" is held by the class of international financiers who only pursue a policy of frightful selfishness. They play with petroleum and destroy without scruple the miners of their country. They speculate on the exchange to the detriment of their industrial production—for the rise of the pound sterling does not facilitate the export trade of Manchester, Sheffield, etc. Finally, they squarely give their hand to the boches, hoping that by what is practically a cancellation of reparations, thanks to the famous moratorium, first proposed by some financiers of your country, the value of the mark which they are guarding can be restored!

We look on whilst all this is done—all this bargaining—with our souls full of trouble and distress, and we can not but approve of Poincaré's policy of firmness. We believe here that Clemenceau, Wilson, and Lloyd-George were idealists whose advent was inauspicious for the whole world. When one has an abscess, one cuts it. That is all—that is what should have been done. In short, let us leave matters to those who are now in Essen and Bochum and we shall see what will happen.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I have simply had this excerpt of a letter from a French soldier, which you have just heard, read into the RECORD as something of a supplement to the views which I sought to present on the floor of this House day before yesterday. I recognize the fact that there are gentlemen in this country, and perhaps on the floor of this House, which the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 5, 1917, will show not to have been in accord with the great idea which moved this great Nation of ours to enter into the war to save civilization, and which did save civilization. They were against our entering the war, and, quite consistently, voted against the declaration of war against the Imperial German Government. I recognize the fact that those of us who had the high privilege of serving in that war do not owe that privilege to the votes of these gentlemen. It was only natural to expect that they would not avail themselves of the privilege to fight which they denied to others, and, with one or two notable exceptions, this was true. It is perfectly consistent for these gentlemen to now oppose the position I have taken in pleading the cause of France, and I have no doubt that such opposition as my views may receive here will largely come from that element on the floor of this House. These gentlemen are at least consistent, although I am sorry to say they are as ill-advised now as then and, incidentally, as much in the minority. [Applause.]

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, my attention has been brought to a letter which is said to have been issued confidentially to the sheriffs and peace officers in general throughout the State of Oregon by Lieut. W. D. Long, who purports to be the Army intelligence officer at Vancouver Barracks. The letter is as follows:

(Confidential copy.)

HEADQUARTERS VANCOUVER BARRACKS, WASH.,
OFFICE OF THE INTELLIGENCE OFFICER,
October 16, 1922.

DEAR SIR: The intelligence service of the Army has for its primary purpose the surveillance of all organizations or elements hostile or potentially hostile to the Government of this country, or who seek to overthrow the Government by violence.

Among organizations falling under the above head are radical groups, as the I. W. W., World War Veterans, Union of Russian Workers, Communist Party, Communist Labor Party, One Big Union, Workers International Industrial Union, Anarchists and Bolsheviks, and such semi-radical organizations as the Socialists, Nonpartisan League, Big Four Brotherhoods, and American Federation of Labor.

Not only are we interested in these organizations because they have as their object the overthrow of the Government but also because they attempt to undermine and subvert the loyalty of our soldiers.

With the few scattered military posts in this part of the country, it is obviously impossible to cover all points as thoroughly as they should be, hence it is necessary in many cases to trust to the cooperation of law-enforcement officers whose duties and whose knowledge of a particular locality give them a thorough insight into such matters.

It is requested that you inform this office as to any of the aforementioned or other radical organizations coming to your attention under such headings as (a) location of headquarters, (b) names of leaders, (c) strength of organization, (d) activities of the organization, (e) strikes and methods of carrying on same, and (f) attitude of members. We will be glad to receive copies of pamphlets, handbills, or other radical propaganda spread in your vicinity.

If from time to time you will keep me posted as to conditions in your vicinity, such cooperation on the part of yourself and your subordinates as the press of your duties permits will be greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,

W. D. Long,
First Lieutenant, Seventh United States Infantry,
Intelligence Officer.

Mr. Chairman, I imagine that few Members who voted for the Army appropriation bill had any idea that we were supporting a Government service which was intended to have activities of the scope indicated by this letter. Those Members of Congress who favor such activity hold to the idea, I believe, that they should be carried on by the Department of Justice. Some of us do not believe that the Federal Government should meddle with these matters except only with such organizations as might actively be engaged in plotting against the Government. It is incredible that it should be conceived that any branch of the Government should have felt authorized to hold under surveillance a group of veterans or the labor groups such as the Big Four brotherhoods and the American Federation of Labor. Still more outrageous is it that lawful and purely political activities of minority political parties such as the Nonpartisan League or the Socialists, an honored member of which we have in this House, should be spied upon. To my mind this incident merely indicates what we pacifists have always said about the military mind. It conceives of the military as the sole protector of the Nation and as the guardian of all of the people in their civil as well as other rights. It seems to feel itself absolutely supreme and that the people exist merely to furnish military supplies and the necessary "cannon fodder." It is the self-elected arbiter and guardian not only of our rights but of our political activities, our economic life, our health, and our spiritual condition. I presume that we should be thankful that Congress itself is not under military surveillance and that memberships in its committees has not been proscribed by a military satrapy. That, however, will come, no doubt, in due time.

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, there is no Member of the House more able, more intelligent, or more gifted than the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON]. All of us admire his intellect. I have no crow to pick with him for the speeches he makes on the floor along this line. That is his right and privilege. It is my right and privilege to oppose such speeches. Though I admire him, I can not agree with him. However, I want to say that if I were the Secretary of War of this great Nation I would not stop until I had promoted that intelligence officer—that young lieutenant out in the Northwest who guards our country against communists who conspire to overthrow our Government—to a brigadier generalship. That is what that patriotic young lieutenant deserves.

What are the present conditions out in the Northwest? That territory politically has ceased to be Republican or Democratic. When a man runs for office now in the great Northwest he runs either as a radical or as a conservative. I am not for radicalism in this country. I am for 100 per cent Americanism. If there is any one organization in the world that has demonstrated that it is against all government, it is the I. W. W. It and communism stand for anarchy and against orderly government.

Why should not this intelligence officer watch them in the Northwest when he sees there is a tendency to undermine the Government? He is a lieutenant in our Army. His oath requires him to protect his country against domestic enemies. If there has been any one thing demonstrated in this country to a mathematical certainty and beyond doubt, it is that such organizations as the I. W. W.'s and communists are dangerous domestic enemies and daily seek to undermine our great Government. Why should not the intelligence officer, this splendid young Army lieutenant out in the Northwest, watch them? I am behind him as one Representative of this Government. It is all right for our distinguished friend from New York [Mr. LONDON] to be a Socialist if he wants to. I do not agree with him or his doctrines, though I admire him personally. I have just as much friendship for him personally as any other man in this House has for him. There is no greater student in this country and no man more sincere than he, and if all of the socialists in the world were like MEYER LONDON there would not be much danger from them, because all of his danger is in his remarks here. He does not do any harm otherwise, but the time has come in this country when not only the soldiery but the Members of Congress should demand absolute loyalty in America to American principles and good government.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I yield to the distinguished gentleman from California.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Does the gentleman know that in the State of California, a part of which I have the honor to represent, it is a felony to belong to the I. W. W., and that some 10 or 12 people were put into the State penitentiary in the last two weeks because it was proven that they did?

Mr. BLANTON. That is because I. W. W.'s are anarchists and do not believe in orderly government. It ought to be a felony in every State in the Union to belong to an organization that is against orderly government, that preaches and practices anarchy, and is against law and order. It ought to be a felony in every State of the Union.

I wish the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] would see fit not to make these speeches. He has a perfect right to do it, however, just as I have a right to answer him. If he would only put the great talent which the good Lord has so bountifully given him and the splendid oratorical powers he possesses behind the purpose of that young lieutenant to wipe out of existence throughout this land all question of Communism and I. W. Wism and everything but strictly 100 per cent Americanism, he would be one of the greatest men in the United States.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. LINEBERGER. The gentleman certainly does not include the American Federation of Labor and the Big Four Brotherhood in the category of organizations that he has been discussing? They were mentioned in that letter.

Mr. BLANTON. The American Federation of Labor has within its 4,000,000 and odd membership some of the best men in the United States.

Mr. LINEBERGER. And patriotic men.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, and many of them are patriotic men, that is true. And so with the Big Four Brotherhood. Many of their affiliated members are some of the best men in the whole United States. Many of them are patriotic absolutely. But what has brought a cloud upon the great American Federation of Labor and upon the four great brotherhoods is the fact that they have harbored, defended, and protected some members who have committed dastardly crimes against organized society and our Government, and they have permitted to affiliate with them and their organizations some of the worst thugs and anarchists in our Nation. This is what has brought them into disrepute.

Let us consider the late nation-wide shopmen's strike.

Here are the facts: These 400,000 striking shopmen voluntarily quit their jobs. In doing so they violated the decision of the Railroad Labor Board, which, at great expense to the people our Government created and maintains for their special benefit, and upon which they have equal representation of their own selection. They announced July 1, 1922, that they would not work themselves or permit any American to work in the places they discarded. They unlawfully entered into a conspiracy to force compliance with their demands by inaugurating a reign of terror and tying up every industry in the Nation. They openly threatened, intimidated, unmercifully beat, tarred and feathered, and even murdered Americans who were employed to work in the places they had abandoned. They shot into, burned, and dynamited homes of workers. They committed sabotage in the most dastardly forms. They burned and dynamited railroad bridges and other valuable property. They wrecked trains by drawing spikes from rails and placing obstructions on tracks. They ruined machinery, numerous locomotives, and other rolling stock. They delayed every train in the United States. They forced railroads to employ armies of guards with day and night shifts to protect property and workers, which expense the people pay. They forced each State to employ additional constabulary to protect life and property, which expense the people pay. They forced the Government to appoint an army of extra deputy United States marshals to uphold the law, which expense the people pay. The Post Office Department reports that 1,259 mail trains have been annulled, their crews idling. Many stockmen were ruined, unable to ship conditioned live stock to market at the critical period. Many farmers lost their year's labor by crops rotting for want of shipment. Food prices soared, affecting every family. Coal commands double price, with poor families unable to obtain it. Business stagnated, throwing millions out of jobs, until on August 18, 1922, in his address to Congress, President Harding said:

Deserted transcontinental trains in the desert regions of the Southwest have revealed the cruelty and contempt for law on the part of some railway employees who have conspired to paralyze transportation, and lawlessness and violence in a hundred places have revealed the failure of striking unions to hold their forces to law observance. Men who refused to strike and who have braved insult and assault and risked their lives to serve a public need have been cruelly attacked and wounded or killed. Men seeking work and guards attempting to protect lives and property, even officers of the Federal Government, have been assaulted, humiliated, and hindered in their duties. Strikers have armed themselves and gathered in mobs about railroad shops to offer armed violence to any man attempting to go to work. There is a state of lawlessness shocking to every conception of American law and order and violating the cherished guaranties of American freedom.

At great expense to the people, the Attorney General of the United States finally appealed to the court and obtained an injunction to stop this anarchy. Unions immediately crucified him and demanded his impeachment and expulsion from office. The railway executives announced August 1, 1922, that—to disregard the rights of their faithful employees who remained at work and refused to strike, and the Americans who risked their lives in accepting the jobs and working during the strike, by taking the strikers back with full seniority restored, would do violence to every principle of right and justice and would constitute the grossest breach of faith on the part of the railroads to their present workers.

The representatives of the Federated Shop Crafts heralded to their members that they had forced 76 railroads to their terms and would not stop until they had forced all others to terms.

The Attorney General was right when he said that whenever labor unions seriously menaced the destruction of this Government it would destroy them. This Government must remain supreme. All workers, including Congressmen, must be made to understand that they have a right to their job only so long as they fill it satisfactorily to their employer, and that when they voluntarily quit their job another laborer has the lawful right to fill it unmolested. This anarchy of union terrorism must cease.

I am not an enemy to union labor. It has no better friend. I am constantly seeking to save it from destruction. I have fought only the anarchy and disregard of law in unions. Only the open shop will save unions. Without it they are doomed. The people are waking up. The great majority of union laborers are honest, law-abiding, upright men, who do not approve of the lawlessness in their unions, but they have no voice and are powerless to stop it. Their leaders call me the unions' worst enemy, yet many union members support me. To prove this I call your attention to the vote in my district in the last general election, November 7, 1922, for United States Senator and Congressman:

You will see from the above that I am not deemed their enemy by so very many union laborers in my district, for there are quite a number of union laborers in every county in my district. I am known as the uncompromising enemy of radicalism, yet the above tabulation proves that in supporting me the best element of union laborers are likewise against this lawlessness. They permitted me to receive 6,851 more votes than the Democratic nominee for United States Senator received in my district; he having the indorsement of organized labor in the State; and I was permitted to receive 648 votes more than the popular Democratic nominee for Governor of Texas received in my district in a reelection for his second term. And, concerning my district, on September 5, 1922, the Houston Daily Post editorially said:

The seventeenth district has the largest percentage of white population of any Texas district and the smallest per cent of illiteracy. Its voters are therefore intelligent and able to appraise issues.

I mention the above to show you that the people, including the best element of union laborers, will support any man who stands for law and order.

Neither Mr. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, nor any other officers of that organization, and neither has any officer of the four great brotherhoods condemned the men who committed wholesale murder in the Herrin massacre, nor have any of them ever demanded an investigation to determine who were the murderers or taken any steps whatever in their organizations to identify and punish the men who committed these crimes. But, on the other hand, Mr. Gompers has stood behind many noted anarchists and raised large funds of money to defend them, such noted bomb-throwing anarchists as the MacNamara brothers, Thomas Mooney, and others.

When unions would not permit the little railroad to run down in Arkansas and the good people there stood it for months and watched bridges burn and property destroyed, they were incensed into taking the law into their own hands and committed violence.

Concerning this violence, Mr. Gompers is quoted as follows:

The facts of mob violence or usurpation of municipal authority, of murder, of intimidation are matters of open record. Properly constituted government in the State of Arkansas can vindicate itself only by a speedy determination of responsibility and an adequate and quickly determinate punishment for those guilty of one of the worst atrocities of our time. Where there is so much enmity against labor, surely it is only fair to insist that duly constituted authority take charge and perform its duty in a situation such as this.

But was Mr. Gompers consistent? Why did he not make such a protest concerning the massacre at Herrin, Ill., which was just the other side of the same question?

It is very likely because of all of these facts fresh in the minds of patriotic American citizens, may I say to the gentleman from California, is why this young lieutenant in our Army service out in the great Northwest may have inadvertently included the American Federation of Labor and the railroad brotherhoods along with other organizations he thought it well to watch. He was thinking of their leaders, not of all of their men. He was thinking of the Herrin massacre possibly.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Is it not a fact that the courts at Herrin acquitted these men there?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I have seen how some men are acquitted in courthouses.

Mr. LINEBERGER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] explained that situation very clearly here on the floor of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. They were acquitted, but men were murdered there, were they not? There were men murdered at Herrin, there were men stripped of their clothing and tied with ropes behind a high-powered automobile and dragged over the ground at the rate of 40 miles an hour, and then, with their flesh torn and bleeding, with stones in their flesh, when tied in the hot sun they dying begged for water, they were told, "I would see you in hell first before I would give you a drop of water."

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON.]

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I rise not to reply to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. I can not get myself to take him seriously. In his enmity toward organized labor, in his hostility toward every effort of the man at the bottom of society to improve his condition, he becomes absolutely irrational.

I have never heard him deliver a logical or intelligent talk whenever he referred to the labor question. [Laughter.] And since he speaks on the labor question frequently I have great doubt as to his rationality in general. [Laughter.] I am afraid that the young lieutenant of whom he speaks in laudatory terms will commit suicide to-day, and I should hate to have that happen. To be praised by BLANTON, of Texas, what greater calamity can befall a man. [Laughter.] I want that what I am saying should be taken good naturedly. I do not speak in any spirit of bitterness. I have no personal animosity toward any Member of the House. The gentleman from Texas fails to understand that the complaint of the gentleman from Alabama is that a military officer should undertake to control the political activities and economic theories of his fellow citizens. Have we come to this, that a semi-ignorant or ignorant officer of the Army should assume to supervise the political, social, and economic theories of his countrymen? Has the war driven you that mad?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. I will.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Without intending to praise the gentleman from New York, I realize he is a man of ability, and, of course, he understands that such an encroachment upon civil life as is represented by this activity of an Army officer at Vancouver Barracks is more dangerous than all the I. W. W.'s in America put together and is altogether un-American.

Mr. LONDON. That undermines the very basis of democracy. The difficulty is that some people talk about democracy without understanding the elements of it. While the gentleman from Texas talks democracy he votes for a Republican tariff on pigs or on cattle. I do not know whether he is a bovine Republican or an assinine Democrat. [Laughter.] When he talks about Samuel Gompers and organized labor he fails to realize that there is no democracy unless it comes as a result of a struggle from the bottom up, and that is the struggle of organized labor.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. I will.

Mr. KEARNS. I did not hear the speech of the gentleman from Alabama and only a part of the speech of the gentleman from Texas. If there has been murder committed there at Herrin, would the gentleman think the murderers ought to be punished?

Mr. LONDON. Why, does the gentleman know of any man who justifies murder?

Mr. KEARNS. I am asking the gentleman.

Mr. LONDON. Does the gentleman know of any man in the United States who justifies murder?

Mr. KEARNS. Does the gentleman think the murderers at Herrin ought to be punished?

Mr. LONDON. Why, the murderers at Herrin ought to be punished and the burners of men in Texas ought to be punished. The murderers in Arkansas ought to be punished. I am less interested in punishing the poor devil than I am in making it impossible to permit the repetition of the outrage. When he encourages a military officer in acting as a spy upon his fellow citizens, he encourages the doing of a dastardly deed. Nobody can respect a spy. A real soldier is the man who is called upon by his country to be the first to expose his breast to danger. He is to be always a defender, he is always subordinate to civil authority in a democracy, and he should never attempt to dictate to the community what it should think or do.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONDON. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman took the same oath of office, as a soldier, to defend the country against domestic as well as foreign enemies?

Mr. LONDON. That is why I defend the country against foreign enemies as well as against a bourbon Democrat from Texas. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Chairman, as the chairman of the committee [Mr. SNYDER] said awhile ago, there was no dissension among the members of the committee on this bill so far as I know except section 13. An amendment will be offered to cure that objection, and therefore the time that was requested will not be used, and I have no request for further time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to cause an appraisement to be made to determine the total value of all the lands, timber, money, and other property belonging to any tribe of Indians, other than the Five Civilized Tribes and the Osage Tribe in Oklahoma.

That the Secretary of the Interior shall appoint three appraisers, one of whom shall be an employee of the Interior Department, one a member of the tribe whose property is to be appraised, and one a resident of the State wherein the Indians reside, and he shall fix their compensation, which shall not exceed $10 per day. The compensation of the appraisers and expense of making the appraisement shall be paid out of the funds belonging to the tribe whose property is appraised.

That when the appraisement is made as provided herein and approved by the Secretary of the Interior he shall then be authorized to determine and fix what, in his opinion, would be the reasonable cash value of a pro rata share of the said tribal property of any enrolled member of the tribe. When the reasonable cash value of a pro rata share of the tribal property is determined, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, to pay same out of the tribal funds belonging to said Indians to any enrolled member of such tribe who has received a certificate of competency or a patent in fee for an allotment upon the written request and application of such Indian: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, decline to pay the pro rata share as herein stated if he should deem it not for the best interests of said Indians, notwithstanding the Indian may possess a certificate of competency or have received a patent in fee for his or her allotment.

That any Indian who may be paid the amount of his pro rata share of the tribal properties as herein provided shall thereafter have no further interest in or claim upon the tribal property or funds of the tribe of which he is a member, and be required to sign an agreement in writing to this effect, and shall be dropped from the rolls of said tribe.

That any moneys paid to any Indian as herein provided shall be exempt and not liable to the satisfaction of any debt contracted prior to said payment.

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make any and all needful rules and regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this act.

Mr. CLAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CLAGUE: On page 1, line 8, after the word "Oklahoma," strike out the period and insert the following words: "to-wit, to the Pueblo Indian Tribe."

Mr. CLAGUE. Mr. Chairman, that amendment excepts the Pueblo Tribe.

Mr. CARTER. We have no objection to that.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I want to inquire of the gentleman from New York: As I understand the situation, this does not apply to the Pueblo Indians?

Mr. SNYDER. It does not in any way.

Mr. ROACH. Why should we except the Pueblos by an amendment and make this in terms not to apply to the Pueblo Tribe when it is not applicable to their property at all? The provisions of the section are not applicable to them, and it would be a perversity of the facts in the present case with respect to titles to make this bill apply to them.

Mr. SNYDER. The only reason why I made the statement I did was that the bill applies in no way to the Pueblo matter anyhow, and simply adding the words that it shall not apply to them would neither add to nor take from. The bill in no sense applies to the Pueblos in any way.

Mr. CLAGUE. I think it does. This is a later provision. It would not hurt it in any event.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROACH. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. I think the only difficulty in connection with this matter is this, that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CLAGUE] erroneously assumes that the Pueblos, as a tribe, own any property. Naturally he does not know the fact that the Pueblos are simply private corporations, consisting of Indians within the State of New Mexico, and that only such corporations as such own the title to property. There is no such thing as the Pueblo Tribe within the sense of this bill, and, of course, it would be absolutely ridiculous to place the tribe under the provisions of this bill. Although the addition of the words could possibly do no harm, it would make it ridiculous.

Mr. ROACH. It would appear to be ridiculous to include a tribe like this.

Mr. SNYDER. The only idea I had was that it would do no harm to accept it.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe there is such a thing in law as the Pueblo Indian Tribe. There are the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, but there is no tribal organization that comprises all the Pueblos in New Mexico. The amendment should read "or to the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico."

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. ROACH. There is no intention or purpose under this bill to attempt to appraise the property of the tribe.

Mr. HAYDEN. If there were there is no Pueblo tribal fund out of which any individual Pueblo Indian could get his share.

Mr. ROACH. I make the exception that they are not included under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. We all agree that the Pueblos occupy a different status from that of other Indians in the United States; that is, they trace the title to their lands back to the Government of Spain.

Mr. ROACH. This relates only to the tribes of Indians that have tribal property.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment so that it will read "or to the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico."

Mr. CLAGUE. I accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute offered by Mr. HAYDEN for the amendment offered by Mr. CLAGUE: Page 1, line 8, after the word "Oklahoma," insert the words "or to the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico."

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, there is absolutely nothing in this bill that will apply to the Pueblo Indian question that is covering the country at the present time in the form of propaganda and otherwise. The reason why I said I would be willing to accept the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CLAGUE] is that I think it would add nothing and would subtract nothing from the bill. But since I have listened to my colleague from Missouri [Mr. ROACH], I think, also, that it would be ridiculous, and would neither add to nor detract from the bill, and therefore I am opposed to both of the amendments.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, the main problem here is not a difference in opinion but rather to try to keep this legislation in such shape so that it will appear to be sensible legislation. The members of the committee will readily notice that the appraisement provided for in section 1 relates to property that belongs to "any tribe of Indians," with certain exceptions.

Now, I am firmly convinced that no friend of the Pueblo Indians, or the Pueblos themselves, want Congress by a solemn legislative act to declare, even if it is only by implication, that the different Pueblos in the State of New Mexico constitute a tribe of Indians as such. It is entirely contrary to the facts, and there can therefore be no justification for including the proposed language in this bill. They are not tribes. The legislation can not possibly apply to them, and if we insert reference to them as exceptions following the Five Civilized Tribes and the Osage Tribe in this legislation, we are by implication proceeding upon the theory that the Pueblos come within the same general laws pertaining to Indian affairs as the ordinary Indian tribes do, when as a matter of fact they have not hitherto been regarded as such, and they are not regarded as such to-day. The Bureau of Indian Affairs has never exercised jurisdiction over them. It has never made any attempt to control their property, the disposition thereof, or anything of that sort. Each of these Pueblos is incorporated as such under the laws of the State of New Mexico, and each one of these corporations has the power to deal with its property as the members thereof see fit, as corporate acts, just as valid and proper as the acts of any private corporation. For that reason I think the amendment ought to be rejected.

Mr. CARTER. I think the gentleman is mistaken in one of his statements. I doubt if the Pueblos can dispose of their property as they see fit, or dispose of their property at all without the consent of the governor and the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BURTNESS. The Secretary of the Interior has not at any time attempted to control the disposition of the property of the Pueblos, as such. Of course they, the Pueblo Indians as individuals, have no property, for these separate Pueblos as corporations own the property.

Mr. CARTER. The Secretary of the Interior has never undertaken to deal with them, because they have never undertaken to sell property as a community.

Mr. BURTNESS. Oh, yes; they have sold property time and time again.

Mr. CARTER. You mean the regularly constituted authorities of the community have sold property?

Mr. BURTNESS. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. With the approval of the community.

Mr. SNYDER. With the approval of their governor.

Mr. BURTNESS. By their officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURTNESS. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTNESS. The pueblo as a corporation sells property and makes conveyance by the proper officials of that corporation or pueblo. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma contend that these pueblos as such would come within the provisions of this bill where it uses these words—or property belonging to any tribe of Indians?

Mr. CARTER. No; I think it is very doubtful about that coming within the purview of the language, but because there might be some doubt about it, I think it is well enough that the amendment of the gentleman be adopted.

Mr. ROACH. What doubt could there be about it?

Mr. BURTNESS. The gentleman from Missouri asks what doubt there could possibly be with reference to it?

Mr. CARTER. I do not know whether there has been any legal determination by a court as to whether the pueblo corporation is a tribe or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The question being taken, the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the proviso in line 19, extending down to line 24, on page 1.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: Page 2, line 19, after the word "Indian," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am in hearty accord with the expressed purpose of this first section. I believe, however, that there are some qualifying phrases there which practically rob it of that expressed purpose, and one of them is this proviso at the bottom of page 2. The section itself undertakes to free the competent Indians in the various tribes by appraising the property of the tribes and paying the pro rata share to competent Indians and providing that they shall sign an agreement and their names be stricken from the roll. That is a step in the right direction. It is an advance toward the time when all Indians will be declared to be a part of the American community. But there is, in my opinion, an instance here of what are properly called weasel words, which strike the meaning out of what has gone before. Here is the proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, decline to pay the pro rata share as herein stated if he should deem it not for the best interests of said Indian, notwithstanding the Indian may possess a certificate of competency or have received a patent in fee for his or her allotment.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. If I may call the gentleman's attention to lines 14 and 15, those lines cover exactly the situation and take care of it without the last proviso. In lines 14 and 15 it says that the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, to pay the funds out of the tribal funds.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes; but this last proviso practically invites the Indian Bureau officials to declare a competent Indian to be incompetent. I am opposed to giving any man—Secretary of the Interior or any other man—the absolute power to say that a man who has been declared competent through a very difficult procedure is not competent and shall not have his pro rata share and individual rights. The difficulty is that it is almost impossible for a competent Indian to get a certificate of competency. I know the gentleman who is chairman of this committee [Mr. SNYDER] has several times on the floor of the House called attention to the fact that it is impossible to get more than a few score Indians out of these 300,000 declared competent in any one given year.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I wish the gentleman would let me go on with my statement, if he will be so kind. No later than yesterday I saw a man who belongs to the Chippewa Tribe, who is as competent to transact his own business as any man on the floor of this House, a man who is married and has children, who left the tribal reservation because he could not get a certificate of competency. He went to Independence, Mo., and is living there. He has tried for 15 years to get a certificate of competency and has been refused in spite of the fact that bankers, lawyers, ministers, and other friends have called attention to his worth as a citizen and neighbor. That is the real difficulty, not that some Indian declared competent may be a failure, as the gentleman from Oklahoma says.

Mr. SNYDER. I think the gentleman misunderstands. The very man he speaks of, from Wichita, was before the committee, and he is a competent Indian and has a certificate.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No; I am speaking of William Madison.

Mr. SNYDER. That is the man that was before our committee.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. He lives in Independence, Mo., and is still held to be an incompetent Indian.

Mr. SNYDER. No; at least he said before our committee, and it is a matter of record, that he is competent.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I will read the statement which he gave me this morning at my request. This is the statement of William Madison, of Independence, Mo.:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 1, 1923.

Some time during 1907 I wrote the Indian agent of my reservation in Minnesota (White Earth) to recommend to the Secretary of the Interior my application for competency papers. After waiting months for a reply I secured the indorsement of several of the business men of Mahanomen—our county seat—the postmaster, bankers, newspaper men, etc.; and again, backed by these indorsements, I wrote the Indian agent asking to be turned loose as a competent Indian. After waiting months that stretched into years, at some time in 1910 I approached Special Assistant Attorney General E. H. Long, then holding investigation at Detroit, Minn., into Chippewa matters, for an explanation of this treatment. He dictated a strong recommendation of my competency and instructed me to forward same with another application, through my Indian agent, and I would have no further trouble.

Some time after this I received my first answer from the Indian agent, saying the department had refused my application. Presumably, when he saw that I, like Banquo's ghost, would not down, but kept going higher for support, he sent my first and unsupported application, with recommendation that it be not granted, and it was not.

Quoting from a letter dated May 13, 1914, from the Indian Office at Washington and signed C. F. Hauke—"William Madison noncompetent White Earth Indian"; and another letter, dated April 28, 1914—"and that Mr. Madison is classed as an incompetent Indian. This is simply an outrage and a piece of pure spite work on the part of Mr. Howard. Even though Mr. Madison is classed as a full blood, he is entitled to his property under the act of Congress of June 21, 1906, as a competent full blood." This last is signed by A. L. Thompson, then banker in Mahanomen.

And later, within the last few years, the mayor, bankers, ministers, daily newspaper editors, merchants, and others in our city of Independence, Mo. (suburb of Kansas City, Mo.), testified as to my rights as a competent Indian, sending their testimonials directly to the commissioner's office, but no recognition or results have been received as yet; not even an answer.

This is not an isolated or unusual case.

To show the methods used to crush or keep down the ambitious Indians, I will relate an instance: About the year 1911 I secured the support of two friends to back me as security in getting my land turned by steam-plow outfit and seeded to flax. Thus supported, in the fall I engaged an owner of a plow outfit to come the first Monday of May the following year to plow 100 acres. When the day came he was not there. Investigation proved that the Indian agent's representative had advised him not to plow for me, as I was a full-blood Indian and he could not collect—despite the banker's promise to pay if I didn't—and further he had better not tell me of his changed purposes.

I want to quote the last paragraph of this statement, to show that even in addition to that kind of outrageous treatment still other difficulties are thrown in the way of an "incompetent" Indian who is as competent as any man to manage his affairs:

Had I known sooner, I could have secured another outfit. As it was, all were engaged for the season. I had seen the plowman often in the spring, but he heeded the Indian agent's advice and did not inform me he did not intend to plow for me. Hence this year my land lay idle. By six years of such methods and tactics I was fairly driven from the reservation to make a living for my family. Since 1913 I have lived in Independence, a suburb of Kansas City, Mo., the leading men of which gave me such strong indorsement a few years ago.

WM. MADISON.

Now, the statement I have just read bears out exactly what I said. Here is a man perfectly competent to look after his own affairs, who has been declared incompetent in spite of all efforts, and now we find a provision which says that after a man has gone through the competency labyrinth and been declared competent the Secretary of the Interior shall have the right to say that he shall not have the rights of a human being so hardly earned. If we want to do anything along the line that the bill would indicate we must get the competent Indians out from under the bureau; we should not undertake to put the power in the hands of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior to repeal and nullify the competency given. I believe such action would be an outrage, and I believe this proviso should be taken out. Then we will have the further question to deal with as to how to declare men competent who are really competent.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Does the gentleman know the year that this man failed to get his plowing done?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. In 1911.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Did he tell you that he had received title to the land, sold it, and received payment many years ago?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No; he stated to me personally what I have read in the letter.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. He stated before the committee not more than a week ago that he received title to the land and had sold that land for $2,000 and received the money.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is not the question at all. I was talking of competency under the law.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. I want to call the gentleman's attention to just what he said before the committee:

Mr. ROACH. Have you ever had a land allotment made to you?

Mr. MADISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROACH. Have you ever received a patent for it?

Mr. MADISON. No, sir.

Mr. ROACH. You still have the land?

Mr. MADISON. No. I sold the land. I have received no patent. I could not.

Mr. ROACH. Then you are not interested in the land allotments?

Mr. MADISON. No; I am not.

Mr. ROACH. You claim an interest in this trust fund?

Mr. MADISON. That is all.

Mr. BURNETT. How much did you get for your land?

Mr. MADISON. I got $2,000 for 160 acres.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. There is no contradiction there. The man got his allotment and he sold it with the consent of the Indian Office.

Mr. SNYDER. But I understand he told the gentleman that he sold the land because he could not get the farmers to plow it.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. In 1911 his difficulty occurred.

Mr. SNYDER. He sold the land before and got $2,000 for it.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The confusion arises over the difference between allotment and being declared competent. An Indian may have an allotment and yet be declared incompetent. Competency gives him a right to citizenship. When a man is declared competent he gets a fee patent and becomes as far as it is possible under present tribal complications an American citizen. That is one reason this proviso ought to be taken out.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. This provision of the bill is in a sense an experiment. We have talked for years that something should be done to segregate the competent Indians from the incompetent. Heretofore Congress has given land to individual Indians, but they retained an interest in the tribal estate. Now we are proposing to appraise the tribal estate as a whole, and if any competent Indian is satisfied with the appraisal and finds that he is going to obtain a fair share of the total fund he may make application, sign a waiver, and get his money. It is a very different matter to give an Indian his allotment of the land than it is to give him cash. Since this legislation is an experiment, we should try it out, with this safeguard around it, and if it works properly it can be liberalized later.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it optional with the Indian to receive his pro rata share of the tribal fund?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; nothing is forced upon him. He must make a written application, and if the application is approved he must sign a quitclaim to all further interest in the tribal property.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did the committee consider this state of facts in connection with this policy? For instance, here are tribal lands where oil may be discovered later. The Indian receives his pro rata share on the present basis of the valuation, but it is not known that it contains oil. Later on oil is discovered. Would not the Indian have the idea that he was entitled to some part of the value of the undiscovered property?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is why we require each Indian to sign an agreement in writing to release his interest in the tribal fund and to separate himself from the tribe. Thereafter he has no further interest in it. If the Indian does not want to do that, he need not take the money.

Mr. ROACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. With pleasure.

Mr. ROACH. It appeared in evidence before the committee that there were a number of Indians who had received certificates of competency in lieu of patents to the land, and not only that but there were a larger number of them who took the patents who are incapable.

Mr. HAYDEN. And have demonstrated their incompetence by wasting whatever property they have received up to this time. Certainly no one desires to create a number of paupers who will fall back on the States for support. We should act with due discretion and caution. There will be another Congress, and there will be time in which to base a judgment founded upon experience. Therefore, I think the amendment should be rejected.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] delights in pointing out isolated instances of particular Indians who tell him that they have suffered some wrong. He does not hear the other side of the story. He brings such ex parte statements to the House, and on that kind of evidence asks the Congress to adopt a general policy. I do not believe we should follow his advice.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Oh, I am not asking for a general policy. I am simply asking that the weasel words be taken out and honest words inserted.

Mr. HAYDEN. These are not weasel words. This proviso is frank, honest; it is made to reinforce the term "in his discretion," in line 15, which the gentleman from Minnesota has pointed out. The bill first says "in the discretion of the Secretary," and then, to make it so clear that no Indian can have any doubt about where he stands, we repeat it.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. In other words, you want to double the statement.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Gladly.

Mr. FESS. Is this power of discretion given to the Secretary a nullification of the declaration of competency?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; we are going to create a new state of affairs. We are going to appraise the entire tribal property of the Indians, and to such members of any tribe as the Secretary of the Interior deems competent to care for their own money, he will give them their share on application, making the payment out of the tribal funds.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, at the outset I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] to other testimony given by the Indian to whom he referred a moment ago. Pursuing the examination which was being conducted by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH], the question was propounded:

You just claim an interest in this stock fund?

Mr. MADISON. That is all.

Mr. BURTNESS. How much did you get for your land?

Mr. MADISON. I got $2,000 for 160 acres.

Mr. BURTNESS. Where is the land, near what town?

Mr. MADISON. That is about 14 miles from Mahanomen.

Mr. BURTNESS. What year did you sell it in?

Mr. MADISON. I sold it 12 or 13 years ago.

Mr. BURTNESS. How long after you had the right to sell the land did you actually sell it?

Mr. MADISON. I sold it before I had the right.

Mr. Chairman, I take it that every member of this committee who has given the subject of Indian legislation any consideration joins heartily with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] in his desire to emancipate the Indian as rapidly as possible, restore him to all of his property rights, and set him out in the world upon the same footing as the white man; but as we approach that question we should approach it with the same judgment that we would any other proposition of a business nature. The facts are as has already been mentioned, that many of the Indians who have been emancipated have immediately squandered their allowance and are now objects of charity and dependent upon the States where they may be located for support or upon public charity.

The result of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY], if it should be agreed to, would be to take away from the Secretary of the Interior and the Bureau of Indian Affairs the right to humanely look after the incompetent Indians, and while we are anxious to liberate and give to the Indian his property, yet if there is a man who by reason of vicious habits is unable to take care of his property, surely the gentleman would not say that our efforts to emancipate him should be such as to wipe out all of the protecting care of the Government. Would the gentleman say that a white man under guardianship who by vicious habits had brought himself to that situation where he could not conserve his property should be restored to competency and given his property to recklessly waste it and starve those that might be dependent upon him?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I certainly do believe that very thing, and I do not believe the gentleman would be in favor of establishing a Federal bureau to take care of white people who happened to have vicious habits, or to be wasting away their estates.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Of course, the gentleman from Pennsylvania overlooks the fact that we start with an obligation which we have not yet fully performed, and we are reserving the right here in this bill before we surrender dominion over the Indian to determine whether or not he is in a position to take care of himself before we let him go beyond recall so far as caring for him on the part of the Government is concerned.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Surely the gentleman will agree that declaring a man competent would be to place responsibility upon him.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. I agree with the general proposition. I am just as much of an enthusiast for emancipation as is the gentleman, but I am not willing to say that because I believe in emancipating the Indians I would take an Indian that is absolutely incompetent, who has vicious habits, and is not able to conserve his property, and give that property to him, especially when we know, as we do, that those who are clamoring for Government aid, and in many cases objects of charity, are Indians that have been emancipated. With that knowledge in our possession it would be little less than criminal for the Government to turn the property over to the Indian to be immediately dissipated.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I think this is a good provision and ought to remain in the bill, and I think I can cite illustrations that establish that fact.

As you know, some 30 years ago the Dawes Act was passed which provided that any Indian who receives an allotment of land in severalty and a patent in fee shall be a citizen of the United States. Now, on the White Earth Reservation some 10 or 12 years ago an act was passed providing that all who had mixed blood should have a title in fee. Now, those two acts together made citizens of the United States out of men who were incompetent and caused the bringing of about 1,000 lawsuits afterwards by the Government to set aside conveyances they had made. Some of those Indians were full blood, but most were actually mixed blood. And they demonstrated to a certainty they were not fit to handle the money. Some of them got as high as $15,000 for 80 acres, because there was timber on it, and some of them were separated from their money in a very short time, and quite many of them, I believe, had to draw assistance from the Government. Now, this will protect those who have demonstrated that they are not competent, although they are actual citizens of the United States. I have got, I should say, several hundred of them in my district. Now, I do not believe that the Indian Bureau will be arbitrary about this matter, but I think they will be indulgent, and as far as I understand the present commissioner does not believe in refusing certificates of competency where they are entitled to them, and I believe it will be demonstrated so that he will grant competency certificates to those who are actually competent, and I believe he will protect those who ought not to have the money, and we ought not to accept their resignation from the tribe unless they are competent to do business.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will.

Mr. BURTNESS. If the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is accepted, then it would not be possible for the Secretary of the Interior to decline to pay money even to those who had not received a certificate of competency providing they had received a patent in fee.

Mr. STEENERSON. Exactly. But they do not need a certificate of competency—

Mr. BURTNESS. And those people who received patent in fee as being competent caused the trouble there—

Mr. STEENERSON. Exactly; and as was stated, I think by the gentleman from Arizona, they will be a charge upon the State. The State of Minnesota is interested in this because the commissioner has several times pointed out to the Indian Committee that the Government is not going to support those; they are a charge on the State because they are citizens of the United States, and consequently citizens of the State of Minnesota, and as soon as their funds are exhausted they will be a charge on the State. There are other States, perhaps, which are similarly situated. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: Page 2, line 2, after the word "appraised" insert "who shall be nominated by such tribe."

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this section is to appoint appraisers to value the property of the Indians. It provides for three appraisers, one of whom shall be an employee of the Interior Department, one a member of the tribe whose property is to be appraised, and one a resident of the State wherein the Indians reside. Now, the purpose of the amendment I have offered is that one of the members of this board of appraisers shall be named by the Indians whose property is to be valued and appraised.

Mr. ROACH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I will yield.

Mr. ROACH. The difficulty I see with the amendment is this. I would not have any objection to it personally as a member of the committee, but some of these tribes are not in harmony themselves. They are divided among themselves, and would be unable unanimously to nominate the one to represent the tribe in the appointment of an appraiser.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Well, the gentleman knows that even in my district the voters are unable unanimously to come to an agreement as to the selection of a Congressman in that district, and perhaps it is the same in the gentleman's district.

Mr. ROACH. This is not limited to one district; this covers all the tribes—

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Individual tribes acting separately, however.

Mr. ROACH. Individual tribes; and they are at a disagreement among themselves and they could not select anyone to represent them.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is a point which I have considered carefully. Of course it is impossible to come unanimously to the selection of a delegate on this appraising board, and it is impossible in a congressional or any other district, to come unanimously to a selection of a representative. They would have to be named through the American policy of a majority vote. What it would do would be to square up this policy with the American principle that the best representation is to elect a representative by a majority vote. The Indians on the reservation can come together and a majority vote can be had on the question of selecting a delegate. It seems to me that the Indians whose property is at stake should have one representative out of the three. I insist that the Indian who is to be their representative shall be appointed or selected by the Indians themselves, and that Indian can be elected by any tribe by the use of ordinary election procedure. Most of the tribes have such a system already for electing councilmen, and in this case they could use the old machinery, or else new machinery can be constructed where it is not now established. I appeal to practical men here as a matter of simple justice, that at least one of these men should be outside the appointing power of the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. How long would the gentleman think it would take all the people of the United States to get together on one man as their representative?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Oh, the Indians are not going to come together in Washington to elect a delegate. They are going to elect a delegate on the reservation by the use of the machinery they have already established, just as they elect a member of their tribal council. That is not even idealistic. It is simply American. We should let these Indians whose property is at stake have the privilege of nominating one out of three appraisers. If that is not done, then this is an unjust section and can not be justified.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

The gentleman's amendment might apply to several tribes and work satisfactorily there, but the very one that he has in mind would find it impossible, in my judgment, to select a man from that tribe who would be reasonably satisfactory to the tribe. It is not a question of a majority vote, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania says. There is a council elected, or supposed to be elected, by a majority vote, and it probably is so elected, but the Chippewas as a whole do not recognize any authority on the part of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and it would be utterly impossible for the tribe itself to select a man who would come anywhere near being satisfactory to a reasonable number of members of the tribe, not to say a majority of the tribe. Therefore, I think the Commissioner of Indian Affairs would be much more capable of selecting a satisfactory man than would the council of Indians who are not satisfied.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, this legislation provides for nothing but an appraisal. It does not add to nor take anything from the tribal property. It is only an appraisal for the purpose of ascertaining what the value of the property is, and, if an individual Indian is qualified and is satisfied with that appraisal, he can obtain his share and cease all relations with the tribe.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. And the cost of this appraisal is to be paid out of the Indians' money?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY]. The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILLIAMSON: Page 3, strike out all of line 4 after the word "funds," and insert in lieu thereof "included in such appraisal, and shall be required to sign an agreement in writing to this effect."

Mr. STAFFORD. What page is that on?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. On page 3.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILLIAMSON: Page 3, strike out all of line 4 after the word "funds," and insert in lieu thereof "included in such appraisal, and shall be required to sign an agreement in writing to this effect."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota is recognized.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. ROACH. The word "member" is on lines 4 and 5. Do you seek to strike out the word "member" on line 4?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I strike out everything after the word "funds."

Mr. ROACH. That is not what your amendment says. It says strike out the remainder of line 4 after the word "funds."

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes; the remainder of line 4 and lines 5 and 6.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest that the gentleman ask unanimous consent to modify his amendment if he so desires.

Mr. ROACH. Yes. The gentleman can do that by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I think my amendment reads all right.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, strike out all of line 4 after the word "funds."

Mr. WILLIAMSON. And all of lines 5 and 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks leave to amend his amendment. The Clerk will report it as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILLIAMSON: Page 3, strike out all of line 4 after the word "funds," and all of lines 5 and 6, and insert in lieu thereof—

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk has not finished reporting the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 4, strike out all of line 4 after the word "funds," and all of lines 5 and 6, and insert in lieu thereof "included in such appraisal, and shall be required to sign an agreement in writing to this effect."

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, we have in South Dakota a situation peculiar to the Sioux Tribe that, perhaps, does not exist in any other State in the Union, which, if this bill becomes law in its present form, will not permit the individual Indian to take advantage of the law.

Under the treaty of 1868 the Indians of the Sioux Tribe signed away what was then known as the Black Hills, the richest gold-producing region in the United States, and which to-day has the largest gold-producing mine in this country. Under the act of June 3, 1920, the Sioux Tribe is permitted to bring suit in the Court of Claims for the purpose of establishing any right it may have to recover the value of the Black Hills at the time of the signing of that treaty upon the theory that the treaty was invalid. Now, that claim involves hundreds of millions of dollars, and if this bill remains in its present form it will be impossible for any of the Sioux Tribe in South Dakota to take advantage of the provisions of section 1, because they can not take their pro rata share without at the same time signing away all contingent rights that they may have in the Black Hills claim, should it be determined in their favor. I think this section can be so amended, without doing any violence whatsoever to the general purpose of the bill, that these Indians can be protected in this claim, and at the same time permit them to take their pro rata share in the distribution contemplated by this measure. I believe the provisions of this bill are correct in principle; that they ought to be enacted into law and carried out and that the undistributed property ought to be appraised and distributed to the individual Indians in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is desirous of protecting these Indians in claims which may be before the Court of Claims in the future.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. However, he has left out the last part of the sentence—and shall be dropped from the rolls of said tribe.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. If you drop them from the rolls of the tribe, they could not participate, because this is tribal property, and nobody who is not on the rolls of the tribe could possibly participate.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Would not the gentleman's purpose be attained by an amendment to insert after the word "member" the words "except as to tribal claims against the United States as of this date"? Then his name could be taken from the roll.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. No; these claims exist to-day. I do not think that would reach the case at all. If my amendment is adopted, this paragraph will read:

That any Indian who may be paid the amount of his pro rata share of the tribal properties as herein provided shall thereafter have no further interest in or claim upon the tribal property or funds included in such appraisal and shall be required to sign an agreement in writing to this effect.

I think the paragraph as amended ought to be in the bill, because I do not think any Indian has any business coming back and asserting any rights as against the Government to any property that has been appraised, pro rated, and distributed to him.

This bill, though amended as proposed, protects the Government in that respect, and puts it out of the way so far as all this property is concerned, but does not foreclose his interest in property or its value which he may be able to establish his right to in the Court of Claims, and which from its nature can not possibly be appraised.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. But he will still be kept on the bureau roll?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. For that purpose.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Dakota has offered an amendment that in my opinion is rather unfortunate in a way. As one member of the committee I would have no objection whatsoever to the first portion of that amendment—included in such appraisal.

That part of it is all right, but the gentleman strikes out the words—

and shall be dropped from the rolls of said tribe.

The very purpose and object of this section would be defeated, which is to close up the affairs of these Indians and get them out of the way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I want to state that I do not believe that that would materially affect the purpose the gentleman has in mind. The Indian would be automatically dropped from the rolls of the tribe so far as any appraised claims are concerned, and this would only maintain his tribal relations for the purpose of reaching matters like the Black Hills claim, to which I have referred.

Mr. ROACH. The purpose of this legislation is to close up their affairs as far as possible.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. In my State the rolls have been closed, except possibly as to this Black Hills claim.

Mr. ROACH. The desire is to close up their affairs and drop them from the rolls, and in this way they would never be closed up, if they were held on the rolls awaiting the outcome of litigation that might be filed in the future.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. There could not be any advantage to the Government by having that provision in there. The tribal rolls in our State have been closed already.

Mr. ROACH. We could close up these rolls.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. You can do it under the present law, and they have been closed so far as the Sioux are concerned.

Mr. ROACH. We can not drop them from the rolls as long as they have property coming to them. The situation which the gentleman says applies to the Indians with reference to the Black Hills applies to every tribe of Indians in the United States. Every tribe of Indians in the United States has some kind of a claim against the United States Government. A great many of them are asking for jurisdiction bills, and if we should put anything of that kind in this bill we would absolutely never come to the point where we could emancipate the Indian. We would have him on our hands for all time to come, because every tribe has some sort of a claim against the Government, which they would come in here and propound, and we would never get to the time when we could emancipate the Indian and get rid of him.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Not a single member of the Sioux Tribe in South Dakota can take advantage of the provisions of this bill, if it should pass in its present form, without sacrificing any right he may have in the Black Hills claim.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment, because it would defeat the proposition that we started out to bring about. A man can not have his cake and eat it, too. The difficulty here is that we have provided a means to assess the value of the property of the individual member of a tribe; we have given the Secretary of the Interior the authority, and upon his request, to pay him off and get a receipt in full and be done with that Indian forever. Now, if the Indian believes he has a future claim on some gold mine that may be discovered on the land later, there can be no good reason why he should not consider that at the time he gives his receipt in full for the cash that is paid him by the Government as his share of the tribal funds. All of those things have been considered in this measure and taken carefully under advisement; and after every single contingency has been taken into consideration the conclusion is that this will come nearer giving the Indian what he is entitled to than anything else which has been proposed, and that it will get rid of more Indians than any provision that has ever been presented heretofore to make good citizens of Indians. Therefore I sincerely hope that the matter will be left as it is in the bill and the amendment defeated, and I move that all debate on the amendment be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that all debate on the amendment be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any moneys belonging to the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, such amounts as he may find due any persons of Chippewa blood whose names may have been erroneously stricken from the Chippewa annuity rolls, or who have been or may hereafter be found entitled to enrollment for annuity payments authorized by section 7 of the act of Congress approved January 14, 1889 (25 Stat. L., p. 642): Provided, That any moneys found due and paid to any Indian under the provisions of this act shall not be subject to any lien or claim of attorneys or other parties.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, strike out lines 13 to 24, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any moneys belonging to the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, such amounts as he may find due any persons of Chippewa blood whose names may have been erroneously stricken from the Chippewa annuity rolls, or have been or may hereafter be found entitled to enrollment for annuity payments authorized by sections 1 and 7 of the act of Congress approved January 14, 1889 (25 Stat. L., p. 642): Provided, That before payment is made hereunder the claim of each of such persons for the right of enrollment under the provisions of the act of January 14, 1889 (25 Stat. 642) shall be submitted to the chiefs and members in council of the particular band of Indians to which such persons claim membership for the ratification of the enrollment of such persons."

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. KNUTSON. I do not see how the gentleman can reserve a point of order; there is no appropriation involved.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Then I make the point of order that this amendment carries an appropriation, and this is not an appropriation bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that the gentleman from Kansas has made any point of order to section 2 for the reason he has given. Section 2 might be subject to the same criticism that the gentleman from Kansas makes to the proposed amendment, but not having made a point of order to section 2 as embodied in the bill the proposed amendment is clearly within the right of the Member from Minnesota to offer a germane limitation. We are legislating here and the gentleman is placing a further restriction as to how the money shall be paid.

Mr. KNUTSON. The amendment would come within the provisions of the Holman rule because it is a limitation. And, again, it is Indian money and not Federal money.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But you can not appropriate Indian money on this bill any more than you could Federal money.

Mr. KNUTSON. With all due respect to the gentleman from Kansas—and I have great respect for his parliamentary knowledge—I think he is mistaken.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, as I heard the amendment read hastily it appeared to be of a very much wider scope than the provisions in the bill, and to my mind is not germane in that it includes a different class of Indians and provides a method of enrollment.

The CHAIRMAN. But the point of order is not made as to germaneness.

Mr. HAYDEN. Then I will make that point of order so that it will all be before the Chair.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the Chair is considering the question as to whether the rule of the House applies to Indians or trust funds the same as it does to the Treasury funds.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Oklahoma on that.

Mr. CARTER. The Indian funds are held as trust funds, held in a fiduciary capacity by the Government and this Congress. Any contention that these funds are not subject to the same restrictions in expenditure and appropriation as the funds of the Federal Government is to contend that a guardian or an agent may handle trust funds more loosely and be less accountable than he could his own. It was so held by Chairman Barnhart on the Indian appropriation bill in 1912 on a point of order which had been made by the gentleman from Kansas himself [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There has never been any question as to funds belonging to the Indians controlled by the Government coming under the same restrictions as to appropriations as the funds in the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair ask the gentleman from Kansas a question: If that is true and is carried out, it would prevent any appropriation from tribal funds except by the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is true, and has been true since the Budget system has been instituted. All Indian appropriations have been transferred from the Committee on Indian Affairs to the Committee on Appropriations. A large part of the appropriations carried in the Indian bill are appropriations from the Indian fund.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the Chair hear me for one minute?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Kansas has finished—

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I did not suppose there was any question about that—there never has been. The Indians are appropriated for to-day by the Committee on Appropriations, and it is the only committee that has jurisdiction.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman from Kansas contend that section 2 of this bill is subject to a point of order?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is an authorization and the amendment is an appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. The gentleman from Minnesota uses the same language as that used in section 2.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] to the provision of the Constitution of the United States that no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law. There is no way to get money out of the Treasury except through an appropriation, and it is an appropriation when we take it out in any way. I think the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] is correct when he says that a specific ruling has been made that the Indian funds come within the general purview of appropriations. Of course, the point of the gentleman from Wisconsin that when once an appropriating section is not objected to it can be amended, is well taken, but it must be a specific amendment with reference to that particular appropriation.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But we are not considering an appropriation bill; we are considering a legislative bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to impress upon the attention of the Chair again the fact that no point of order was reserved to section 2; that the amendment was offered without any point of order having been reserved to that section. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] used the identical language of the first part of section 2, and therefore the gentleman from Kansas is too late to raise his point of order, because if his point of order be well taken, it should have been made to section 2 to foreclose any germane amendment that might be offered to it. The gentleman from Kansas is too late to raise the question he is now raising that this amendment carries an appropriation for the reason that section 2 is subject to the same criticism, and the gentleman's amendment uses the same language.

Mr. ROACH. But section 2 carries no appropriation.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is what we have been trying to get into the minds of the House.

Mr. ROACH. Section 2 does not carry an appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Regardless of whether it does or not, the proposed amendment carries the same language.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Regarding the point raised by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] that if an objection be not made to the main body of the section it can not be raised to an amendment offered to it thereafter, the Chair thinks it is not well taken for the reason that the objection under the rule adopted in 1920 is specific that the objection can be made either to the original provision or to any amendment thereto and at any time. There are other provisions which bear on the proposition the Chair has in mind not, however, involved in this case, and the Chair will not take the time to discuss them.

The point of order raised by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is very important and not altogether clear. However, the Chair thinks it is legitimate and within the spirit at least of the rules that it should be brought within the requirement that appropriations are exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Appropriations Committee. It is true that this is not an appropriation from the Treasury of the United States, but it constitutes in fact an appropriation of money from the tribal funds which are under the control of the Government. Being under the control of the Government, it seems to the Chair that the same general rules should prevail and that the matter should be considered and passed upon by the Appropriations Committee. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEENERSON. Has the Chair examined subdivision 3 of Rule XXIII and authorities there cited indicating what bills constituting a charge upon the Treasury or containing an appropriation shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole, and that bills containing appropriations out of trust funds need not be considered in Committee of the Whole, the same as appropriations out of contingent funds? You do not draw that out of the Treasury any more than you draw the Indian funds out of the Treasury. As a matter of fact, under this rule you passed last year a bill disposing of thousands of acres that belonged to the Indians without consideration in Committee of the Whole, because it was not a charge on the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. That is very true, but the point directly involved has been directly passed upon. Some years ago an amendment was offered on an appropriation bill which provided that "no money shall be expended from the tribal funds belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes." A point of order was made against this provision as not a limitation within the Holman rule, the grounds urged being that it was not a limitation on an appropriation from the Treasury. After an extended argument the objection was overruled. The effect of this ruling was to apply the same rule to tribal funds as to ordinary appropriations.

In this case the amendment to the section made provides for payment to certain designated persons out of tribal funds. The objection that such a provision is in excess of the authority of the committee would seem clearly within the rules and precedents. The mere fact that bills regarding trust funds need not be considered in Committee of the Whole would not be sufficient to overturn a direct precedent that direction for payment of tribal funds shall be considered an appropriation. For these reasons the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KNUTSON. Wherein, in this amendment, is the Secretary of the Interior directed to make any payment? The word "authorized" is clearly used there.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was erroneously informed if it is used in there, but that has not anything to do with the main proposition. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk calls the attention of the Chair to spelling of the word "enrollment" on line 19, page 3, and without objection the spelling there of that word will be corrected.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the restrictions upon the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 21, township 25 north, range 24 east of the Indian meridian, in Oklahoma, which is land heretofore allotted to Isaac Jack, Seneca allottee No. 264, are hereby removed, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be issued to said Isaac Jack a patent in fee simple for said described land.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What I may say as to this section, which embodies a private bill which has been heretofore reported from the Indian Affairs Committee, will apply to several other sections of the bill, each of which embodies private bills heretofore reported favorably from that committee. I wish to get the viewpoint of the gentlemen who are interested in this section and in these other private bills, as to whether they would prefer to have this item carried in the omnibus claims bill, and objection raised when the private bill is given consideration, or would prefer to have this stricken out and take their chance of having the private bill go through in regular order.

Mr. LANHAM. I am not a member of the committee that reported this private bill. However, I am the gentleman who originally introduced it. It is included here in this omnibus bill. Speaking personally, I should like to see it thus incorporated in this omnibus bill. I can not see that there could be any objection in the meantime, should this measure pass, to letting the bill retain its place on the Private Calendar and have it passed over without prejudice.

And then, in case this bill was not passed in the Senate and failed to become a law, it could be taken up in order on the Private Calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection, I will say to the gentleman, to this section nor to the private bill the gentleman refers to. I have examined the report in each instance, but I would think that he stood a better chance of having the private bill go through in the congested condition of business in the Senate than an omnibus bill, but if the gentleman thinks he has a better chance in an omnibus bill, it is up to the gentleman.

Mr. LANHAM. I should like to say that that is a matter over which I have no jurisdiction. I am not a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, but they have reported this omnibus bill with this item in it.

At the same time, I can say in behalf of this constituent who is entitled to this remedy, that I should be glad to see it go through either way.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman may have a greater influence with one or two of the Senators from his State if he just merely had one special bill he desired to get through, which could be passed through in the morning hour, than in an omnibus bill which contains legislative provisions that may be seriously contested by certain Senators from other States.

Mr. BURTNESS. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman, I understand, wants to know in a general way what the policy of the committee is. I can simply say that so far as I am concerned I happened to report the bill embodied in section 4, the bill which was placed in the omnibus bill, and I consulted with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], who consented to having it included in an omnibus bill and rather preferred it be, and I want to say that has been the policy of all members of the committee with reference to these bills.

Mr. LANHAM. One word further to my friend from Wisconsin. This bill has been on the Private Calendar for, lo, these many months and we have not had an opportunity to have it considered. It has never been reached in due order, and now the Committee on Indian Affairs opens the door and gives an opportunity for its consideration, and certainly I can not think I should be the one to rise in my place and object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not saying. The gentleman can take either horn of the dilemma he chooses to take.

Mr. LANHAM. It seems to me it is possible to choose both.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman can not have both.

Mr. LANHAM. I can not see any objection to allowing the bill to remain on its place on the Private Calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is entirely agreeable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SNYDER. I ask that debate now close on this paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. SNYDER. We have got to get along with this bill; we want to get through to-night. Let us go ahead and get a little of the bill read.

Mr. BLANTON. I only want to ask the gentleman a question, since I have been recognized by the Chair.

Mr. SNYDER. All right.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman said something about the difficulty of getting an omnibus bill through. It is not hard sometimes to get an omnibus bill through. He has forgotten it has not been but a week or so since the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] on unanimous-consent day got two omnibus bills passed here that involved some 15 or 20 or 30 pages each with numerous claims involving large sums of money. I just wanted to mention that, because usually the gentleman from Wisconsin is accurate.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to say in reply to the gentleman from Texas, those bills did not contain any legislative provisions which might provoke opposition in another body. They were purely omnibus claims bills. This is a mixed legislative bill and a mixed omnibus claims bill.

Mr. BLANTON. They were omnibus bills embracing numerous claims, but through the great influence of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], who soon will assume the dignity of presiding over the great Committee on Rules, he was able to pass them through without trouble.

Mr. STAFFORD. Again I repeat that those bills did not contain any legislative provisions which might provoke opposition of the other body.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in issuing patents in fee to Indians for their original or inherited trust allotments under the acts of May 8, 1906 (34 Stat. L. p. 182), and June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L. p. 855), or any other act authorizing the issuance of such patents, to cause to be inserted in each such patent a provision to the effect that it shall not become effective until after the expiration of 30 days from the date thereof: Provided, That any contract, deed, mortgage, or other instrument purporting to convey the land or any interest therein described in such fee patent entered into with the patentee by any person or persons prior to the expiration of the 30-day period shall be null and void and shall be a violation of the provisions of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L. pp. 855-856), and subject the person or persons contracting with the patentee to the penalties provided in section 5 of this act.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SANDERS of Indiana: Page 5, line 12, after the word "thereof," strike out the proviso and insert in lieu thereof the following: "that any contract, deed, mortgage, or other instrument purporting to convey the land or any interest therein executed prior to the expiration of the 30-day period shall be null and void and the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L. p. 855), including the penalties provided therein, shall be applicable to any person who shall induce any Indian to execute any such instrument or who shall offer any such contract, deed, mortgage, or other instrument for record in the office of any recorder of deeds."

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment not for the purpose of changing the substance of the proviso but for the purpose of more accurately stating the purpose of the proviso. The proviso refers to section 5 of the former act, and did not make it clear that both of the provisions should be applicable to the person who induced the Indian to make the conveyance. I have explained it to the chairman and it is satisfactory to him.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, it has been referred to the committee, and I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to transfer and convey to school district No. 30, in Ferry County, State of Washington, being the Meteor-Inchellum school district, the north 500 feet of lot 5 in section 5, township 32 north, range 37 east, Willamette meridian, for public-school use, upon condition that Indian children shall be admitted to the schools of said district without discrimination, and that any Indian children who are not Federal wards shall be admitted without payment of tuition.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section, a bill of the same purport having passed the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SNYDER: Page 5, beginning with line 22, strike out all of section 7.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That hereafter, in any case in any court for the purpose of condemning for public purposes land included in an allotment held by any Indian under a trust or other patent containing restrictions against alienation without the consent or approval of the President or the Secretary of the Interior, it shall be necessary to the validity of such proceedings that the Secretary of the Interior be made a party thereto; and no final order, judgment, or decree of any court in any such proceeding shall be of any force or effect in default of such notice; and certified copy of each such final order, judgment, or decree shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. SNYDER. I desire, by unanimous consent, to withdraw it for a moment, while the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COLE] offers an amendment which, as I understand, is a perfecting amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLE of Ohio: Page 8, line 9, after the word "effect," strike out "in default of such notice," and insert in lieu thereof "unless the service be made on such Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. COLE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, that is just simply a perfecting amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SNYDER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SNYDER: Page 8, between lines 12 and 13, insert a new paragraph, to read as follows: "That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue a patent in fee for the east half of the southeast quarter of section 35 and the west half of the southwest quarter of section 36, all in township 4 north, range 13 west of the Indian meridian, in Comanche County, Okla., to James F. Rowell, a full member of the Kiowa Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma, who has heretofore received no allotment of land from any source; this to be in lieu of all claims to any allotment of land or money settlement in lieu of an allotment, upon the payment to the United States of the sum of $1.25 per acre."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, this is a new proposition not embodied in the report. I think some explanation should be given to the committee concerning it.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I simply have this to say, that it is just another of these individual matters, the same as the Jack claim, that we had over there. Here is a man who is entitled to an allotment, who for years has been denied it, and he has an opportunity now to get 40 acres of land up in the mountains somewhere, where there are no mineral rights under it, and it seemed to the Committee on Indian Affairs that he is entitled to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. No rights are involved?

Mr. SNYDER. No rights are involved. He lived on it for many years; at least he has a hunting camp on it that nobody seems to want, and he desires to have the land. He is entitled to it, and I know of no injustice being done to anybody or any harm that can be done.

Mr. ROACH. A special bill is pending for that purpose and hearings have been had on that special bill, and the committee has been authorized to incorporate that as an amendment?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of section 12, as a bill to the same effect has already passed the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that section 12 shall not be read. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that it be stricken out. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SNYDER: Page 8, line 13, strike out section 12, beginning with line 13 and extending down to and including line 15 on page 9.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 13. That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be paid at the end of each fiscal quarter to each adult member of the Osage Tribe having a certificate of competency his or her pro rata share, either as a member of the tribe or heir of a deceased member, of the interest on trust funds, the bonus received from the sale of leases, and the royalties received during the previous fiscal quarter. So long as the income is sufficient the Secretary of the Interior shall pay to the adult members of said tribe not having a certificate of competency $1,000 quarterly, and to pay for maintenance and education to the parents or natural guardians, actually having minor members under 21 years of age personally in charge $1,000 quarterly out of the income of said minors, and so long as the income is sufficient to allow members having unallotted minor children $500 quarterly for each such minor, in addition to the $1,000 allowance above provided. All payments to incompetent adults to be subject to supervision in the discretion of the superintendent of the Osage Agency. Provided, That additional moneys from the sources herein provided for, due incompetent adults or minors, may be paid or expended for illness, educational purposes, or investment for the benefit of such Indians, under supervision, when authorized by the Secretary of the Interior. Property purchased with restricted Osage funds shall not be subject to the lien of any debt, claim, or judgment except taxes; Provided further, That all just existing individual obligations of adults not having certificates of competency and minors outstanding on March 31, 1921, and inclusive of that date, when approved by the superintendent of the Osage Agency, shall be paid out of the money of such individual as the same may be placed to his credit in addition to the quarterly allowance provided for herein.

All funds of Osage Indians accruing to their credit under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior may be paid either to legal or natural guardians, or administrators of the estates of such Indians, or direct to such Indians, or their heirs, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior under regulations promulgated by him. Lands devised to incompetent members of the Osage Tribe under wills approved by the Secretary of the Interior shall be inalienable unless such lands be conveyed with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SNYDER offers the following amendment: Strike out all of section 13 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 13. That section 4 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1921, entitled 'An act to amend section 3 of the act of Congress of June 28, 1906, entitled "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1921, be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 4. That from and after the passage of this act, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be paid at the end of each fiscal year to each adult member of the Osage Tribe having a certificate of competency his or her pro rata share, either as a member of the tribe or heir of a deceased member of the interest on trust funds, the bonus received from the sale of leases, and the royalties received during the previous fiscal quarter, and so long as the income is sufficient to pay to the adult members of said tribe not having a certificate of competency $1,000 quarterly, except where incompetent adult members have legal guardians, in which case the amounts provided for herein shall be paid to their legal guardian, and to pay for maintenance and education to the parents or legal guardians actually having minor members under 21 years of age personally in charge, $1,000 quarterly out of the income of each of said minors, and so long as the income is sufficient to allow members having unallotted minor children $500 quarterly for each such minor in addition to the allowances above provided, and to invest the remainder, after paying all the taxes of such members, either in United States bonds or in Oklahoma State, county, or school bonds, or other investments, or place the same on time deposit at interest in banks in the State of Oklahoma for the benefit of each individual member under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That at the beginning of each fiscal year there shall first be reserved and set aside out of the Osage tribal funds available for that purpose a sufficient amount of money for the expenditures authorized by Congress out of the Osage funds for that fiscal year: Provided further, That all just existing individual obligations of adults not having certificates of competency and minors outstanding on March 31, 1921, and inclusive of that date, when approved by the superintendent of the Osage Agency, shall be paid out of the money of such individual, as the same may be placed to his credit, in addition to the quarterly allowance provided for herein."

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. ROACH. I wish to make this point of order, that it can not be offered as a committee amendment, as it is being offered by the chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. That does not affect its parliamentary situation. The gentleman can offer it as a Member of the House.

Mr. ROACH. I make the point of order that it is offered as a committee amendment and that it is offered without consultation with the committee or without having ever been submitted to the committee for its consideration. Here is an amendment offered which covers a subject upon which the committee has held extensive hearings. The committee has reported it to this House in the form in which it appears in the bill.

Mr. SNYDER. I offer the amendment as an individual. I supposed the members of our committee had all been consulted and had agreed upon the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has a right to offer it as an individual member. In fact, he did so offer it, stating that it was a committee amendment.

Mr. SNYDER. When various members of the committee agreed upon time it was understood that I offered the amendment as an individual.

Mr. ROACH. I submit that it was offered as a committee amendment. I am a member of the committee and was not consulted about it, and I think other members of the committee were not.

Mr. SNYDER. I offer it as an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be so considered.

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order until some explanation is made.

Mr. SNYDER. I shall be very glad to make it, but I have not had the opportunity yet to speak to the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have not deprived the gentleman of that opportunity.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, it is quite true, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH] has stated, that he has had no opportunity to sit in the committee and pass upon this amendment. It was brought here when the bill was brought into the House, and the amendment was passed around to as many members as I could find, and different members of the committee, all of us sitting here in this row, put more or less annotations upon it, and time was agreed upon, based upon the understanding that this amendment was to be accepted by the committee, or at least those who were consulted about it, and when I offered the amendment I offered it as a committee amendment.

The only difference between the amendment and the bill itself is this: In the second part of this section we prescribe that the Bureau of Indian Affairs shall be the sole guardian of all incompetent Indians, and that was the way I desired it, and that is the way I think it should be; but in a spirit of compromise we accepted this amendment, including everything that we had in it with the exception that instead of giving the superintendent of the tribe jurisdiction over all incompetent Indians we permitted the guardians that have already been appointed to remain custodians of these incompetent Indians, but only to pay them the same amount quarterly that we pay to the incompetent Indians who are under the supervision of the bureau.

Mr. STAFFORD. To what extent does the gentleman's amendment release the control over the Indians by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. SNYDER. It does not release any control. It makes the control more drastic. Under the present law, if a guardian is appointed, all of the annual funds and all of the trust funds are turned over to the guardian. We found that was being abused, not only by the individual guardians but by the courts of Oklahoma; that is, that the courts appointing the guardians were not careful and did not use discretion. In one case we found where the court had appointed a woman guardian of five Indians and made her husband counsel for the five. We thought it was time to call a halt on that sort of thing. As the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH] says, that had deliberate consideration and careful investigation, and the committee decided to put all the power back in the hands of the bureau, but there has been such an outcry raised regarding it and so many members here have desired to have a modification of it that I put it before as many members of the committee as I could find, and we agreed that at this time it was better to take half a loaf than not to get any, but to serve notice upon the attorneys and guardians for these Indians that we might take this question up again and that next year this thing might be modified.

Mr. STAFFORD. Have the committee or any fraction of the committee at any time given consideration to the phraseology of the amendment offered as a substitute to the section?

Mr. SNYDER. None whatever, except what has been given here on the floor.

Mr. HAYDEN. The phraseology of the substitute amendment is the phraseology of the existing law.

Mr. SNYDER. Certainly, it goes back and writes into the bill the provisions of the law of 1921.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I want to clear this matter up. I do not want to oppose the gentleman's amendment, but I want to call the attention of the gentleman and the committee to the fact that this section of the bill was very carefully considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs and that extensive hearings were held on this particular section of the bill under consideration. As the chairman of the committee well knows, we held hearings covering many days of the sitting of the committee. The original bill introduced was finally substituted by a draft prepared by the chairman of the committee and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, subsequent hearings were held, and it was thoroughly discussed by the committee. It was a complicated piece of legislation to begin with, in my mind. The committee reported that proposed legislation out. Now, it is proposed, in a minute, without some members of the committee having had the opportunity to read the amendment, to absolutely change the original purposes of the legislation, changing the provision with relation to the guardians of the State of Oklahoma, which at present is in the State courts, back into the Interior Department. And the provisions which the Indian Affairs Committee considered important are all eliminated in this amendment, as I caught the reading of it from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. SNYDER. It is not all eliminated.

Mr. ROACH. What about the Oklahoma Indian Agency? The purpose of the original bill was to take the jurisdiction out of the State courts and place it all with the department.

Mr. SNYDER. The State court has the same jurisdiction, except that the bureau has the right to prescribe the amount of money.

Mr. ROACH. The original bill would have brought jurisdiction back into the Interior Department, where it belongs, or at least that is what it intended to do, right or wrong.

Mr. SNYDER. I am not certain that the original legislation would ever get through. I thought we would accomplish this, and it would be better to have a half loaf than no loaf at all,

Mr. ROACH. Does the gentleman's amendment increase the quarterly payment?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes; it is the exact language of our bill, except that we take away from the superintendent out there the right to act as guardian of those who have already been appointed guardians, except to provide that the guardians shall be paid the same amount quarterly that we pay the incompetent Indians under the superintendent of the bureau.

Mr. ROACH. Under the present law you pay $1,000 quarterly to the adult Indian and $500 to the minor. What does the gentleman's amendment propose to do?

Mr. SNYDER. Exactly what the bill does. It gives the adult $1,000 quarterly and it gives the minor $1,000 quarterly; it gives the same as the bill—the minor who is not on the roll originally; that is, children who have been born since the roll, $500 each. That is in the bill. Now, coming down to the guardian part, instead of turning over the money to the guardians appointed by the court we make them the same quarterly payment as the superintendent of Indian affairs makes to incompetent Indians under his jurisdiction. The balance is impounded.

Mr. ROACH. What does it propose to do with reference to debts as provided by the original law?

Mr. SNYDER. The same as the bill provides.

Mr. ROACH. I think it is unfortunate that an amendment of this importance should be offered in this way at the last moment on a bill without consulting all the members of the committee when extensive hearings have been held.

Mr. SNYDER. I think so, too; but it is a condition we must face.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I note in the original section of the bill, page 10, lines 8, 9, and 10, it says:

All payments to incompetent adults to be subject to supervision, in the discretion of the superintendent of the Osage Agency.

That was not in the law that we passed March 4, 1921.

Mr. SNYDER. We struck that out in this amendment.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I think it should be out in this amendment.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. HILL. This amendment gives more individual protection to the Osage Indians than the existing provisions in the bill.

Mr. SNYDER. It gives protection to incompetent Osage Indians who have no guardian which it did not give before.

Mr. HILL. How much of a fund has this Osage Tribe of Indians?

Mr. SNYDER. More than $30,000,000 or $40,000,000.

Mr. HILL. They are the richest Indians in the country.

Mr. SNYDER. They are the richest people in the world per capita.

Mr. HILL. I have understood that some have an income of $12,000 a year.

Mr. SNYDER. They have been paid an annual payment of that amount for several years.

Mr. CHALMERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. CHALMERS. I would like to ask the gentleman why he makes the statement that it is better to have half a loaf than it is a whole loaf. Why can not we get the whole loaf?

Mr. SNYDER. There is another House through which this measure must pass. Unless we reach a spirit of compromise in the bill it will be likely to be killed entirely; we would not only be unable to get the Osage matter through but all other matters.

Mr. CHALMERS. Does not the gentleman think it would be better for it to go through in this way and let the conferees work it out than to accept the half loaf here?

Mr. SNYDER. I am willing to be voted down on the amendment. If the House does not think the amendment is satisfactory, it is subject to further amendment.

Miss ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I am on this committee and have given very careful attention to the bill as originally prepared. I have not seen the amendment as it now stands. This amendment, as I understand it, is for the protection of the judges of the county courts, and for the white guardians of the Indians, who do not need to be protected, whereas, as it originally stood, it was entirely for the protection of the Osage Indians. They are under the care of a superintendent under whom I worked for five years. I know him and he knows me. They say we are "two of a kind"; and they say of him, and I guess they would say the same thing of me, that he knows only two kinds of people in Oklahoma—Indians and grafters. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I regret very much to rise in opposition to an amendment offered by the chairman of my committee, but to my mind there is absolutely no excuse or justification for the adoption of the amendment, and it would be unwise to establish a precedent of this kind. The only thing, then, that this bill would accomplish if we should adopt this amendment, if I correctly understand it, would be to give to the Indians, who are entitled to these distributions from time to time, more money each quarter, and it is questionable in my mind, from the long hearings which we held, whether it would be in the interest of the Indian to give him any more money quarterly than is now being paid to him. That is all the bill would then accomplish, if we should adopt this amendment. Nothing more, nothing less. As has been stated by my colleague from Oklahoma [Miss ROBERTSON], the original purpose of the legislation, when it was introduced, was entirely different from that which the bill would finally accomplish. The original purpose of the legislation was to take those guardianships out of the State courts of Oklahoma, and put them back in the Interior Department, where the committee finally determined they properly belonged, and thereby incidentally save the Indians of Oklahoma a great expense in the administration of their estates.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROACH. Yes.

Mr. COLLINS. Does not the amendment accomplish a saving to the Indian by forbidding the guardianship court from handling more than the incompetent Indian would be originally entitled to, and for that reason the Indian would not permit his property to go into the guardianship court, because he could get just as much without it as he would with the guardianship proceedings?

Mr. ROACH. Oh, no. Let me get this clear before the gentleman: The Indian is paid now $1,000 quarterly out of his funds. The remainder of his funds are held by the Interior Department and administered by that branch of the Government, and $4,000 is administered by the State courts of Oklahoma. He has two administrators over his estate, both of them apparently expensive, but the long hearings before the committee developed the fact that the entire estate could be administered less expensively by the Interior Department than by the State courts of Oklahoma, therefore the whole estate should be administered by the Interior Department, or at least that is their contention.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROACH. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. The gentleman made the statement that they were given more money than they are now given. This provides for the payment of $1,000 quarterly, and the amendment of Mr. SNYDER provides for exactly the same amount.

Mr. ROACH. Certainly; but under the original law Indians receive only $500, and this gives them $1,000; and that is all that is left of the original bill, and that is what I complain about. This bill, if enacted as originally written in section 13, will put the jurisdiction of all of these estates back into the Interior Department, where the committee found that it belongs, and we are striking out that provision of the bill by this amendment and merely giving them more money, and utterly disregarding all of the hearings as to the question of whether we should change the jurisdiction from the State courts back to the Interior Department, where the committee finally decided that it belonged.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROACH. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. The income of the incompetent Indian is approximately $12,000 a year?

Mr. ROACH. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Under the present law the guardian has all that money annually. What have we done in this amendment? While it does not go as far as our bill, we do take two-thirds of that $12,000 away from him and put it into the hands of the bureau.

Mr. ROACH. But you offer this as a committee amendment without consulting all the members of the committee, and by which amendment you put two administrations over the Indian estates, and that is the very thing the Indian is complaining about. What they are interested in is in getting their affairs back into the hands of the Government, out of the guardians' hands in Oklahoma, out of the State courts, and back into the Indian agency.

Mr. SNYDER. But by this amendment we get two-thirds of their money anyway.

Mr. ROACH. How do you relieve them of the expense when you continue the two administrations over their estates, when, as a matter of fact, there should be only one?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROACH. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. How are the guardians paid—on the amount of the estate administered or a straight salary?

Mr. ROACH. They are paid on the commission basis.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. The court fixes their pay. I hate to hear the gentleman make a statement of that character.

Mr. ROACH. They are paid on a percentage basis. The court allows the fee on a percentage basis, and the testimony before the committee showed that the percentage was figured at about 5 per cent of the total amount.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROACH. I will.

Mr. CARTER. Why, it is a flat fee of $250.

Mr. ROACH. Not on all estates.

Mr. CARTER. If there are any expenses in connection with the estate, such as allowance of an attorney, it is to be paid, but the fee of a guardian is $250 per annum, unless there is some additional work.

Mr. ROACH. Those are small estates where only $250 is paid as a fee.

Mr. CARTER. All the same, the estates are the same.

Mr. ROACH. If I recall the hearings before the committee correctly, the evidence showed that the fees as figured amounted to about 5 per cent of the total amount of the estate handled by the guardians of the State of Oklahoma, regardless of whether the law makes provision for a flat fee or how you figured it. A number of settlements of the guardians of the State of Oklahoma were brought in as exhibits before the committee, in order that we might determine the reasonableness of the fees which had been allowed to the guardians by the State courts of Oklahoma, and in some instances the evidence showed that the authority and the discretion of the court had no doubt been abused, but in most instances, I will say to the credit of the State courts of Oklahoma, the Indians have been fairly dealt with in the handling of this money. At least that was the evidence before the committee.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will refer to the hearings held at Pawhuska February, 1920, with reference to these fees, he will find that Superintendent Wright, in answer to a question of Mr. Elston, "What are these guardians paid, a certain percentage of the estate?" answered, "May I ask Mr. Woodward about that. I think they are paid $250 a year."

Now, I know that to be a fact.

Mr. ROACH. Of course, the gentleman is familiar with the State laws of Oklahoma, but what I intended to state was that the court took into consideration in fixing the fee to be allowed the guardian or his attorney the amount or rather the value of the estate handled.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROACH. I will.

Mr. LONDON. Does the law determine the fee for counsel and guardians?

Mr. ROACH. They pay both a counsel fee and a guardian fee.

Mr. LONDON. Is there any determinate fee for counsel and for guardians? Does the law provide a definite fee?

Mr. ROACH. Yes; but here is what I am complaining about—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes in order that I may ask a question on the point that he has raised.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the extension of time for five minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BEGG. Now, if the gentleman will permit—

Mr. ROACH. I will gladly yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BEGG. I think it is vital to know whether or not the fee paid for the administrator is on a flat basis or is on a fee basis. Now, if it is on a fee basis, the statement made by the chairman of the committee [Mr. SNYDER] is an inaccurate statement that you are saving two-thirds of the cost to the Indian by this amendment. On the other hand, if it is on a flat-rate proposition—

Mr. SNYDER. No.

Mr. BEGG. It will be just as expensive for him as it is under the present system.

Mr. ROACH. Let me say to the gentleman that he is inaccurate in that statement that we are saving two-thirds. This bill as originally reported by the committee transfers the estates of these Indians back to the Indian agency and saves the fees collected now being paid to guardians and attorneys for guardians in the State courts, and it is in the interest of the Indian to do it, and this bill as originally reported gives authority to do it, and that is the purpose of the original legislation, but its original purpose will be defeated by this amendment, which has been offered by the chairman without consulting me as a member of the committee, although extensive hearings were held on the bill.

Mr. CARTER. All the expenses of the administration of these estates, whether by the courts of Oklahoma, by the Indian agency or what not, are paid by the Osage himself from the tribal funds.

Mr. ROACH. Absolutely.

Mr. CARTER. It does not save one cent whichever way you go.

Mr. ROACH. The gentleman certainly does not mean for that statement to stay in the Record?

Mr. CARTER. It was made for the Record.

Mr. ROACH. Let me show the fallacy of it. Here is a $100,000 estate. It is to be paid to the Indian quarterly, or $4,000 a year, as provided by the bill. That is paid over into the hands of a guardian in the State of Oklahoma. He administers that portion of the estate. It is cumulative. The department administers and charges expenses of administering the principal of the estate. He is allowed a fee, whether it is a commission or a flat fee. The attorney for the guardian is also paid. The Indian is also charged with the expenses of administration of the principal part of his estate by the department. Now, the Osages came before our committee and asked that this duplicate administration be dispensed with and the administration of his estate be all placed in the department, where, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs said it should be placed.

We agreed to do that by the passage of this bill, and now at the eleventh hour and after having had careful hearings extending for weeks and after having many, many witnesses appear before our committee, at the last minute it is proposed to defeat the original purpose of the legislation for which all these Indians have been bombarding our committee for so long by adopting an amendment of the chairman of the committee without consulting the committee. I do not like that kind of procedure.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROACH. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. How many Indians have been bombarding your committee?

Mr. ROACH. We have had many delegations before our committee. The gentleman from Oklahoma was not even there before the committee when these hearings were held. The gentleman from Oklahoma does not understand what the hearings were about.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. My dear friend, I have lived and was raised among the Indians down there, and I know more about the Osage Indians in one minute than you ever will know. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROACH. Is this the way you propose to pass legislation, to let a committee have hearings for months, and bring dozens of witnesses before them, all to no purpose? We had nearly all the lawyers and half the judges of Oklahoma before us at the hearings of our committee, and we determined that that legislation was wise; and now on the spur of the moment we are told to hand the Indians a little more money and strike down all the rest of the legislation, which was really the legislation under consideration. I do not like to see legislation considered in that way. I do not criticize the committee's action, but I say if that is the way members of a committee are to be treated who have given months of their time to the preparation and consideration of legislation, I do not care whether I am off the committee or on it.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota offers an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BURTNESS offers an amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. SNYDER: After the word "Provided," in line 3 of page 2 of the amendment, insert "all of said quarterly payments to the legal guardians and adults not having certificates of competency, to be paid under the supervision of the superintendent of the Osage Agency."

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to discuss this matter briefly, and I do not want to limit my remarks simply to the amendment I have offered as an amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER].

I recognize that there is considerable force in the statements that have just been made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH] on the floor, and I regret that a misunderstanding should have arisen regarding this matter. I think the Members of the House are entitled to know a little more in detail what the facts are. Shortly prior to the time that the arrangement was made with reference to the division of time in general debate—in fact, while the rule was being considered—a number of gentlemen, particularly the Congressmen representing the State of Oklahoma, mixing among the Members of the House and members of the committee, stated that they were very much opposed to the section that is now under consideration, and a member of the committee, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SWANK], was in fact recognized to control half the time upon the theory that he was opposed to this particular section as written. Thereupon the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CHANDLER] circulated among a great many members of the committee—at least I received a copy of it—a copy of the amendment which he proposed to submit. I know that a great many members of the committee, including myself, did consider that amendment, and considered it quite carefully here this afternoon.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. I regret that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH] apparently did not have an opportunity to consider it as did other members of the committee.

Mr. ROACH. No such amendment was shown to me or suggested to me.

Mr. BURTNESS. I know it could not have been, because the gentleman from Missouri is always fair and could not have made the remarks he has made on the floor if he had seen such an amendment a few moments after 12 o'clock, as other Members did.

Mr. ROACH. Does the gentleman think that is the proper way to amend legislation of this kind?

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I did not take the floor for the purpose of being interrogated as to what the committee should or should not have done. I said that there is a great deal of force in the argument the gentleman has made. The practical question now, however, is, Which legislation are we going to adopt here this afternoon?

The act of March 3, 1921, transferred jurisdiction with reference to guardianship of these Osage Indians to the probate courts of the State of Oklahoma, and there is no question but that some abuses have arisen down there. That would be natural, perhaps, in most communities, dealing as they were in large sums of money, and there is a great deal of sentiment in some quarters in favor of changing the law. But we must remember this, that there are different kinds of guardians. There are good guardians, and there are bad guardians.

Another matter that has been overlooked entirely in the discussion is this, that every incompetent Indian does not have a guardian appointed for him by the State courts of Oklahoma at the present time. In the case of many of these incompetents their money is handled solely by the Indian Bureau, and under the terms of the law approved on March 3, 1921, such incompetent Indians receive a thousand dollars each quarter.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Is it optional now with the Indian that he have this guardian, or must he have it?

Mr. BURTNESS. It is not optional with the Indian. Any interested person can move in the local courts for the appointment of a guardian. The superintendent of the agency testified that sometimes he took the initial steps to have a guardian appointed. In other cases the Indian himself takes the initial step to have a guardian appointed; in some cases a relative of the Indian takes the initial step, and sometimes a lawyer or some other person interested in getting a guardian takes the initial step.

Now, the main reason why people who have other than honest motives desire to become a guardian of an Indian is so that they may have control over his funds. The reason why I agreed that the amendment just proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] was satisfactory to me was based upon this fact, that it would take away from the guardian who now handles a large sum any dishonest incentive that may now prompt him to become the guardian. You take away from him the main money incentive that appeals to such dishonest guardian and he will not try to become appointed. He will not want the job. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York does this. It prevents the guardian when he is appointed from receiving any more than $4,000 per year, $1,000 per quarter, the same amount that is now turned over to every incompetent Indian down there by the Indian Bureau, and that is the amount that in turn will be turned over by the guardian appointed by the courts of Oklahoma to the Indian for his personal and family use.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, may I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTNESS. That is the amount, I repeat, which will in turn be paid over by the guardian to that incompetent Indian for his family expenses. These people are wealthy, and it is the policy of the Government, as established here two years ago and not changed in this proposed legislation, to allow that amount of money to be paid regularly to all Osages—these people who have a great deal of money impounded to their credit—and if this amendment is agreed to the guardian will have practically no money to handle himself. It must all be turned over to the family and all the rest of the money belonging to the Indian will remain impounded with the United States, drawing interest, as provided for in the act passed two years ago and again provided for in the proposed amendment. In other words, if you adopt this amendment it seems to me that you are retaining for the benefit of the Indian, if he has a good guardian, the personal relationship which should, and in many cases does, exist between a guardian and his ward, and by the adoption of this amendment you are doing away with perhaps 90 per cent of the bad features that have arisen down there. It is an experiment, and rather than go the whole way and abolish all guardianships it seems to me that if we adopt the proposed amendment the action of Congress will be a rather strong warning to the people down there in the State of Oklahoma, to business men, yes, and lawyers and judges, if you like, that they will have to act in strict fidelity with these Indians or else all the jurisdiction will be taken away from the State courts and the entire matter will be handled solely by the Indian Bureau.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain the purpose of his amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER]?

Mr. BURTNESS. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER], as you will see if you followed it closely, follows the act of March 3, 1921, except the changes with reference to the amount that can be paid minors and limiting the amount that can be paid to the guardian, as has already been referred to. But in drawing that amendment—I assume it was drawn by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CHANDLER]—I find upon a careful examination of the law, which I have made here this afternoon, that these words were omitted, the reinstatement of which I have offered as an amendment to the amendment:

All of said quarterly payment to said guardians and parents not having certificates of competency, however, to be under the supervision of the Osage Agency.

Mr. CARTER. That is in the original law.

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes; existing law. In other words, I have not offered in my proposed amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New York any words which are not found in existing law, and I for one am not ready to vote to eliminate any words of that sort without more careful consideration than we have given, or can give, to this matter this afternoon. Of course it is plainly important that this provision, or at least part of it, be included, for here under the law you can pay as much as $1,000 a quarter to an incompetent Indian. He gets that money, to do with as he likes; and if the original amendment is adopted without the language I suggest, there will be no supervision whatsoever with reference to these payments on the part of the superintendent of the Osage Agency, and I think it is vitally necessary to include it.

Mr. ROACH. The amendment offered is the existing law on the subject, with the exception that you propose to pay the Indian more money. Is not that the whole thing in a nutshell?

Mr. BURTNESS. No; that is not the whole thing.

Mr. ROACH. What does the bill do except to allow the Indian more money—except to allow him $1,000 quarterly?

Mr. BURTNESS. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, coupled with the amendment which I have offered, simply changes existing law in these two respects: First, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH] states, it pays to the minor allotted Indian—that is, to the parent or natural guardian of such Indian—$500 more per quarter. That is the only difference in the amount in his case.

Mr. ROACH. What else does it do?

Mr. BURTNESS. Then it pays to the parent or natural guardian of an unallotted minor $500 per quarter, so that the parent gets that money out of his own funds for the use of his unallotted child.

Mr. ROACH. It pays him more money.

Mr. BURTNESS. Then, secondly, it does this, which is more important than increasing the amount paid minors. I am not very much in favor of increasing such amount, personally, although I do not raise any objection to it.

Mr. ROACH. The matter of paying more money was a secondary matter with the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARTER. I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from North Dakota be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROACH. I want to ask the gentleman if the matter of paying more money was not secondary and if the primary matter was not the one relating to the State courts and the Indian agent?

Mr. BURTNESS. When the gentleman asks me a question, as he did a few moments ago, which I am now engaged in answering, I wish he would show me the courtesy of allowing me to answer the question.

Mr. ROACH. I should like to be allowed to ask my question first.

Mr. BURTNESS. The next proposition, aside from increasing the amounts to certain classes of minors and providing for another class of minors, is simply this: Under the present law whenever the State court of Oklahoma appoints a guardian for any Indian that guardian receives every dollar which is due to that Indian, and, as shown in the testimony, the average was $12,000 a year or something of that sort. In many cases it is a great deal less.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman kindly allow me to finish this statement?

Mr. ABERNETHY. All right.

Mr. BURTNESS. As a result of the adoption of this amendment the guardian can not receive more than $4,000 for that one Indian in one year, and naturally that $4,000 will be used in taking care of the family of that Indian and the balance of the Indian's income is impounded in the United States Treasury, and dishonest guardians or anyone else will not have an opportunity to deal therewith.

Mr. ROACH. That keeps the guardianship in the Oklahoma State courts, does it not?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes.

Mr. ROACH. And puts the Indian to that expense. Now, was it not the desire of the Indians to put these guardianships back into the Indian agency, and was not that desire expressed before our committee?

Mr. BURTNESS. That was the desire probably of the attorney of the tribe, but of the Indians not entirely. In fact the original bill, upon which lengthy hearings were held and which, I presume, was drawn originally by the capable attorney for the Osage Indians, did not pretend to take the jurisdiction away from the State courts, but in that original bill it was suggested to put the power in the hands of the superintendent to stand over the court and to say to the court, "Even where a guardian is appointed I will do as I like, whether I pay any of this money to this guardian or not. If I want to I will pay it direct to the incompetent Indian." I think the gentleman will agree with me that there were many members of the committee who were rather opposed to that proposition.

Mr. ROACH. The original bill did not have anything in it about an increase in the quarterly payments, did it?

Mr. BURTNESS. I do not recall definitely; it did have something in it in reference to increase in certain cases.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Certainly.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I do not live in an Indian territory, but do I understand the law to be that notwithstanding the State courts appoint a guardian the Interior Department, after all, has supervisory jurisdiction over all funds in the making of investigations and asking for the removal of guardians?

Mr. BURTNESS. That is correct; they have that power under the present law.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Do I understand that this applies to Oklahoma?

Mr. BURTNESS. It applies purely to the Osage Indians in Oklahoma.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Do I understand that the delegation from Oklahoma favors the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BURTNESS. That is my understanding. I do not know whether they are unanimous, but certainly the membership of the committee from Oklahoma are in favor of it and most of the Members outside of the committee from that State.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The Osage Indians are citizens of the United States.

Mr. BURTNESS. I think so.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. They have had property given them by the act of Congress which comes down to their heirs.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. I beg the gentleman's pardon, it was not given to them; they paid for it.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. They are citizens of the State and they took over this land which has come down to their heirs. Now, by an amendment you propose to take away the rights of these citizens of the United States and put them back under the bureau. I do not believe that that can be done.

Mr. BURTNESS. No; the amendment does not propose to change the present law in that respect—

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That law is in the process of adjudication, and I think it will be held that there is no power in Congress to take away the rights of a citizen.

Mr. BURTNESS. Oh, yes; I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania is one of those well-meaning visionaries who would like to see any Indian, no matter how incompetent, if he has a million dollars, get that million dollars at once, throw it away as he sees fit, and then let the State take care of his children or dependents as paupers.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Oh, I have seen Indians as competent as the gentleman from North Dakota who did not have the right of citizenship.

Mr. BURTNESS. Oh, yes; I concede there are thousands as competent as the gentleman from North Dakota. We are here dealing with those who have not certificates of competency.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Chairman, occasionally you will hear an onslaught made against the citizens of Oklahoma and against the courts of that State. Sometimes they are made by citizens of that State. The gentleman that represents the congressional district in which is located the Osage Tribe is the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CHANDLER], a member of the Cherokee Tribe. He was raised in that country, born there, and knows something about Indian affairs. The chairman of the committee, Mr. SNYDER, who has been a member of the committee for many years, is always looking out for the welfare of the Indians; always favoring legislation that in his opinion is to their benefit. Then there is the gentleman here who has been a Member of Congress from Oklahoma every since statehood, Mr. CARTER, who knows more about Indian affairs than any other man in this House. [Applause.] Mr. CHANDLER and the chairman of this committee, Mr. SNYDER, favor this amendment which the chairman has offered.

Yes; I was raised in that country myself. I know something about Indians, although I am not a member of any tribe. I have had experience with the courts of Oklahoma. The county judge in that State is judge of the county court, judge of the probate court, and judge of the juvenile court. If a white man dies and leaves a fortune to his children his estate is administered by the county judge and under his supervision. If a citizen of the Osage Tribe dies and leaves a fortune to his children his estate is administered by the county judge under the supervision of the Indian agent, who is under control of the Interior Department.

Now, there may have been times when a candidate for county judge has said to some person, "If you support me, I will appoint you a guardian of some rich estate." I have been there a long time and I have never known anything like that. The courts of Oklahoma, from the supreme court to the county court, are honest, and look after the affairs of the Indians and administer their estates with the same particularity and faithful supervision as they do of the white citizens.

Mr. CARTER. In that connection, will the gentleman allow me to call his attention to the statement made by J. George Wright?

Mr. SWANK. I was just going to read it. It is as follows:

Mr. ELSTON. It opens up a field of inquiry. How are these guardians appointed?

Mr. WRIGHT. By the local courts. We have a very good law here that is not applicable to the Five Tribes. The local courts here have jurisdiction of probate matters, but the department has authority to approve and to investigate any matters pertaining thereto, and we have a law clerk who gives that his attention. There is a check there.

Mr. ELSTON. There is a double check by the court and also a check by the Indian Office.

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes, sir; and it works very well.

The CHAIRMAN. Which one of those checks prevails usually?

Mr. WRIGHT. They both go together pretty well. I do not recall any case where the court has declined to follow the recommendation of our office.

Mr. SWANK. What more do you want, if the county judge listens to the Indian agent down there? In addition to that, they not only have an Indian agent, but they have a probate attorney as well, whose sole duty it is to look after the affairs of the Osage Indians, and he represents the Interior Department. The estates of the Indians, as are the estates of white persons, in Oklahoma are administered as honestly and as efficiently as they are in any other State of the Union. It does not make any difference what anybody says to the contrary, whether he lives in Oklahoma or not.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I am sure that I would not want the gentleman to convey the impression that I have in any sense questioned the integrity of the courts there.

Mr. SWANK. I know the gentleman has not.

Mr. ROACH. Neither would I want the gentleman to leave the impression that I said that Mr. Wright appeared in the interest of keeping the jurisdiction of these Indian estates in the State courts.

Mr. SWANK. Section 13 of the bill provides that this money can be paid to the legal or natural guardian. The amendment should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS] to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER].

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ROACH) there were—ayes 34, noes 4.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, with right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to consider and determine all legal and equitable claims against the United States of the Blackfoot Blood, Piegans, and Gros Ventre Nations or Tribes of Indians, residing upon the Blackfoot and Fort Belknap Indian Reservations, in the State of Montana; and the Flathead, Kootenais, and Upper Pend d'Oreilles Nations or Tribes of Indians, residing upon the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana; and the Nez Perces Tribe of Indians, residing upon the Lapwai Indian Reservation, in the State of Idaho; and upon the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, for lands or hunting rights recognized as existing in these said nations and tribes of Indians by virtue of said treaty of October 17, 1855 (11 Stat. L. p. 657, and the following), and of July 16, 1855 (128 Stat. L. p. 976, and the following), with said Flathead, Kootenais, and Upper Pend d'Oreilles Tribes, and all claims arising directly thereunder, which lands and hunting rights are alleged to have been taken from the said Indians by the United States, and also any legal or equitable defenses, set-offs, or counterclaims which the United States may have against the said nations or tribes, and to enter judgment thereon, all claims and defenses to be considered without regard to lapse of time; and the final judgment and satisfaction thereof shall be in full settlement of all said claims.

That suits under this act shall be begun by the filing of a petition within two years of the date of the approval of this act, to be verified by the attorney or attorneys selected by the claimant Indians with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior employed under contract executed and approved in accordance with existing law. The claimant Indians shall be parties plaintiff and the United States shall be party defendant, and such suits shall on motion of either party be advanced on the docket of the Court of Claims and of the Supreme Court of the United States. The compensation to be paid the attorneys for the claimant Indians shall be determined by the Court of Claims in accordance with terms of the said approved contract and shall be paid out of any sum or sums found and adjudged to be due said Indians. But in no event shall said compensation exceed 10 per cent of the amount of the judgment nor exceed the sum of $50,000 for all of the tribes of Indians named herein, said sums to be exclusive of all actual and necessary expenses in prosecuting said suits. The balance of any such judgment shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians entitled thereto and draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of directing an inquiry in respect to section 14. I notice in line 16, on page 12, the words "hunting rights recognized as existing in these said nations." That language is rather broad and seems to recognize these claims. I do not think it is intended that we should in any way recognize the validity of the claim.

Mr. SNYDER. To what line does the gentleman refer?

Mr. STAFFORD. Line 16, page 12. Why would it not give the same power to the court if instead of using the words "recognized as" we should use the words "claimed to be existing"?

Mr. SNYDER. I do not see any objection to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not want any attorney going into court and saying that we have recognized the existence of these rights.

Mr. SNYDER. I agree with the gentleman that the language should be changed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my pro forma amendment and offer as a substantive amendment on page 12, line 16, to strike out the words "recognized as" and substitute in lieu thereof the words "claimed to be."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 12, line 16, after the word "rights," strike out the words "recognized as" and insert in lieu thereof the words "claimed to be."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 25, after the word "counterclaims," insert "including gratuities."

Mr. HAYDEN. That is the usual form of legislation.

Mr. SNYDER. I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk omit the reading of section 16, because it has already been passed in the House in another form.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the Clerk omit the reading of section 16. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I now move to strike out section 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 3, strike out all of section 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 18. That unless otherwise specifically provided, the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. L. p. 388), as amended, be, and they are hereby, extended to all lands heretofore purchased or which may hereafter be purchased by authority of Congress for the use or benefit of any individual Indian or band or tribe of Indians.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer as a new section.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized on section 18. I move to strike out the last word in order to direct the attention of the chairman of the committee to the word "resolution" in line 6, page 16, in the prior section. Ought not the word "provision" be substituted.

Mr. SNYDER. I would be very glad to accept that amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 17 for the purpose of offering a minor amendment, to substitute the word "provision" for the word "resolution" in line 6, page 16.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 16, line 6, strike out the word "resolution" and insert the word "provision."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, after line 21, add a new section, as follows:

SEC. — That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized, with the consent of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, to transfer and convey to the State of Minnesota, under such rules, regulations, and conditions as he may prescribe, all the land, with the buildings thereon, constituting the present White Earth Agency and school reserves, upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of the Interior and said Indians and said State.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, this is the bill (H. R. 14000) recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs, with some amendments. Mr. STEENERSON, the author of the bill, is here, and I am sure he will be glad to answer any questions which you may desire to ask.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, this reservation consists of some 600 acres, with hospital fully equipped and school buildings which must have cost $50,000 or $60,000, with a house for the agent. It has been abandoned and vacant for nearly two years because the Interior Department has moved the agency to Cass Lake, and the State of Minnesota is anxious to acquire it for putting some State institution on it. The governor was down here and conferred with the Interior Department in regard to the matter. This bill was pending before the committee, and the committee amended it so as to leave the terms to be agreed upon by the State of Minnesota, the Interior Department, and the Indians.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, a committee amendment, as an independent section following the last amendment which has been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the amendment just adopted a new section, as follows:

SEC. — That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1923, and June 30, 1924, in all not exceeding $50,000 of the principal fund on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, arising under section 7 of the act of January 14, 1889, entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," and the same shall be available and may be expended to relieve distress of any enrolled Chippewa Indian, either in furnishing food, clothing, fuel, medical or hospital care, or other necessary assistance, and the amount of any funds used for such purposes for any Chippewa Indian shall be charged to such Indian and reimbursed out of any moneys that may accumulate to his or her credit; or, in case of death, any part of the amount so charged remaining unpaid may be paid from the proceeds of the sale of any property or from any funds belonging to the estate of such Indian."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order until some explanation is made of this very important amendment.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is the bill, H. R. 13953, introduced by Mr. LARSON of Minnesota, with this exception that the amount authorized in the bill as introduced is $300,000. The committee held hearings upon this matter and decided to recommend the legislation with the amount cut down to $50,000. Mr. LARSON of Minnesota is here; it is a worthy proposition; and, of course, if the point of order is pressed at this time, the chances are that it will be impossible to secure the legislation at this session.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the point of order is withdrawn, has the gentleman any more of these long, substantive amendments to offer?

Mr. BURTNESS. This is the last.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, under that condition, solemnly entered into, I withdraw the reservation.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may change the numbers of the sections so that they will come in proper sequence.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that will be ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 13835) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to appraise tribal property of Indians, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as thus amended do pass.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SNYDER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RECOMMITTAL OF A BILL.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 4137, now on the Union Calendar, to authorize the transfer of certain vessels from the Navy to the Coast Guard, be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs for further consideration.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understand that this is a unanimous request?

Mr. HICKS. Yes; a unanimous-consent request from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the title of the bill?

Mr. HICKS. It is to take certain vessels of the Navy and transfer them to the Coast Guard.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE—REPORT OF DIRECTOR GENERAL OF RAILROADS (H. DOC. NO. 546).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the report of the Director General of Railroads and Agent of the President, showing the progress in the liquidation of all questions and disputes arising out of or incident to the Federal control of railroads for the year ending December 31, 1922.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 3, 1923.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE—PERRY'S VICTORY MEMORIAL COMMISSION (S. DOC. NO. 296).

The Speaker also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Library and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith the second annual report of Perry's Victory Memorial Commission, dated December 4, 1922, which was submitted to the Secretary of the Interior, pursuant to section 5 of the act entitled "An act creating a commission for the maintenance, control, care, etc., of the Perry's Victory Memorial on Put in Bay Island, Lake Erie, Ohio, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1919 (40 Stat. 1322-1324).

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 3, 1923.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, February 5, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

945. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a proposed draft of a bill "To reimburse certain persons for loss of private funds in the form of Liberty bonds of the fourth issue and Victory notes while they were general court-martial prisoners confined in the naval prison, Portsmouth, N. H.;" to the Committee on Claims.

946. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, amounting to $356,480 (H. Doc. No. 543); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

947. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the United States Coal Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for a portion of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, $400,000 (H. Doc. No. 544); to the Committees on Appropriations and Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

948. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the United States Employees' Compensation Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, $475,000 (H. Doc. No. 545); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

No. 1538). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BURTNESS: Committee on Indian Affairs. H. R. 13953. A bill authorizing, for the relief of the distress of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, the withdrawal of moneys from the tribal funds of said Indians; with an amendment (Rept. No. 1539). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington: Committee on the Public Lands. H. R. 10682. A bill authorizing the issuance of patent to Charles Swanson; with amendments (Rept. No. 1525). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McCORMICK: Committee on the Public Lands. S. 3594. An act for the relief of Anton Rospotnik and the exchange of certain lands owned by the Northern Pacific Railway Co.; without amendment (Rept. No. 1533). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BENHAM: Committee on the Public Lands. H. R. 10825. A bill for the relief of the heirs, assigns, and legal representatives of Thomas Johnson, without amendment (Rept. No. 1536). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

The bill (H. R. 13306) granting a pension to Anna D. Gooch; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 13899) granting a pension to Aaron N. Montgomery; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLANTON: A bill (H. R. 14181) providing for the election of certain of the commissioners, of the members of the Board of Education, and of a Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States for the District of Columbia; for the reorganization and future selection of the Public Utilities Commission, repealing certain of its orders, and further limiting its powers, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BEGG: A bill (H. R. 14182) in recognition of the valor of the officers and men of the Thirty-seventh Division who were killed in action or died of wounds received in action; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. DENISON: A bill (H. R. 14183) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell a portion of the Federal building site in the city of Duquoin, Ill.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. FOCHT: A bill (H. R. 14184) to authorize the closing of a part of Thirty-fourth Place NW. and to change the permanent system of highways plan of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. ZIHLMAN: A bill (H. R. 14185) to make an investigation of the needs of the Nation for public works to be carried on by Federal, State, and municipal agencies in periods of business depression and unemployment; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 14186) fixing date for the beginning of regular sessions of Congress; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

By Mr. CRAMTON: A resolution (H. Res. 503) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish to the House of Representatives certain information regarding the shipments of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, consigned to representatives of foreign governments having a diplomatic status in the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a resolution (H. Res. 504) directing the Secretary of State to furnish to the House of Representatives certain information regarding the shipment of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, consigned to representatives of foreign governments having a diplomatic status in the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CANNON: A resolution (H. Res. 505) to pay Arthur Lucas $50 for special janitor services rendered during the fourth session of the Sixty-seventh Congress; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. WINSLOW: A resolution (H. Res. 506) for the immediate consideration of H. R. 11674; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BEGG: A bill (H. R. 14187) granting an increase of pension to Mary Savanack; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BLAND of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 14188) for the relief of Leonard R. Coates; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BRIGGS: A bill (H. R. 14189) granting a pension to William P. Johnston; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COLE of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 14190) granting a pension to Margaret J. De Witt; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOOKER: A bill (H. R. 14192) granting a pension to Annie M. James; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LAWRENCE: A bill (H. R. 14193) granting a pension to Lany M. Brelsford; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 14194) granting a pension to Margaret Donahue; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14195) granting a pension to Clarissa A. Grover; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MAPES: A bill (H. R. 14196) granting a pension to Elisha M. Chilson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MUDD: A bill (H. R. 14197) granting an increase of pension to Mary F. Schenck; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SLEMP: A bill (H. R. 14198) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to cause to be made a preliminary examination and survey of Little Wicomico River, Northumberland County, Va.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. SUMMERS of Washington: A resolution (H. J. Res. 434) for the relief of Harry C. Stanton, administrator of the estate of James and Mary Sinclair, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

7174. By the SPEAKER (by request): Resolution of the board of directors of the American Society of Civil Engineers, relating to war-fraud indictments; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

7175. By Mr. ANSORGE: Petition of Henry J. Gielow (Inc.), New York City, favoring passage of House bill 12091, permitting American citizens to have admitted to American registry without collection of ad valorem duty yachts built or purchased abroad; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

7176. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of District of Columbia Institute of Accountants, Washington, D. C., urging passage of Senate bill 2531, creating a board of accountancy for the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

7177. By Mr. MacGREGOR: Petition of citizens of the forty-first congressional district of New York, favoring legislation extending aid to the people of the German and Austrian Republics; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

7178. By Mr. SABATH: Petition of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, protesting against the cancellation of foreign war debts; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

7179. By Mr. THOMPSON: Petition of 17 residents of Henry County, Ohio, urging favorable action on House Joint Resolution 412, for the relief of the famine-stricken areas of Germany and Austria; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

7180. Also, petition of 37 residents of Henry County, Ohio, urging favorable action on House Joint Resolution 412, for the relief of the famine-stricken areas of Germany and Austria; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 5, 1923.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, in Thy good providence we are permitted to assume the duties that require attention. We humbly ask that Thy guidance may be had and that in every phase of life and its responsibilities we may be able to recognize that Thou art our God, willing to aid us in every perplexity, to guide our steps aright, and to lead us finally into Thy presence. We ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Monday, January 29, 1923, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhues, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 13835) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to appraise tribal property of Indians, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 10 and 25 to the bill (H. R. 13696) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes; agreed to the further conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Wood of Indiana, Mr. WASON, Mr. DICKINSON, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, and Mr. GRIFFIN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the further conference.

SENATOR NORRIS ON A MODEL STATE LEGISLATURE.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD in 8-point type an article by the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], published yesterday in the New York Times, entitled "A model State legislature."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

(By GEORGE W. NORRIS, United States Senator from Nebraska.)

LEGISLATURE SHOULD CONSIST OF ONE BODY.

When our forefathers adopted the Constitution of the United States they provided that the legislative function of government should be composed of a House of Representatives and of a Senate. It would be interesting, but it is not material in the present discussion, to give the reasons why this was done. It is sufficient to know that the Federal Government in this respect was accepted as a model and was followed by all of the States of the Union. The experience of more than 100 years has demonstrated that the two-branch legislature, at least so far as the various States are concerned, has been very unsatisfactory in its results. One of the fundamental requisites that should always exist in any legislature where universal suffrage prevails is to enable the citizen to properly place responsibility either for the success or the failure of legislation.

In every legislature composed of two branches the finishing touches on practically all legislation are made by conference committees. A bill that has passed one branch and then been amended in another one must go to conference for adjustment of the differences between the two houses. These conference committees in all two-branch legislatures are absolutely essential in order that anything may be accomplished. Experience has shown that it is within the privacy of the conference committee room that jokers get into legislation, and that provisions of law demanded even by a majority of both branches of the legislature are sometimes not included in the finished product. When a bill is in conference it is necessary that compromises be made in order to secure any legislation. It very often happens that the most important features of legislation are put into the bills while they are being thus considered. Members of conference committees are often compelled to surrender on important items where no surrender would be even demanded if consideration of the legislation were in the open where a public record could be had of the proceedings. When the bill emerges from conference it is not then subject to amendment. It must be accepted or rejected as a whole. The conference is held in secret. There is no record vote on any proposition decided at the conference. The public is excluded from the deliberations, and the only thing that emerges from the conference is the final agreement.

The individual legislator must then vote upon a conference report without any opportunity of expressing by his vote his opposition to anything that the bill in this form contains. The citizen is deprived entirely of an opportunity to pass a just and fair judgment upon the result. In conference, provisions are often put in and other provisions taken out, where an entirely different result would be obtained if the action took place in the open where a record vote could be had upon all provisions of the bill.

A one-branch legislature would obviate all these difficulties. There would be no way for any member of the legislature to conceal his opposition upon any legislative propositions that come before the body. The citizen would be able to absolutely and without difficulty place responsibility where it properly belonged for every act of the legislature. It would thus be easy to punish those whose records are unsatisfactory and to reward those whose services are meritorious.

It is quite a common thing in a double-branch legislature for one house to shift responsibility for failure upon the other house. Bills are often passed when it is known by those who pass them that the bill is to be killed in the other house, and in like manner bills coming from the other house are pigeon-holed in the first one. Responsibility for failure is thus divided, enabling participants in the fraudulent procedure to conceal their own records and to cover up their own tracks.

In a one-branch legislature it would be impossible to thus obscure the record by parliamentary tactics and proceedings that make it impossible for the ordinary citizen to properly judge the record of his representative. It is not only the unworthy legislator that ought to be exposed, but the faithful one ought to be able to make his record clear to his constituents without the necessity of a long and tedious explanation of the various parliamentary predicaments into which existing conditions placed him. A single-branch legislature would simplify the entire record. The ordinary citizen, without becoming a parliamentary expert, could easily satisfy himself as to whether the official conduct of his representative was satisfactory or otherwise. Adroit politicians would be unable to cover up their practices, but every act would be performed in the open, and the record would be simple and easily understood.

LEGISLATURE SHOULD BE SMALL IN NUMBER.

One of the evils of our legislatures is that they are entirely too large. In theory a large legislature is supposed to give a larger and more complete representation of the entire citizenship. In practice, however, it has been demonstrated that a large membership is detrimental to real representation. We should avoid either extreme. A large body of men, in order to accomplish any legislative results, must of necessity surrender many of the individual rights and prerogatives of its members. Members must deny themselves the right in large bodies, on important matters of legislation, to even offer amendments. They must surrender to committees the right to determine procedure. The very size of the bodies sometimes makes it impossible for the necessary and proper deliberation and discussion that should always take place before legislation is enacted. The House of Representatives in Washington illustrates this point. The Members of the House are, as a class, both able and conscientious. They are moved by the highest of motives and are a picked body of fine men. And yet any constructive critic will say that their work is not only incomplete but is very unsatisfactory and often ill considered. This result comes about entirely and solely from the huge size of the body. In order to accomplish anything whatever they are often compelled, in the most vital kind of legislation, by special rule and otherwise, to deprive themselves of the right to offer amendments and of the right to debate and thus point out errors or suggest corrections, and the result is not only disappointing but it brings about all kinds of errors in the final enactment. Members are thus often compelled to vote for bills containing provisions that in their own judgment are absolutely wrong in order to get what, in their judgment, is right and proper; or they are compelled to vote against bills because, in their judgment, the evil contained is greater than the good. It is true, of course, that in the final passage of a bill through any legislature, members in deciding how they shall vote must weigh the good and the bad and vote as their judgment dictates; but in a smaller body of men there would always have been an opportunity to offer amendments striking out bad provisions and to offer amendments suggesting good ones, so that the record of the member upon all provisions of the bill would clearly appear. If this right were not denied, it would mean better legislation and enable members to keep a correct record of their own positions. It would often occur that if the right to debate and the right to offer amendments had not been denied, bad provisions would be excluded on a roll call and good provisions put in.

The exact number that should be contained in the membership of a State legislative body would undoubtedly vary somewhat with the different States. Having in mind a State about like Nebraska, I should say that the membership should not exceed 20 or 30. This would make it absolutely impossible for any member to cover up his record in any respect or to shift any responsibility. It would enable a citizen to be fully informed upon the record of his representative without the necessity of doing anything more than to read the news while the legislature was in session. Punishment could be meted out to those who deserved it, and the faithful could be properly rewarded. It would give to the State a business administration. It would result in full discussion, complete deliberation, and the highest possible wisdom in the enactment of laws.

SALARIES OF LEGISLATORS SHOULD BE INCREASED.

A State having the kind of legislature I have outlined would be able to increase the salaries of its members. Under existing conditions it is a well-known fact that it is extremely difficult in many instances to secure good men in State legislatures, because the ordinary individual can not afford to leave his business and expend the time necessary to attend the sessions of the legislature. The result is that we not only get a less desirable membership but the good legislator, who is induced to sacrifice himself, must give the greater portion of his time to his private business and never becomes really posted on the propositions that come before the legislature. Existing conditions afford inducements to the dishonest and corrupt, who avail themselves of the opportunity to become candidates for the legislature with a view of recouping themselves after election by their official conduct. There are, of course, many honest and able men who are members of the State legislatures. Undoubtedly, a large majority of them could be thus designated; but it is oftentimes much easier to deceive the honest man than it is to buy the corrupt man. The ordinary farmer or business man who goes to the legislature with the very best of intentions is often deceived by lobbyists and evil influences. He is in attendance upon the legislature but a short time, and devotes the balance of his time to his business or occupation, and it is a physical impossibility, whatever may be his desire, to properly qualify himself for the duties of his office.

A member of the legislature ought to be paid a sufficient salary so that he could devote his time to the duties of his office. This would not only attract better men for the position but it would enable good men to perform better service. He ought to be paid a salary that would command all of his time, and he should, in my judgment, be elected for a term of four years. This term, with the right of the people to recall their representative, would not, in my opinion, be too long.

THE PROPOSED PLAN WOULD BE ECONOMICAL.

The plan I have outlined would not only result in better legislation but it would save money for the taxpayer. If members of such a legislature were paid a salary equal to the salary of other State officials whose entire time is required in the performance of the duties of their offices there would still be, in most cases, a large saving of money on the salary item alone. We would not only get better legislators and not only have the benefit of their entire time but we would do it all with a less cost than under present conditions. Better results for less money would be the outcome.

PARTISANSHIP WOULD BE ELIMINATED.

The members of the legislature should be elected by districts upon a nonpartisan ballot. The business of the legislature of a State is in no sense partisan. The evils that creep into State management and State legislation on account of such positions being coupled up with national questions of politics are exceedingly great. Men are often elected to the State legislature because they happen to be candidates on some particular party ticket, while the duties they are to perform when elected have nothing to do with the national administration or with the welfare or success of any political party. If politics were eliminated, members would be elected according to their qualifications for the State legislature. The State would be similar to a gigantic corporation and the members of the legislature would be members of the board of directors.

Without being handicapped on account of any partisanship matters, they would be able to give the best that was in them for the welfare of the State. Their duties would be mainly of a business nature. How illogical it is to elect a man to the legislature because he believes in a tariff for protection, or because he is a free trader, or because he believes in a Federal subsidy to the national merchant marine or is opposed to such subsidy, or because of his ideas on the League of Nations, or, what is more probable, because he belongs to some political party and will follow that party regardless of what course it takes, when, as a matter of fact, the duties of the office for which he is a candidate have nothing to do, either directly or indirectly, with any of these partisan questions. Why should we not divorce the business of our States entirely and completely from such partisan influences? Why not elect a legislature that shall become a business organization, looking solely after the interests and the welfare of the people of the State? It would not be difficult to have a legislature entirely divorced from partisan politics, and the smaller the membership the more easily would it be possible to make it a business institution entirely independent of partisanship.

THE ELIMINATION OF CORRUPTION IN LEGISLATIVE PROCEEDINGS.

A legislature such as I have outlined would be much more free from corrupt influences than would a two-branch legislature or a legislature composed of a very large number. I know that many people at first blush do not realize the truth of this statement, but I am sure that the candid student, especially one who has had experience with two-branch legislatures, will agree that this is true. The corrupt legislator, or the one who in reality represents some special interest, is always looking for a place and an opportunity to cover up his tracks. The two-branch legislature gives him many opportunities to ply his trade without being found out. He is able to shift the responsibility. Through various parliamentary maneuvers and proceedings, and often through the instrumentality of conference committees, he is able to deceive the honest citizen. If there were no opportunities for this deception he would not be a candidate for the legislature. He would know in advance that he would be a one-term man, and if the recall existed in his State he would probably not serve even one term. But the lobbyist not only deals with corrupt men—he often deceives honest men. In fact, the actual cases of honest men being misled are far more numerous than the purchase of dishonest men.

With the increased salary we would get, to begin with, men who, on the average, would be high class and more difficult to deceive than we do now. The opportunities for deception or corruption would be greatly lessened. The men, therefore, to be deceived would be much less, and the man who would try to practice the deception would be almost powerless, and we would have a legislature that would be untrammelled and to a great extent untampered. A legislature that is known to be incorruptible would be practically free from attempts at corruption. It is said, I know, that a small legislature could be purchased easier than a large one, and that one branch could be more easily deceived than two branches. If the opportunities for deception and the caliber of the membership were the same in both instances, then this statement would be true; but when the possibility of covering up the tracks of those who want to deceive is practically wiped out and when the morale of the membership is raised to the highest possible point of the citizenship of the State, then this argument falls to the ground. Who would say, for instance, that the judges of our various States are corrupt and argue that, therefore, we should have five or six judges instead of one presiding at a trial? And yet if we had the kind of a legislature I have outlined the members would stand as high as the members of our judiciary. They would become as expert in their line as the judges are expert in the construction of laws. Perfection, it is true, would not be attained, but the morale and the standing of our State legislatures would be on the same high plane as our judiciary.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll to ascertain the presence of a quorum.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Glass	McLean	Smoot
Bayard	Gooding	McNary	Spencer
Borah	Hale	Moses	Sterling
Brandeggee	Harrell	Nelson	Sutherland
Brookhart	Harris	New	Swanson
Bursum	Harrison	Nicholson	Townsend
Cameron	Heflin	Norbeck	Trammell
Capper	Hitchcock	Norris	Underwood
Caraway	Johnson	Oddie	Wadsworth
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Page	Walsh, Mass.
Couzens	Kendrick	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Culberson	Keyes	Pittman	Warren
Curtis	King	Poindexter	Watson
Dillingham	Ladd	Pomerene	Weller
Ernst	Lenroot	Ransdell	Williams
Fernald	Lodge	Reed, Pa.	Willis
Fletcher	McCormick	Robinson
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Sheppard
George	McKellar	Shields

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was requested to announce that the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] is absent because of illness.

Mr. HEFLIN. I wish to announce that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is absent on official business.

Mr. BROOKHART. I desire to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is detained at hearings before the Committee on Manufactures.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

GERMAN REPARATIONS.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, since we are likely to consider fully and not infrequently the foreign policy of the country during the remaining days of the present session, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, first, a cable account of M. Poincare's refusal to participate in any economic conference; and, secondly, the British version of Mr. Boyden's now celebrated address to the Reparation Commission delivered on the 9th of January.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

PARIS, January 31.—An important group of American bankers, among whom was an official of the Bankers' Trust Co., as well as representatives of most of America's largest financial institutions, visited Premier Poincare yesterday with an offer to start a world-wide campaign for an international reparation conference to be held in the United States as soon as possible. The proposal was made in the most friendly manner to France.

Premier Poincare replied at length, giving reasons for his flat refusal to encourage such discussions as long as Germany maintained its present attitude. To discuss reparations now, when financial Germany is in no position to pay anything, the premier asserted, would be playing into the Reich's hand, making the reconstruction of France impossible and giving Germany the victory.

France is now in action—"en pleine action"—he said. German resistance, he declared, was a maneuver carefully planned. Had a two-year moratorium been granted, M. Poincare contended, the world would have faced German economic and military hegemony. This would have been accomplished, in his opinion, through the Reich policy of reducing a part of the population—the bondholders—who are expensive and unproductive, to poverty, while enriching and upbuilding the producers.

These now have attained such a position of wealth and security that they could pay all the taxes necessary for Germany's financial reforms and budgetary stabilization, as well as for the improvement of the mark, he said. Then, with a strong financial position, commanding world credit, with an immense reserve both of men and of raw materials in Russia, the premier says Germany would flatly refuse to take up its reparations payments and would coldly invite France to come and take them if it could. France then would be in a helpless position and would be forced to acquiesce.

REMARKS MADE BY MR. BOYDEN AT REPARATION COMMISSION MEETING, JANUARY 9, 1923.

Mr. Boyden stated that not being one of the official judges, as were his colleagues, it would be easy for him to remain silent, but he preferred to assume his own responsibility in his personal capacity as they had assumed theirs in their official capacity. In English and American courts it was not uncommon for a person of judicial education to sit with the official judges as an "amicus curiæ," who though in fact not a judge expressed his own personal view. Mr. Boyden had endeavored to form an opinion upon the judicial aspect of the situation.

Paragraph 17 of annex 2 referred to default and paragraph 18 referred to voluntary default. Mr. Boyden was in agreement with the decision of the commission that in both cases voluntary default was intended.

What was voluntary default? One excuse for nonperformance would be recognized by all, viz, "force majeure," but in Mr. Boyden's view the expression "voluntary default" included other excuses. It meant the doing or the failure to do something, with the knowledge at the time that the action or the failure to act might reasonably have the effect of resulting in default.

There was in Mr. Boyden's view a very considerable difference between the question then under discussion and the question as it had arisen in connection with deliveries of timber. The demand for timber was a single demand. The main reason for the timber default seemed to consist in the difficulties which arose from the depreciation of the mark. These difficulties were of an extraordinary nature, such as had never before arisen in Germany, and it was easily conceivable that the persons who had to meet them did not at once see how to meet them and did not realize at the time that their failure to do certain things promptly would result in default. Nevertheless, Mr. Boyden was inclined to think that even in connection with wood there had been a voluntary default within the meaning of the treaty. The difference between the timber question and the coal question lay in the fact that the coal requirements were monthly requirements. The Germans, faced with deficits in any month, ought at once to have taken whatever precautions were necessary to see that those difficulties, whatever they had been, were avoided during the next month. They had failed to do this, and the deficits had continued month after month.

One further juridical point arose, to which Sir John Bradbury had referred, in connection with the purpose of paragraph 17. In Sir John Bradbury's opinion the purpose of that paragraph was to enable the commission to appeal to the Governments only when the measures at its command had proved inadequate to enforce obedience. That was a perfectly comprehensible interpretation, and explained in a large part the difference between Sir John Bradbury and his colleagues as to the action to be taken. Mr. Boyden's own reading of paragraph 17 was, however, different. In his view the commission was required to report any voluntary default forthwith, partly for the information of the Governments and partly to enable the Governments to take such action as they thought fit. Mr. Boyden recognized that the previous action of the commission with respect to coal defaults had not been consistent with that interpretation, for the commission had not automatically reported defaults as they had arisen. Although this previous practice did not in his view represent the waiver of a right it was, nevertheless, a practical fact which should be taken into account, particularly by the Governments themselves in whatever action they might take.

From the juridical point of view he was of opinion that the argument put forward by the German delegation to the effect that in private contracts a deficiency of 10 per cent did not constitute a default was of no value. The treaty did not contemplate the application of any such commercial custom to its provisions.

With regard to the letter of March 21 Mr. Boyden considered that the commission did not by its terms abandon its right under the treaty to report a voluntary default. At the time when the letter was drafted he had called the attention of his colleagues to the danger which existed from the language used, which had been quoted. He did not remember exactly what views his colleagues then held, but it might be taken for granted that the language would not have been accepted by certain delegates if they had thought that it eliminated the possibility of reporting a voluntary default.

The argument to which the German delegation attached the most weight was that concerning the needs of Germany, as indicated by her importation of nearly as much coal as she was delivering to the Allies. Legally that argument seemed to him to be applicable not to the question of a voluntary default but to the decision of the commission as to the demands made on Germany.

The argument would have weight if used to show that the commission's decision upon the amount of coal which Germany could supply without undue interference with its industrial requirements was incorrect. But the commission's decision remained a decision unless changed, and Germany's industrial requirements had nothing to do with Germany's obligation to carry out the decision so long as it was not changed.

But having expressed his view of the legal situation Mr. Boyden desired to add that several of the foregoing considerations, particularly Germany's need for coal and her importation of coal from abroad, the previous practice of the commission with respect to coal default, and the commission's letter of March 21, had a practical bearing on the situation which would naturally be taken into account by the Governments after the commission reported a default.

The report by the commission of the wood default seemed to him to be very defective. When reporting a voluntary default it was of the utmost importance for the commission to report the extent of the intention which had entered into that default. The commission was the tribunal which found the accused guilty; punishment would be meted out by another tribunal. It was therefore of the greatest importance that the exact nature of the crime should be reported by the commission, so that the punishment by the Governments might fit the crime. Mr. Boyden agreed with Sir John Bradbury that the word "punishment" was not appropriate and that the real purpose of the provision was constructive. The real point was that the report should be made in such a way as to aid the Governments in adopting methods which should lead to constructive results. But it was of equal importance that the quality of the crime should be made plain in the report, whether the results were to be punitive or constructive. The commission in its report on coal deliveries should set forth not merely the fact of default but also the causes of the default and all extenuating circumstances. It was only upon such a basis that the Governments could fairly perform their duty in the matter.

If Mr. Boyden were asked to express in a few words what Germany had failed to do, he would say that Germany had failed to take those exceptional and rather extraordinary measures month by month which were necessary to cope with the difficulties which the experience of previous months had shown would arise.

It was understandable that Germany's opinion of her own requirements should affect her attitude. Her opinion on this point and the facts on this point were both of great importance in connection with the extent of her culpability. In that connection, it would seem, in fairness to Germany, that the report should emphasize the percentage which expressed the real extent of the default—while the default was important from the financial point of view, as M. Delacroix had explained—the percentage of demand which Germany had not supplied was small, and this must be recognized as proving that Germany had made a very considerable effort in a very difficult matter and had attained a very large measure of success.

Mr. Boyden had hitherto confined himself to the voluntary default on the part of Germany and the reasons which tended to lessen her culpability. If, however, he were making a report, he would go further and would deal with the whole question of the failure of Germany in the execution of her obligations under the treaty, and would explain that the conditions imposed by the treaty had been demonstrated by experience to be impossible and that that impossibility had affected not only Germany's financial situation and her financial obligations to the Allies but also her obligations like those in respect of coal and wood. He would further express the opinion which he had already expressed before the commission, that the continuance of these conditions had already resulted in a great loss of money to the Allies and would result in still further loss so long as they were maintained.

RETURN OF AMERICAN TROOPS FROM GERMANY.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I submit a concurrent resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may we not have the regular order this morning?

Mr. HARRIS. This is a concurrent resolution authorizing the appointment of a committee of five from the Senate and five from the House to go to Savannah, Ga., to attend the services upon the occasion of the return of the American troops from Germany.

Mr. CURTIS. Very well; I have no objection.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. What are the ceremonies to be at Savannah?

Mr. HARRIS. Upon the occasion of the return of the troops from Germany the city of Savannah is going to have ceremonies there to welcome them.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 36) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Whereas the U. S. transport St. Mihiel is expected to arrive at Savannah, Ga., on or about February 7, 1923, with the last contingent of American troops from Germany: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a committee of five Senators, to be designated by the President of the Senate, and five Members of the House of Representatives, to be designated by the Speaker, is authorized to represent the Congress at Savannah, Ga., at such ceremonies as may be determined to be proper and appropriate. One-half of the expenses of such committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

SALE OF SHIPS BY SHIPPING BOARD (S. DOC. NO. 299).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the chairman of the United States Shipping Board, reporting, in response to Senate Resolution 421, agreed to on the calendar day of January 27, 1923, relative to ships sold since March 4, 1921, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REINTERMENT OF SOLDIER DEAD.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Quartermaster General of the Army, inclosing a list of soldier dead returned from overseas, to be reinterred in the Arlington (Va.) National Cemetery, Thursday, February 8, 1923, at 2.30 p. m., which was ordered to lie on the table for the information of the Senate.

SENATOR FROM MARYLAND.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented the credentials of WILLIAM CABELL BRUCE, chosen a Senator from the State of Maryland for the term beginning March 4, 1923, which were read and ordered to be placed on file, as follows:

THE STATE OF MARYLAND.

To William Cabell Bruce, Esq., of Baltimore, Md., greeting:

Be it known that the people of the State of Maryland, reposing great trust and confidence in your integrity and wisdom, did, on the 7th day of November, 1922, elect you a Member of the Senate of the United States; you are, therefore, to execute the said office justly, honestly, diligently, and faithfully, according to law, and hold the same for a term of six years from the 4th day of March 1923, or until you shall be duly discharged therefrom.

Given under my hand and the great seal of Maryland, at the city of Annapolis, on the 1st day of December, in the year of our Lord 1922.

[SEAL.]

By the governor:

ALBERT C. RITCHIE.

PHILIP B. PERLMAN, Secretary of State.

SENATOR FROM MONTANA.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I present the credentials of BURTON K. WHEELER, Senator elect from the State of Montana, which I ask may be read and placed on file.

The credentials were read and ordered to be placed on file, as follows:

IN THE NAME AND BY THE AUTHORITY OF THE STATE OF MONTANA.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Know ye that I, Joseph M. Dixon, Governor of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that at a general election held in the State of Montana on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1922, pursuant to section 531 of the Revised Codes of the said State, BURTON K. WHEELER was duly elected to the office of United States Senator in and for the State of Montana, he having received the highest number of votes for said office as appears from a certified copy of the abstract of votes cast at said election now on file in my office.

And by virtue of the power vested in me by the Constitution, and in pursuance of the laws, I do hereby commission him, the said BURTON K. WHEELER, to be United States Senator, hereby authorizing and empowering him to execute and discharge all and singular the duties appertaining to said office, and enjoy all the privileges and immunities thereof for a period of six years, beginning March 4, 1923.

In testimony whereof I have herewith subscribed my hand and caused the great seal of the State of Montana to be affixed at Helena, Mont., the 15th day of December, in the year of our Lord 1922, and in the one hundred and forty-seventh year of the independence of the United States of America.

[SEAL.]

By the governor:

JOS. M. DIXON.

C. T. STEWART, Secretary of State.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CURTIS presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 6, relating to certain claims of citizens of Kansas against the Government of the United States for losses of cattle on account of Texas fever.

Whereas many citizens of the State of Kansas are interested in claims pending against the Government of the United States which must be allowed by Congress; and

Whereas said claims grew out of losses of live stock infected by Texas fever by reason of the negligence of the Government in allowing the same to be transported in interstate commerce into the State of Kansas without proper inspection and preventive means being used; and

Whereas said claims amounting to more than $225,000 have been recommended to be paid by the Secretary of Agriculture, and proof has been made satisfactory to said Secretary and the committee of Congress of said claims in said amount; and

Whereas Senate bill No. 854 has passed the United States Senate and has been reported favorably by the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives for passage, and is now on the House Calendar awaiting its turn for action; and

Whereas in the event that said bill fails to be enacted at the present session of Congress a vast amount of time and effort would be necessary to secure the advancement of a like measure to the position now held by said Senate bill No. 854, and there would be lost the effort and expense which has been expended by said citizens of Kansas in prosecuting said claims in the past and grave danger of the failure of said bill at another session of Congress: Be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Kansas and the House of Representatives concurring therein, That the Senators of the United States and Representatives in Congress from the State of Kansas are hereby earnestly requested to use their best endeavors to secure consideration of said Senate bill at the present session of Congress, and to secure its enactment into law and the allowance of said claims; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of Kansas.

I hereby certify that the above concurrent resolution originated in the Senate and passed that body January 19, 1923.

BEN S. PAULIN,
President of the Senate.
ARTHUR S. MCKAY,
Secretary of the Senate.

Passed the House January 31, 1923.

CHAS. E. MANN,
Speaker of the House.
LISLE MCELHINNEY,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Approved February 1, 1923.

JONATHAN M. DAVIS, Governor.

Mr. WALSH of Montana presented the following memorial of the Legislature of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Senate Resolution 5, introduced by committee on agriculture,
GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY PROJECT.

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of Montana (the House of Representatives concurring therein):

Whereas the great and natural resources of the State of Montana are as yet undeveloped, and said State is dependent upon agriculture for its prosperity, and agriculture being the fundamental basis for prosperity in all Northwest States; and

Whereas in a large measure, if not entirely, the price of agricultural products is dependent upon foreign markets; and

Whereas the present rates for transportation of such products are too high to be in just proportion to the prices received therefor at terminal markets, and thus a tendency to curtail the production of the staple articles of agriculture needed by all people in all lands; and

Whereas the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project, if completed and perfected, will furnish to the people of the State of Montana a cheaper method of transportation of their products to foreign markets, thus assuring them a higher revenue for the same: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Eighteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That we do hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States, and respectfully urge that Congress take immediate action toward the passage of such laws or law, which will make possible the early completion and perfection of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate send a copy of this resolution to the President of the United States and the President of the Senate, and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and of North Dakota and Minnesota Legislatures, respectively, also to our Members in Congress.

Mr. WALSH of Montana presented the following memorial of the Legislature of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

To His Excellency the President of the United States, the honorable Senators and Representatives in Congress of the United States, and the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau of Washington, D. C.:

Your memorialists, the members of the Eighteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, respectfully represent:

Whereas the United States Government has, through its administrative agency, the United States Veterans' Bureau, established at Fort William Henry Harrison, a military reservation near Helena, Mont., a veterans' hospital known as United States Veterans' Bureau Hospital No. 72, for the care and treatment of wounded and disabled veterans of the late war between the United States of America and the Imperial Governments of Germany and Austria-Hungary; and

Whereas said United States Veterans' Bureau Hospital No. 72 has up to this time been used and employed solely as an observation hospital and as a general hospital for the care and treatment of such disabled soldiers and veterans; and

Whereas the said hospital No. 72 at Fort William Henry Harrison is the only establishment within the State of Montana for the hospitalization, care, treatment, and nursing of wounded and disabled soldiers and veterans within the State of Montana, and great cost and expense is occasioned and incurred by sending certain types of patients out of Montana to other hospital units maintained by said bureau in the United States, in particular patients threatened or afflicted with tuberculosis and patients suffering from psychoneurotic diseases and disabilities; and

Whereas veteran patients suffering from said disabilities are now cared for on contract at the Montana State Hospital, at Warm Springs, Mont., and the Montana State Tuberculosis Sanitarium, at Galen, Mont.; and

Whereas the climatic conditions obtaining at and near Fort William Henry Harrison aforesaid make said point peculiarly adapted to the treatment of tuberculosis cases, and likewise well suited, from the standpoint of environment, for the treatment of psychoneurotic diseases; and it is the established opinion of well-informed medical experts that if a tuberculosis patient intends to live and spend his life at altitudes such as are found within the State of Montana, and in areas where climatic conditions are the same as in Montana, said tubercular patients must be cured, if at all, at such altitudes and under such climatic conditions; and

Whereas the State of Montana furnished a larger quota of men, in proportion to actual population, to the military and naval forces of the United States during the late war than any other State, and as a consequence has had returned to it many hundreds of wounded and disabled veterans, there being at the present time in Montana about 500 cases of active tuberculosis and about 900 cases of neurotic disability directly caused by or aggravated by military and naval service; and

Whereas said hospital No. 72 at Fort William Henry Harrison has already been enlarged and fitted at a great expenditure of money to accommodate tubercular and psychoneurotic cases; and both medical and economical considerations urgently persuade to the use of these accommodations for their intended purposes, but said types of cases have scarcely been accepted thereat; and

Whereas every reason and inducement exists for treating and caring for all of Montana's veterans, suffering from any type of disability or wound or wounds, at the said veterans' hospital No. 72 within the State of Montana: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of the Eighteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana in regular session assembled, That we do hereby memorialize the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau of Washington, D. C., and respectfully urge upon him that he immediately authorize the full use and employment of the said hospital No. 72, now under his jurisdiction, so that said hospital may, on or before the 1st day of February, 1923, accommodate all the tubercular cases of veterans originating in district 10 and all the psychoneurotic cases of veterans originating in the district 10, and, in general, all and every type of case or disability of Montana veterans, to the end that it may not be necessary to send said veterans, at great expense and at probable injury to their chances for recovery, to other sections of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house forthwith transmit a copy of this memorial to the President of the United States and to each of the Senators and to each of the Representatives from Montana in the Congress of the United States and to such other persons as the speaker of the house may designate.

CALVIN CRUMBAKER,
Speaker of the House.
JAMES A. SHOEMAKER,
Chief Clerk.

Mr. NELSON presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Resolution.

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota, now in session, That we are of the opinion that branch banking would be especially detrimental to rural banks, and that if the policy of the Comptroller of the Currency in permitting the establishing of branch banks is continued it will become a serious menace to the continuation of the present system of independent banking as practiced in the United States, a system that has contributed very materially to the rapid development of our country; it is further

Resolved, That we are opposed to branch banking for the following reasons:

1. Our present system of independent banking is adequate to the individual bank.
2. The individual bank would lose its identity.
3. Branch banking is monopolistic in its operation and not for the best interests of local communities.
4. That the centralization of the credit power in the hands of the few would result in the destruction of industry and the depopulating of the rural districts.
5. The laws of our State do not permit State banks to operate branches and no national bank should receive privileges not accorded to State institutions; be it further

Resolved, That the State of Minnesota adhere to its present laws prohibiting the transaction of banking business by any bank in this State through branch banks or by means of branch banks, and calls upon the Congress of the United States and the executive officers of the United States Government having in charge the enforcement of the banking laws to adhere to the policy of the State in the transaction of the banking business in this State by national banking associations, to the end that there may be no conflict in this State between the policy and laws of the Federal Government and the policy and laws of the State of Minnesota; and be it further

Resolved, That the attention of the Comptroller of the Currency is hereby called to the fact that national banks are conducting business in part by the establishment and operation of branch banks in the city of their domicile, and we hereby most respectfully call upon the Comptroller of the Currency to cause said banks to desist from the operation of their said branch banks and refrain from the establishment of other or further branch banks; and be it further

Resolved, That we hereby petition the President of the United States to direct the Comptroller of the Currency to cause said branch banks in the State of Minnesota to be suspended and closed and to prosecute or cause to be prosecuted any and all such actions as may be found necessary therefor; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be promptly forwarded to the President of the United States, to the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States, and to each Member of the Congress from the State of Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of sundry Chippewa Indians of White Earth, Minn., praying for the passage of legislation granting a per capita distribution of their individual funds in the Treasury to the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. LODGE presented a resolution adopted by the board of aldermen of the city of Medford, Mass., favoring the passage of legislation placing an embargo on the shipment of coal from the United States to Canada, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Clinton, Worcester, North Adams, Fitchburg, and Leominster, all in the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against the passage of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. KEYES presented a resolution adopted at the annual meeting of the Union Congregational Church, of Bartlett, N. H., favoring an amendment to the Constitution regulating child labor, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LADD presented a petition of sundry citizens of Hurdsfield, N. Dak., praying for the passage of legislation extending immediate aid to the famine-stricken peoples of the German and Austrian Republics, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KENDRICK presented a resolution of the Fort McKinney National Farm Loan Association, of Buffalo, Wyo., both approving and disapproving of certain proposed amendments of the Federal farm loan act, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution of the Lambs Club of Kemmerer, Wyo., favoring the passage of the so-called Towner-Sterling educational bill and the Sterling-Lehlbach reclassification bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a communication in the nature of a petition from sundry citizens of Wyoming, praying for the prompt passage of the so-called Sterling-Lehlbach bill providing for reclassification of positions and salaries in the Federal civil service, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Helen Gould Auxiliary, No. 8, United Spanish War Veterans, of Laramie, Wyo., favoring the passage of legislation extending the benefits of the war risk insurance act to disabled veterans of all wars, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions of Surat Grotto, M. O. V. P. E. R., of Cheyenne, and Casper Lodge, No. 1182, Loyal Order of Moose, of Casper, both in the State of Wyoming, favoring the setting aside of a week to be known as national antinarcotic week, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McNARY, from the Committee on Manufactures, submitted a report (No. 1087) to accompany the bill (S. 4399) to fix standards for hampers, round stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables, and for other purposes, heretofore reported by him.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred the bill (S. 4447) to establish standards for anthracite coal shipped in interstate or foreign commerce, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4464) in reference to a national military park at Yorktown, Va., reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1088) thereon.

ARKANSAS RIVER BRIDGE, ARKANSAS.

Mr. CARAWAY. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 4439) to revive and to reenact an act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta, Ark.," approved October 6, 1917. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 1, after the word "authorized," to strike out "may," and in line 2, after the word "approval," to insert "thereof," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved October 6, 1917, granting the consent of Congress for the county of Pulaski, in the State of Arkansas, its successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River at the city of Little Rock on the site now occupied by the free highway bridge constructed by said county in the years 1896 and 1897 be, and the same is hereby, revived and reenacted: Provided, That this act shall be null and void unless the actual construction of the bridge hereby authorized be commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of approval thereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to revive and to reenact an act entitled 'An act granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta,' approved October 6, 1917."

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on February 3, 1923, they presented to the President of the United States the bill (S. 4390) to amend the last paragraph of section 10 of the Federal reserve act as amended by the act of June 3, 1922.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 4477) to amend sections 3, 4, 9, 12, 15, 21, 22, and 25 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. GOODING:

A bill (S. 4478) to promote agriculture by stabilizing the price of wheat; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 4479) for the relief of Rose City Cotton Oil Mill and others (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 4480) for the relief of John Dzikowicz; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 4481) for the relief of Herbert G. Black, owner of the schooner Oakwoods (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BURSUM:

A bill (S. 4482) granting a pension to Leandra Montoya de Pfeiffer; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BORAH:

A bill (S. 4483) providing the number of judges which shall concur in holding an act of Congress unconstitutional; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. NORBECK:

A bill (S. 4484) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Zimmerman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 4485) conferring jurisdiction upon certain courts of the United States to hear and determine the claim of the owner of the steamship Almirante against the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Claims.

BLANCHE WINTERS.

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 11397) to authorize appropriations for the relief of certain officers of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4305) granting an increase of pension to certain soldiers of the Mexican War and Civil War and their widows and minor children, widows of the War of 1812, Army nurses, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

On motion of Mr. LODGE, and by unanimous consent, it was—Ordered, That the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] be excused from further service as a member of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate and that the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] be assigned to service thereon.

PURCHASE AND SALE OF FARM PRODUCTS.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent for the reprinting, for the use of the Senate document room, of 1,000 copies of Senate bill 4050, providing for the purchase and sale of farm products, as the same was reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, in the month of December, 1920, the attention of the Senate was called to certain charges which were made against the Department of Justice in connection with what were known as the "red raids." The matter was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for investigation and report. It was referred by the committee to a subcommittee, which took testimony for some months. The subcommittee were unable to agree upon the report and were eventually discharged by the order of the full committee. Thereupon, however, I, a member of the subcommittee, submitted a report to the committee, and another report was submitted by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], also a member of the subcommittee, to which subsequently I replied.

Recently a motion was made before the committee that the report submitted by myself be reported to the Senate as the report of the committee. That motion was defeated by the following vote:

Yeas—BORAH, NORRIS, ASHURST, and WALSH.

Nays—DILLINGHAM, STERLING, ERNST, SHORTRIDGE, OVERMAN, SHIELDS, and NELSON.

Absent and not voting—COLT, BRANDEGEE, CUMMINS, REED of Missouri, and CULBERSON.

Thereupon the committee resolved that no report be made to the Senate upon the subject. I ask unanimous consent that the various reports referred to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I did not quite understand the request of the Senator from Montana. Does the Senator desire that all the reports submitted to the committee may be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is my request that all the reports which were submitted to the committee shall be printed in the RECORD and that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

There being no objection, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of the subject and the reports were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHARGES OF ILLEGAL PRACTICES OF THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Mr. WALSH of Montana, from the Subcommittee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report on "Report upon the illegal practices of the United States Department of Justice," made by a committee of lawyers on behalf of the National Popular Government League, and a memorandum describing the personnel of the committee:

The subcommittee, as a part of the duty imposed upon it under the resolution of the Senate (66th Cong., 3d sess., Dec. 10, 1920), pursuant to which it acted, inquired into certain charges of illegal practices made against the Department of Justice in a pamphlet purporting to be a report by a committee of lawyers appointed by the National Popular Government League. For the greater part, the matters complained of relate to the arrest of aliens with a view to their deportation and to the proceedings had to that end. To some extent, at least, the report is founded upon affidavits of the persons arrested and their friends and sympathizers, reciting oppressive or abusive conduct on the part of the officers making the arrest or charged with the enforcement of the law or to the unwholesome character of the quarters in which the prisoners were incarcerated or detained. It was assumed by the committee that charges of such a nature would be met with denials on the part of the officers involved, as they were in many instances, if not in all, those to which specific reference is made in the report.

The committee was not impressed with the view that any good purpose would be subserved by a searching inquiry into the acts of subordinates not appearing to be countenanced or authorized by their superiors, and accordingly made no special effort to follow that line of inquiry. So far as it has been pursued, the committee finds no reason to believe that the prisoners were subjected to any ill treatment or underwent any discomforts not incident to the conditions under which the proceedings were prosecuted, as hereafter detailed. Some of them were of that class that rancorously array themselves against all government and cultivate faultfinding with its ministers as a fine art.

More serious are the accusations touching the general character and conduct of the so-called raids through which most of the arrests were made, of usurpation by the Department of Justice in connection with the same, and of flagrant disregard of the constitutional rights of those against whom they were directed.

Between November 1, 1919, and April 26, 1920, warrants were issued by the Department of Labor for the arrest, with a view to their deportation, of approximately 6,350 aliens who were alleged to be in this country in violation of the law. Approximately 3,000 arrests were made of persons named in such warrants. Others, in considerable number not definitely fixed in the testimony, ascertained speedily to be citizens, were taken into custody in connection with the arrests of the aliens and more or less promptly discharged. (Testimony, pp. 312-783.) The total number of arrests, it is quite likely, exceeded 10,000. Of the 3,000 imprisoned, 762, at the last report before the committee, had been ordered deported, the warrants were canceled by the Secretary of Labor in 1,293 cases, and after some eight months or more approximately 1,000 still awaited final disposition. (Id.)

Most of the arrests were made in the course of the "raids," the most fruitful of which were those directed against the Union of Russian Workers in November, 1919, and against the Communist Party and the Communist Labor Party on January 2, 1920. These were carried out simultaneously in many of the larger cities and industrial centers of the Union—Boston and vicinity, Paterson and the adjacent towns, Buffalo, Detroit, and Chicago. The unusually large haul of January 2, 1920, arose from the apprehension of all persons attending meetings of the proscribed parties being held on the night of that day, the meetings having been called at the particular time at which they were held by the procurement of "under cover" agents of the Department of Justice acting under explicit directions in that respect from Washington. In and about Boston from 600 to 1,200 arrests were made; apparently no accurate record was kept (testimony, p. 53); in Detroit about 800 (testimony, p. 720); in Buffalo 150 (testimony, p. 783).

The proceedings were founded upon the statute of 1918, which subjects to deportation "aliens who are members of or affiliated with an organization that entertains a belief in, teaches, or advocates the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or of all forms of law." The organizations referred to were held by the Department of Justice to be within the class thus proscribed and the warrants were issued upon that basis.

In specific instances it was charged further that the alien proceeded against was an anarchist, or that he believed in or advocated the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or allegations were made bringing him under some other provision of the statute, but in all or substantially all the cases membership in the proscribed organization was charged, prima facie evidence of that fact was regarded as sufficient ground for holding him, and proof sufficient to establish the fact made a case for deportation. A circular containing instructions from the Department of Justice to the officers under whose immediate direction the "raids" of January 2, 1920, were conducted disclosed that they were directed against all members of the Communist Party and the Communist Labor Party, whether the person proceeded against had brought himself under other provisions of the statute or not.

We forbear from any inquiry and refrain from the expression of any opinion as to whether any of the organizations condemned by the Department of Justice do, in fact, believe in, teach, or advocate the overthrow, by force or violence, of the Government of the United States, as charged. We shall assume for the purpose of this discussion that they do. The Department of Labor must have held, perhaps without mature consideration, that they, each of them, do, since it issued warrants in large numbers founded on that fact alone. Subsequently it ruled, however, that the Communist Labor Party does not fall under the ban of the statute, its conclusion being supported in an opinion by the Assistant Secretary, in which the question was canvassed at length and distinctions deemed important, between its principles and teaching and those of the Communist Party, pointed out. On this important question Anderson, one of the judges of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the First Circuit, and Knox, district judge for the Southern District of New York, reached diametrically opposite conclusions, the former holding that neither of the parties named teaches or advocates the overthrow of the Government by force, the latter that the Communist Party at least does. The Circuit Court of Appeals for the First Circuit has since the above report was prepared held that the Communist Party comes under the ban of the statute reversing the order made by Judge Anderson. The question is now pending on appeal, but, regardless of what may be the ultimate outcome, the Department of Justice is fully justified in the position taken by it with respect to the character of the Communist Party, judged by the standard of the statute, both by the decision of Judge Knox and the informed conclusion of the Department of Labor. Nor is it to be censured for having judged adversely with reference to the Communist Labor Party, seeing that both the Assistant Secretary of Labor and Judge Anderson felt impelled to examine critically the claim of immunity asserted on behalf of its members, so ambiguous were the authoritative expressions of its policy and purposes. The offense of the department, so far as it has been guilty of any offense, to be judged by what follows, does not lie in that direction. The question confronts the investigator at the outset as to the existence of any authority whatever in the Department of Justice in the premises whether any of its acts in connection with these wholesale arrests have the sanction of the law.

The administration of the immigration laws, including all proceedings for the deportation of aliens, is reposed by the acts of Congress not in the Department of Justice but in the Department of Labor. They were, for the greater part, made in response to a popular demand for the protection of labor against ruinous competition from foreign elements accustomed to and content with a standard of living lower than that reasonably demanded and generally enjoyed by the American laboring man. In its inception this legislation was aimed largely at Chinese immigration and the evils of contract labor.

With such an origin and such a purpose it was quite reasonable that Congress should intrust its enforcement to the Department of Labor, and as those dangerous characters whose insidious and destructive activities the newer provisions of the law were intended to meet and overcome almost invariably addressed themselves to the wage-workers, of whose welfare they professed themselves exceptionally solicitous, there appeared to Congress no reason for any change in the policy which had theretofore been pursued. It was, apparently, still believed that the Department of Labor could and would more understandingly and more sympathetically administer the law, welcoming the immigrant coming with honest purpose and regard for the law into the ranks of labor and sternly excluding those whose presence the law declared to be inimical to the interest of those with whom they sought to associate themselves or to the safety of the country. Moreover, the proceedings provided for by the law for determining whether an alien is entitled to enter or to remain in the country after he has entered are not criminal, or even judicial, strictly speaking, in their nature, but administrative. Accordingly, the privileges guaranteed by the Constitution to defendants in criminal proceedings can not be claimed, as a matter of right, by an alien proceeded against under the immigration laws. Such proceedings, accordingly, are beyond the scope of the duties with which the Department of Justice is ordinarily charged—outside of its legitimate sphere—in a field into which Congress has not deemed it wise to require or authorize that department to enter.

Its force is trained in the methods pursued in running down criminals and in bringing them to justice, prone by the experience of their daily lives to judge and to act harshly in respect to those they deem such. The alien resident or sojourner subject to deportation is not by that fact a criminal. None of the six thousand and odd persons for whose arrests warrants were issued during the five months' period following November 1, 1919, had committed any crime for which they were being prosecuted. Some of them may have violated the penal statutes; doubtless they did. Among their number were a few, at least, who were notorious criminals. Of the generality of them more will be said later. But good or bad, they were not being proceeded against because they had committed any crime. They were simply charged with being illegally in the country because of their membership in one or the other of the proscribed organizations and therefore subject to deportation.

Whatever may have been its motives, Congress has vested the officers of the Department of Justice with no power whatever in connection with deportation proceedings, either in making complaints looking to the issuing of warrants or the issuing of the same or in the conduct of the inquiry following. And yet the hearings conducted by your committee disclose that to a very large extent the proceedings looking to and following the issuance of the six thousand and more warrants of arrest referred to were conducted by and under the direction of the Department of Justice. Its agents carried on an extensive campaign for the purpose of ferreting out those identified or alleged to be identified with the Communist Party or the Communist Labor Party. They made or had made the affidavits upon which most of the vast mass of warrants mentioned were issued. In many cases there was no affidavit submitted as a basis for the warrant, the unsworn statement of the agent of the bureau being accepted as sufficient, the theory being that his official oath met the constitutional requirement. These statements, sworn and unsworn, were not delivered to some local representative of the Department of Labor or transmitted to the department itself, as a rule, at least. They were sent to the Department of Justice and by it transmitted to the Department of Labor with a request that warrants issue. (Testimony, p. 12.)

The course which the warrants took is not made clear in the testimony, but it is clear that they were served, so far as one can speak of their having been served, not by agents of the Department of Labor, as the law contemplates, but by agents of the Department of Justice; indeed by the same agents who made the investigation, and upon whose initiative the warrants were issued. It is not to be understood that in each case the informant actually made the arrest; what is meant is that the Bureau of Investigation, a branch of the Department of Labor, popularly referred to as the Secret Service, made the preliminary inquiry, procured or prepared the necessary affidavit for the warrant, and made or conducted the making of the arrests. It is really only by the most generous construction that it can be said the warrants ever were "served." What was done was substantially as follows: A batch of warrants was sent to an agent of the bureau at a particular place—Boston, Chicago, or Detroit. He secured the cooperation of the local police officers and with their aid the places of meeting—the synchronized meetings having already been arranged for by him or through him, as heretofore stated—the places of meeting were raided. It was assumed or perhaps surmised that the individuals against whom warrants were held residing in the neighborhood of the meetings, respectively, would be among those attending. Possibly, not unlikely, in some instances information more definite in character was in the possession of some of those acting in the premises that the persons whose arrests had been authorized were actually present at the meeting, the warrants for such serving as justification, such as it was, for the invasion of the premises. But regardless of the warrants every person in the room was placed under arrest. They were lined up along the wall after the manner of the making of arrests of desperate criminals or of an old-time stage hold-up and searched.

They were then assembled at some point to determine, among other things, what American citizens had been caught in the net, and who in addition to those for whom warrants were out, among those taken, might be held for deportation. Those who were able to prove citizenship were either discharged or turned over to the local authorities as possible offenders against State statutes. Aliens unable to clear themselves of the unfavorable inference drawn from their presence at the meeting were held and telegraphic warrants for such were asked, of which more hereafter. Meanwhile the place of meeting was thoroughly searched for literature, membership cards, financial and other records, and correspondence. When arrests were made at the homes of any of the persons sought, they too were searched with like purpose, and in any case the residences of the officers of the local lodges or branches were searched pursuant to specific instructions issued from Washington for evidence that might be of value. Search warrants were in some instances sued out to insure the capture of such papers, documents, and records.

The essential lawlessness of the proceedings detailed needs no comment. It will be startling to learn that they were carried out in strict accordance with instructions sent by the Department of Justice to its agents in the field through a circular letter, the extraordinary character of which justifies its incorporation at length in this report. A copy sent to the agent at Boston is as follows:

[Confidential instructions, December 27, 1919.]

Strictly confidential.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION,
Washington, December 27, 1919.

GEO. E. KELLEHER, Esq.,
Box 3185, Boston, Mass.

DEAR SIR: I have already transmitted to you two briefs prepared in this department upon the Communist Party of America and the Communist Labor Party, with instructions that these briefs be carefully examined and studied for the purpose of familiarizing yourself and the agents under your direction with the principles and tactics of these two respective organizations.

You have submitted to me affidavits upon various individuals connected with these respective organizations, stating that these persons are aliens and members of the organizations referred to. I have transmitted to the Commissioner General of Immigration the affidavits submitted by you, with the request that warrants of arrest be issued at once. This action is now being taken by the Bureau of Immigration and warrants of arrest are being prepared and will be shortly forwarded to the immigration inspector of your district.

Briefly the arrangements which have been made are that the warrants will be forwarded to the immigration inspector, who will at once communicate with you and advise you of the names of the persons for whom he has received warrants. You should then place under surveillance, where practicable, the persons mentioned and at the appointed time you will be advised by me by wire when to take into custody all persons for whom warrants have been issued.

At the time of the apprehension of these persons every effort should be made by you to definitely establish the fact that the persons arrested are members of either the Communist Party of America or the Communist Labor Party. I have been reliably informed that instructions have been issued from the headquarters of each of these organizations to their members that they are to refuse to answer any questions put to them by any Federal officers and are to destroy all evidence of membership or affiliation with their respective organizations. It is, therefore, of the utmost importance that you at once make every effort to ascertain the location of all of the books and records of these organizations in your territory and that the same be secured at the time of the arrests. As soon as the subjects are apprehended you should endeavor to obtain from them, if possible, admissions that they are members of either of these parties, together with any statement concerning their citizenship status. I can not impress upon you too strongly the necessity of obtaining documentary evidence proving membership.

Particular efforts should be made to apprehend all of the officers of either of these two parties if they are aliens; the residences of such officers should be searched in every instance for literature, membership cards, records, and correspondence. The meeting rooms should be thoroughly searched and an effort made to locate the charter of the Communist Party of America or the Communist Labor Party under which the local organization operates, as well as the membership and financial records which, if not found in the meeting rooms of the organization, will probably be found in the house of the recording and financial secretaries, respectively. All literature, books, papers, and anything hanging on the walls should be gathered up; the ceilings and partitions should be sounded for hiding places. After obtaining any documentary evidence the same should be wrapped up in packages and marked thereon the location of the place and the name of the persons obtaining the evidence and the contents of each package.

Violence toward any aliens should be scrupulously avoided. Immediately upon apprehending an alien he should be thoroughly searched. If found in groups in meeting rooms, they should be lined up against the wall and there searched, particular attention being given to finding the membership book, in which connection the search of the pockets will not be sufficient. In no instance should money or other valuables be taken from the aliens. All documentary evidence taken from an alien should be placed in an individual envelope provided for the purpose, which envelope should be marked showing the contents contained in the same, whether they were found in the possession of the alien or in his room, and if in the latter the address of the house should be given as well as the name of the alien and the officer who obtained the evidence. A duplicate record should be kept of all evidence thus obtained. At the time of the transfer of the alien to the immigration inspector, you should also turn over to the immigration inspector the original evidence obtained in the particular case, plainly marked, so that there may be no complaint by the immigration officers as to the manner in which evidence has been collected by the agents of this bureau.

I have made mention above that the meeting places and residences of the members should be thoroughly searched. I leave it entirely to your discretion as to the method by which you should gain access to such places. If, due to the local conditions in your territory, you find that it is absolutely necessary for you to obtain a search warrant for the premises, you should communicate with the local authorities a few hours before the time for the arrests is set and request a warrant to search the premises.

Under no conditions are you to take into your confidence the local police authorities or the State authorities prior to the making of the arrests. It is not the intention nor the desire of this office that American citizens, members of the two organizations, be arrested at this time. If, however, there are taken into custody any American citizens, through error, and who are members of the Communist Party of America or the Communist Labor Party, you should immediately refer their cases to the local authorities.

It may be necessary in order to successfully make the arrests that you obtain the assistance of the local authorities at the time of the arrests. This action should not be taken unless it is absolutely necessary; but I well appreciate that where a large number of arrests are to be made it may be impossible for the same to be made by special agents of this department, in which event you are authorized to request the assistance of the local police authorities. Such assistance should not be requested until a few hours before the time set for the arrests, in order that no "leak" may occur. It is to be distinctly understood that the arrests made are being made under the direction and supervision of the Department of Justice.

For your own personal information, I have to advise you that the tentative date fixed for the arrests of the communists is Friday evening, January 2, 1920. This date may be changed, due to the fact that all of the immigration warrants may not be issued by that time. You will, however, be advised by telegraph as to the exact date and hour when the arrests are to be made.

If possible, you should arrange with your under-cover informants to have meetings of the Communist Party and the Communist Labor Party held on the night set. I have been informed by some of the bureau officers that such arrangements will be made. This, of course, would facilitate the making of the arrests.

On the evening of the arrests this office will be open the entire night, and I desire that you communicate by long distance to Mr. Hoover any matters of vital importance or interest which may arise during the course of the arrests. You will possibly be given from 7 o'clock in the evening until 7 o'clock in the morning to conclude the arrests and examinations. As pointed out previously, the grounds for deportation in these cases will be based solely upon membership in the Communist Party of America or the Communist Labor Party, and for that reason it will not be necessary for you to go in detail into the particular activities of the persons apprehended. It is, however, desirable that wherever possible you should obtain additional evidence upon the individuals, particularly those who are leaders and officers in the local organizations. The immigration inspector will be under instructions to cooperate with you fully, and I likewise desire that you cooperate in the same manner with the immigration inspector at the time of the arrests, as well as following the arrests. At the hearings before the immigration inspector you should render any and all reasonable assistance to the immigration authorities, both in the way of offering your services to them and the services of any of your stenographic force. It is of utmost necessity that these cases be expedited and disposed of at the earliest possible moment, and for that reason stenographic assistance and any assistance necessary should be rendered by you to the immigration inspectors. An excellent spirit of cooperation exists between the Commissioner General of Immigration and this department in Washington and I desire that the same spirit of cooperation between the field officers of this bureau and the field officers of the Bureau of Immigration also exist.

I desire that the morning following the arrests you should forward to this office by special delivery, marked for the "Attention of Mr. Hoover," a complete list of the names of the persons arrested, with an indication of residence, organization to which they belong, and whether or not they were included in the original list of warrants. In cases where arrests are made of persons not covered by warrants, you should at once request the local immigration authorities for warrants in all such cases, and you should also communicate with this office at the same time. I desire also that the morning following the arrests that you communicate in detail by telegram, "Attention of Mr. Hoover," the results of the arrests made, giving the total number of persons of each organization taken into custody, together with a statement of any interesting evidence secured.

The above cover the general instructions to be followed in these arrests, and the same will be supplemented by telegraphic instructions at the proper time.

Very truly yours,

FRANK BURKE,
Assistant Director and Chief.

(Hearings, p. 12.)

The arrests having been made, a preliminary examination took place before an officer of the Department of Labor, the prisoner not having been permitted in the meantime to confer with counsel, and being unrepresented by such at the inquiry. He was interrogated orally and called upon to make answers to a questionnaire intended to draw from him admissions of his alienage and membership in one of the proscribed parties. By direction a representative of the Bureau of Investigation attended these hearings. The nature of the assistance rendered by him may be gathered from testimony given by Frank R. Stone, agent in charge (Bureau of Investigation) at Newark, N. J.

"Attorney General PALMER. Just describe very briefly, Mr. Stone, the process by which this original hearing was arrived at and conducted.

"Mr. STONE. There was an immigration inspector, a Mr. Fader, and Mr. Dauschitz, who were present at the preliminary questions under the warrant. The questions, however, were propounded by me.

"Attorney General PALMER. You mean the questionnaire was read by you?

"Mr. STONE. Read by me.

"Senator STERLING. You say the immigration inspector was present. Was the examination conducted under his direction or supervision?

"Mr. STONE. His supervision; yes, sir. He made formal service of the warrant, and asked me as a matter of cooperation to ask the questions, because of my long experience as an immigration inspector and law officer in the Immigration Service. * * *

"Senator WALSH of Montana. Did you submit any of the matters to the inspector himself as to whether the man should be held or should not be held?

"Mr. STONE. The inspector sat alongside of me. We are old colleagues. We worked at Ellis Island together for years and he used to be my interpreter. The reason I selected him was that he was a man that understands, reads, and writes many languages, and I selected him because not only would I be safe as to a thorough immigration man but I would have a thorough translator so that I would not have to depend on broken English." (Testimony, pp. 563, 567.)

Those held upon the preliminary inquiry were then transferred to a more permanent place of detention. Thereafter the evidence upon which was determined the case of each prisoner thus held was taken before a representative of the Department of Labor, by whom it was transmitted to that department which, in due course, upon consideration of the same, made its order either of deportation or discharge, the prisoner being accorded the right to counsel at such hearing. To some inhuman aspects of these proceedings attention will be invited later. For the present it is asserted as indisputable that—

1. The agents of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice have no authority to make arrests in deportation proceedings, if, indeed, they have authority to make arrests at all.

2. The agents of the Department of Labor have no authority to make an arrest looking to deportation without a warrant.

3. The issuance of a warrant upon the unsworn statement of an agent of the Bureau of Investigation is a plain violation of the fourth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

4. There is no authority in the law for the conduct of a search in deportation proceedings, either of the residence of the alien or of the meeting places of societies condemned by the immigration laws or for the seizure of books, records, or papers of either.

5. There is no authority in the law for the issuance of a search warrant in deportation proceedings at all.

6. There is no authority in the law for the issuance of a search warrant to seize books or papers to be used as evidence, even of the commission of a crime, much less to establish a case in deportation proceedings.

1. It is unnecessary to inquire whether under any circumstances, except such as justify any person in acting, agents of the Bureau of Investigation have authority to make arrests. It is generally understood that they are investigators merely, gathering information which they submit to the officers charged with the prosecution of crime and the arrests of criminals or those accused of crime. No pretense is made that in virtue of the office they hold they have any right to make arrests in deportation proceedings. It is in effect conceded that they have not. The Attorney General being interrogated on that point declined to answer further than to say that they had authority to do what they did, which he asserts was "as a matter of fact to assist the immigration inspector in taking into custody persons for whom the immigration inspector had warrants." (Hearings, p. 635.) If this statement is altogether disingenuous it exhibits a delusion on his part.

Multitudes were arrested for whom no warrant was out. The instructions contemplated that there were to be. The participation of the immigration inspector or of any official of the Department of Labor "in the raids" approached, if it did not reach, the vanishing point. The theory advanced by the Attorney General is altogether incompatible with the circular letter quoted above, issued by his authority, containing instructions for the conduct of the officers directing the raids. The whole instrument is at war with that idea, but the extracts set out below particularly refute it. The letter from which these extracts are made was transmitted to George E. Kelleher, an agent of the Bureau of Investigation at Boston. The chief of that bureau having by it told Kelleher that he, the chief, having submitted affidavits from Kelleher to the Commissioner of Immigration, upon which he, the chief, had asked warrants which would be transmitted to the inspector who would inform Kelleher of their receipt, the latter would be advised when to proceed, and thereupon he, Kelleher, on the telegraphic order, not of the Department of Labor, but of the Chief of the Bureau of Investigation, was not to aid or cooperate with the inspector in making the arrests, but himself "to take into custody all persons for whom warrants have been issued."

"It may be necessary for you," the instructions continue, "to obtain the assistance of the local authorities," not to have the inspector procure such assistance. Finally, setting all doubt at rest, the instructions admonish the agents that "it is to be distinctly understood that the arrests are being made under the direction and supervision of the Department of Justice." This remarkable declaration prompts some curious speculation. By whom was it to be so understood? What steps were to be taken to make it so understood? Was it to be so understood by the immigration inspector should he in any wise attempt to control the conduct of those making the arrests? Was it to be so understood by the parties arrested possibly to impress them with the futility of making any attempt to evade the sleepless eye of the Government Secret Service, or was it to be so understood by the public through interviews given to the press, and, if so, to what end? From those instructions it was evidently expected that the inspector should sit in his office with the warrants while the actual arrests were being made by the agents of the Department of Justice and those whom they should call to their assistance. And that is just what was done. From the testimony of Mr. Kelleher before the committee the following is taken:

"I observe here that Judge Anderson says that you testified that you had under your direction that night something like 300 men.

"Mr. KELLEHER. Indirectly, I might say.

"Senator WALSH of Montana. Yes.

"Senator KING. You mean 300—

"Mr. KELLEHER. That included the police department.

"Senator WALSH of Montana (reading)—

"Kelleher said he had from 300 to 500 men. This may fairly be assumed to be a moderate estimate."

"Now, just how did you allow yourself so much latitude as that, from 300 to 500 men?"

"Mr. KELLEHER. It is the merest guess at best, for the simple reason that in one town they might have a police force of 3 men or they might have a police force of 100 men. There would be no way for me to tell, being called upon the stand without any previous preparation.

"Senator WALSH of Montana. They were all acting under your direction?"

"Mr. KELLEHER. Yes; but so many points were covered that it is impossible to tell exactly.

"Senator KING. They were not officials of the department, but they were police officers?"

"Mr. KELLEHER. Yes; in certain places there were police officials as well as Department of Justice officials.

"Senator WALSH of Montana. Just how many Department of Labor officers were there that night in the territory?"

"Mr. KELLEHER. I could not say. I should say possibly half a dozen.

"Senator WALSH of Montana. And how many arrests were actually made?"

"Mr. KELLEHER. I believe that the record shows about 600.

"Senator WALSH of Montana. So that arrests made by the officers of the Department of Labor obviously included only a very small proportion of the 600?"

"Mr. KELLEHER. Yes.

"Senator WALSH of Montana. The other arrests were made by whom?"

"Mr. KELLEHER. By Department of Justice men in cooperation with police officers." (Hearings, pp. 493-494.)

The frankness of this witness, who is a lawyer, is to be extolled. Witness the following:

"Senator WALSH of Montana. By virtue of what law does an agent of the Department of Justice make an arrest in a deportation case?"

"Mr. KELLEHER. I do not know of any law." (Hearings, p. 494.)

To get the full import of the foregoing it must be understood that simultaneously raids were made in the following cities and towns, all under the direction of Mr. Kelleher, namely: Boston, Chelsea, Brockton, Bridgewater, Norwood, Worcester, Springfield, Chicopee, Holyoke, Gardner, Fitchburg, Lowell, Lawrence, Haverhill, all in Massachusetts; Nashua, Manchester, Derry, Portsmouth, Claremont, Lincoln, all in New Hampshire. (Hearings, p. 54.)

2. The number of persons arrested for whom no warrants were out can not be determined. There is no record of the total number taken into custody. In the Boston district estimates vary from 600 to 1,200. (Hearings, p. 55.) But after the weeding-out process on the preliminary inquiry, the release of citizens or others with reference to whom the evidence was too shadowy to justify detention, if there was any evidence, 100 telegraphic warrants were applied for.

The law tolerates arrest without a warrant on a charge of crime or, under some circumstances, upon suspicion of the commission of a crime. The rule is that no arrest may be made without a warrant. Exceptions have been developed in the course of the ages arising from necessity and to prevent escapes. In the case of heinous crimes, greater latitude is allowed. In misdemeanors arrest without a warrant is not sanctioned except the perpetrator be caught in the act or perhaps upon hot pursuit. This is the common law, the law which derives its force from the custom of centuries.

A constitutional guaranty that no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, would be an absurdity if general arrests could be made without warrant, or if a warrant for one person would afford justification for taking 2 or for 400 could sanction the arrest of 600.

Arrest without warrant rests upon the common law, but there is no common law touching arrest for deportation. It is purely statutory in its origin and the statute neither authorizes nor contemplates an arrest except by virtue of a warrant. It will bear repetition that there was no charge of crime, either felony or misdemeanor, against any of those caught in the raids. It should be said in palliation of the evident disregard of the law and the Constitution on the part of the department in connection with these arrests without a warrant, that the course followed had the sanction in part of a practice of some years standing at least, pursued by the Department of Labor and crystallized into a rule promulgated by it for the guidance of its agents, as follows:

"Application for warrant of arrest: * * * Telegraphic application may be resorted to only in case of necessity, or when some substantial interest of the Government would be subserved thereby, and must state (a) that the usual written application is being forwarded by mail, and (b) the substance of the facts and proof therein contained. The code supplied by the department should be used whenever practicable." (Rules of May 1, 1917, of Bureau of Immigration, pp. 71-72.)

The procedure in accordance with this rule is detailed by Mr. Kelleher in his testimony. (Hearings, p. 496.)

Manifestly no sworn statement could be before the department until the arrival of the affidavits and the warrant sent by wire is wholly without the support required by the fourth amendment, of the existence of which both departments seemed to be entirely oblivious. It remains, however, as it is to be hoped, in its pristine vigor as follows:

"The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized."

Apparently the Department of Labor realized that a warrant of some kind on some foundation was requisite for arrest or to justify detention. The rule implies that an arrest without a warrant, in anticipation of the arrival of a telegraphic warrant, would not be justifiable, and the record does not disclose that such authority was ever assumed by its agents or such a course sanctioned by the department. Arrest without any warrant appears to have been an innovation inaugurated by the Department of Justice. Instead of correcting the obviously illegal practice of issuing telegraphic warrants, it took a further step away from the standard prescribed by the Constitution. Some vague notion seems to have prevailed that none of the constitutional guarantees of liberty are available to aliens in deportation proceedings, and ill-considered remarks to that effect may be found in the opinions of some judges. (In re Chin Wah, 182 Fed. 256.)

It is, of course, true that one can not claim in deportation proceedings any of the rights secured by the fifth amendment save those of transcendent importance guaranteed by the last two clauses thereof, not because he is an alien, but because of the nature of the proceedings. It reads as follows:

"No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger, nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb, nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation."

Every right to which it refers, except as above noted, relates, as is plainly apparent, to proceedings in criminal actions, and deportation proceedings, it may be justifiable to repeat, are not criminal in their nature at all.

So the sixth amendment by its plain terms applies to criminal cases, and the rights guaranteed by it can not be claimed in deportation proceedings. It is as follows:

"In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense."

The clause preceding that with which the fifth amendment concludes, "Nor (shall any person) be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law," is obviously not so restricted. One can not be deprived of his life, his liberty, or his property by any procedure, however it may be classified, civil, criminal, or anomalous, without due process of law. Accordingly, it has been authoritatively held that deportation proceedings must be in conformity with "due process of law." (Whitfield v. Hanges, 222 Fed. 745, and cases cited; The Japanese Immigrant case, 189 U. S. 86-100; Truax v. Raich, 239 U. S. 33-39.)

Nor is there any room for contending that the word "person" in the clause in question does not include aliens. They may claim equally with citizens all the rights guaranteed by the amendment under consideration. An indictment or presentment is essential in proceedings against an alien whenever it is requisite against a citizen. He may, under the same circumstances, plead former jeopardy; he can not be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself.

So it is equally apparent that the fourth amendment, above quoted, is general in its application. It applies to arrest in civil cases as well as in criminal actions. Referring to this amendment, the Supreme Court said, in Weeks v. United States (232 U. S. 392): "This protection reaches all alike, whether accused of crime or not." Whatever the nature of the proceeding, no warrant may issue but upon probable cause supported by oath or affirmation.

Amendment VIII, as follows: "Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted," is equally general in its requirement as to bail. The disregard of the constitutional guaranty, both in the case of the original arrest without a warrant and in the detention of prisoners so taken under the pretended authority of the so-called "telegraphic warrants" is flagrant.

3. More elaborate attention than might seem to be warranted has been given above to the pertinent amendments to the Constitution because of their bearing on other features of the proceedings now to be considered.

A lawyer practicing in the District, formerly employed in the Department of Labor, told the committee that he had examined the papers in the department upon which a large number of the warrants had been issued and that "dozens of them were not signed and were unsworn." This statement was neither supported by the production of the papers so denounced nor, on the other hand, was it refuted in any way. It can readily be believed, however, in view of the testimony given by Mr. Abercrombie, by whom, as acting head of the department, most of the vast mass of warrants were issued, that it was impossible to give more than the most perfunctory examination to the papers accompanying the applications in view of their number and the other pressing duties devolving upon him in the absence of both the head of the department and his assistant.

But that is unimportant, because it is conceded that when the charge against the person for whom a warrant was made consisted of a written statement by an agent of the Bureau of Investigation, as was the case in many if not most instances, no verification was made, it being contended that none was required, the position being taken that the official oath of the agent fulfilled the constitutional requirement. Indeed, the rule of the Department of Labor, from which an extract has heretofore been made, provided that in such case the oath or affirmation may be dispensed with. No support can be found for any such doctrine in the comment of any writer of repute on the Constitution or in any adjudicated case so far as your committee can learn, and the history of the times in which the amendment had its origin refutes the notion advanced.

In the troublous period preceding the Revolution warrants of arrest were issued upon the mere demand or statement of officers of the Crown and on equally frail support writs of assistance were sued out authorizing searches for goods alleged to be smuggled.

These were among the acts of oppression which brought on the war. It was at this very practice that the amendment in question was aimed. The rule may have come into existence in consequence of the mistaken notion that the fourth amendment carried no guaranty to aliens or that it applied to criminal proceedings only, or its authors may have become confused in consequence of the ruling of some courts to the effect that when the affidavit upon which a warrant is issued is made by the regular prosecuting officer, he may verify it on information and belief. It has never been held, as stated, that the oath or affirmation required by the Constitution may be dispensed with, but only that in view of the official oath he has taken, the public prosecutor may verify a formal charge made by him in his official capacity on information and belief. Other cases insist that in every case the oath or affirmation must be made by one who speaks as of his own knowledge. It is unnecessary to canvass those varying views. None of them supports the rule to which the Department of Justice gave its sanction so repeatedly in connection with the arrests under inquiry.

On the related question of the necessity and form of the verification of an information, not as the basis of a warrant but as a foundation for a prosecution, there is likewise some diversity of opinion. Conflicting decisions on that subject may have contributed to the view on which the rule is founded. A note in which they are canvassed is appended to the case of Weeks v. United States (54 L. R. A. (N. S.) 657). The distinction between an information or a complaint as the foundation for a prosecution and as a basis for a warrant is therein pointed out, and the doctrine unequivocally declared that under the fourth amendment and similar constitutional provisions no warrant can issue unless the charge is verified, no matter who makes it, an official or a private person.

4. That part of the circular of instructions to agents of the Bureau of Investigation making the arrests relating to searches is here repeated:

"Particular efforts should be made to apprehend all of the officers of either of these two parties if they are aliens; the residence of such officers should be searched in every instance for literature, membership cards, records, and correspondence. The meeting rooms should be thoroughly searched and an effort made to locate the charter of the Communist Party of America or the Communist Labor Party, under which the local organization operates, as well as the membership and financial records, which, if not found in the meeting rooms of the organization, will probably be found in the house of the recording and financial secretaries, respectively. All literature, books, papers, and anything hanging on the walls should be gathered up; the ceilings and partitions should be sounded for hiding places. After obtaining any documentary evidence, the same should be wrapped up in packages and marked thereon the location of the place and the name of the persons obtaining the evidence and the contents of each package.

"I have made mention above that the meeting places and residences of the members should be thoroughly searched. I leave it entirely to your discretion as to the method by which you should gain access to such places. If, due to the local conditions in your territory, you find that it is absolutely necessary for you to obtain a search warrant for the premises, you should communicate with the local authorities a few hours before the time for the arrests is set and request a warrant to search the premises."

It is difficult to conceive how one bred to the law could ever have promulgated such an order. As heretofore stated, deportation proceedings are purely statutory. There is no applicable common law. Justification must be found in the statute for whatever is done. The statute authorizes the issuance of a warrant and necessarily the arrest of the person against whom it runs. Doubtless it authorizes, as would an ordinary warrant of arrest, the search of the person of the prisoner. That is all. To rifle his drawers, peer into his private papers, walk off with his books and any documents that the invading officers may choose to carry away, is not only without the slightest sanction in the law, but is an offensive tyranny having, it is hoped, few precedents in our history.

It was vigorously and deservedly denounced by the Supreme Court in Weeks v. United States, heretofore cited, decided February 24, 1914, in which the court, referring to similar acts, said inter alia:

"If letters and private documents can thus be seized and held and used in evidence against a citizen accused of an offense, the protection of the fourth amendment declaring his right to be secure against such searches and seizures is of no value, and, so far as those thus placed are concerned, might as well be stricken from the Constitution. The efforts of the courts and their officials to bring the guilty to punishment, praiseworthy as they are, are not to be aided by the sacrifice of those great principles established by years of endeavor and suffering which have resulted in their embodiment in the fundamental law of the land. The United States marshal could only have invaded the house of the accused when armed with a warrant issued as required by the Constitution, upon sworn information and describing with reasonable particularity the thing for which the search was to be made. Instead, he acted without sanction of law, doubtless prompted by the desire to bring further proof to the aid of the Government, and under color of his office undertook to make a seizure of private papers in direct violation of the constitutional prohibition against such action. Under such circumstances, without sworn information and particular description, not even an order of court would have justified such procedure; much less was it within the authority of the United States marshal to thus invade the house and privacy of the accused." (232 U. S. 393.)

Whether similar conduct directed against even a proscribed organization or one believed by the Attorney General to be such is an offense less grave need not engage our attention. It is equally lawless. Some pretense is made that private houses were not searched except by the consent of the occupant and that often the prisoner would himself aid in the search. Consent given with the dread representative of the great Government secret service, who was charged to make known at the door the character in which he was acting, by a startled householder, presumably an alien, possibly unfamiliar with the language of his interlocutors and unfamiliar with his rights, affords little condonation for the acts hereby condemned. But what is more important, the instructions directed that the course pursued be followed with or without the consent of those whose premises were invaded. If the arresting officers neglected to search in every instance where they otherwise should have made search, had consent not been withheld, they would have violated the command emanating from the Department of Justice. So imperative were their instructions with respect to making search that they were not even to arm themselves with a search warrant unless it was "absolutely" necessary, in which case they were to secure the writ.

5. But a search warrant in deportation proceedings is a thing unknown to the law. It is under all ordinary circumstances and under all ordinary and usual statutes an auxiliary remedy in criminal proceedings only. Such is the character of the statute upon the pretended authority of which search warrants were issued in connection with the arrests under consideration. It is a unit in the fascicle of laws constituting separate chapters of the so-called espionage act, which takes its name from the initial chapter thereof. It is perfectly apparent upon every feature of the statute that it contemplated the institution or pendency of criminal proceedings. So obvious is this that at the hearing the Attorney General, upon the prompting of one of his own subordinates, made some attempt to justify the suing out of the search warrants upon the theory that the members of the Communist Party "were guilty or might be held guilty of a conspiracy under section 6 of the Criminal Code," "and that such property as was used in the commission of that conspiracy was properly covered by the search-warrant clause of the espionage act." (Hearings, p. 24.)

Section 6 referred to reads as follows:

"If two or more persons in any State or Territory, or in any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, conspire to overthrow, put down, or destroy by force the Government of the United States, or to levy war against them, or to oppose by force the authority thereof, or by force to prevent, hinder, or delay the execution of any law of the United States, or by force to seize, take, or possess any property of the United States contrary to the authority thereof, they shall each be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than six years, or both."

The features of the search warrant law relied upon are as follows: "Sec. 2. A search warrant may be issued under this title upon either of the following grounds:

"2. When the property was used as the means of committing a felony; in which case it may be taken on the warrant from any house or other place in which it is concealed, or from the possession of the person by whom it was used in the commission of the offense, or from any person in whose possession it may be.

"3. When the property, or any paper, is possessed, controlled, or used in violation of section 22 of this title; in which case it may be taken on the warrant from the person violating said section, or from any person in whose possession it may be, or from any house or other place in which it is concealed.

"Sec. 22. Whoever in aid of any foreign Government shall knowingly and willfully have possession of or control over any property or papers designed or intended for use or which is used as the means of violating any penal statute, or any of the rights or obligations of the United States under any treaty or the law of nations, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both."

It is sufficient to say that no proceedings were ever instituted under section 6 of the Criminal Code, presumably because the department was convinced none such could be maintained. It would be unjust to believe that it willfully omitted to enforce the criminal law having evidence sufficient to justify the belief that it had been violated.

It will be noted that the statute authorizes the seizure of property which was used as the means of committing a felony or which was designed or intended for use or was used in aid of a foreign Government in violating a penal statute or any right of the United States under any treaty of the law of nations. Some copies of affidavits used as the basis for search warrants and of the writs are found in the record. (Hearings, pp. 772-773.)

They disclose that the claim was made that the papers to be seized were to be used "as the means of committing a felony," namely, a conspiracy in violation of section 6 of the Criminal Code. In one of the affidavits it is averred that the affiant has good reason to believe and does believe that such a conspiracy is being committed upon and by the use of a certain pamphlet or leaflet entitled "Communist Labor," by divers other books or pamphlets, by mailing lists, and solicitations for funds or membership. On this was issued a warrant reciting such belief on the part of the commissioner and his statement as to the place where the things described were to be found, followed by this command:

"You are therefore hereby commanded, in the name of the President of the United States, to enter said premises, with the necessary and proper assistance, and there diligently to investigate and search into concerning said conspiracy, and to report and act concerning the same as required of you by law, and this warrant may be served at any time of the day or night." (Hearings, p. 773.)

It seems doubtful whether the author of these papers ever read the fourth amendment, directing that the warrants shall particularly describe the things to be seized, or that he ever acquainted himself with the elementary principle that it does not constitute "probable cause" that one believes a crime to have been committed even though he asserts that he has reason for his belief. The issuance of a warrant is a judicial or quasi-judicial function. Proof must be submitted to the officer who issues it sufficient to justify a belief on his part. He has nothing before him when he has only the statement that some one else believes that a crime has been committed without a single fact upon which such belief is founded.

In Veeder v. United States (252 Fed., 418), the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit said:

"No search warrant shall be issued unless the judge has first been furnished with facts under oath—not suspicions, beliefs, or surmises—but facts which, when the law is properly applied to them, tend to establish the necessary legal conclusion, or facts which, when the law is properly applied to them, tend to establish probable cause for believing that the legal conclusion is right. * * * If the sworn accusation is based on fiction, the accuser must take the chance of punishment for perjury. Hence the necessity of a sworn statement of facts, because one can not be convicted of perjury for having a belief, though the belief be utterly unfounded in fact and law."

But why dissimulate? The things seized were taken not because they were "the means of committing a felony"; they were taken that they might be used as evidence of membership in and of the teachings of the Communist Party or the Communist Labor Party, with a view to securing orders of deportation. Commendable candor would compel a frank admission to that effect, in view of the instructions given to those suing them out, to search the meeting places and residences of the officers of either of the parties named for "literature, membership cards, records, and correspondence." The very same paragraph continues:

"All literature, books, papers, and anything hanging on the walls should be gathered up; the ceilings and partitions should be sounded for hiding places. After obtaining any documentary evidence the same should be wrapped up in packages and marked thereon the location of the place and the names of the persons obtaining the evidence and the contents of each package."

There is room for the contention, though it would be a strained contention, that circulars or pamphlets intended to arouse individuals to overthrow the Government by force or violence are things "used" or at least to be used "in the commission of a felony." But what can one say in justification on such a ground of the seizure of membership cards, financial records, "all literature, books, papers, and anything hanging on the walls"?

The search was not made to secure articles "used in the commission of a felony" as, for instance, a counterfeiters' or burglar's outfit, gambling instruments, guns assembled in an effort to transport them to another country in violation of the neutrality laws, or contraband liquor held in disregard of the prohibition laws. There was the less excuse for setting up the shallow pretense upon which these search warrants were issued, in view of the fact that the Supreme Court had solemnly warned the department of its futility and its error in the Weeks case, the principles of which it had occasion again to declare in Silverthorne v. United States (251 U. S. 385), decided January 26, 1920, and of the failure of a similar attempt to seize and hold papers and documents, announced by the court in Veeder v. United States (supra), a decision dating from March 9, 1918.

In Gould v. United States (255 U. S. 298) the questions here considered were under review, and the doctrine was again announced that a search warrant can not lawfully issue for books and papers that they may be used in evidence. The attempt to do so again met the condemnation of the court in that case.

The statute in question was enacted pursuant to a suggestion from the Department of Justice before the declaration of war that legislation along various lines was requisite to meet extraordinary conditions then prevailing, the particular occasion for a search warrant statute being that the officers of the Federal Government might be clothed with authority to enter premises along the Mexican border in which there might be concealed guns and munitions of war to be surreptitiously transferred to the other side in violation of the Executive proclamation, to be eventually used, should hostilities then threatened break out, against our own men.

A draft of a bill was sent down which, with material modifications, became Title XI of the espionage act. That draft, in express terms, would, had it been enacted, have authorized search for and seizure of books, papers, and documents being evidence of the commission of crime. But the Judiciary Committee refused to sanction such a statute, because in the opinion of some members at least, such a search would be unreasonable within the meaning of the fourth amendment and be violative of the sixth amendment because, in effect, compelling the accused in criminal prosecutions to be a witness against himself. The department finding itself unable to get from Congress the authority it sought in respect to searches to secure evidence, sought to attain its end by a palpable subterfuge.

Nor are the foregoing the only particulars in which the law was wrenched to suit the purposes of those who were, in a peculiar way, constituted its guardians.

1. Bail was fixed, as a rule, at $1,000, in some cases as high as $10,000, in some as low as $500. The result was that the more prominent among those arrested, the more influential and perhaps the more dangerous in the cases of whom $10,000 may not have been too high, secured bail, while the poor, ignorant, deluded, comparatively harmless foreigner, with a large family to support and only his daily wage to meet their daily wants, found it utterly impossible to secure a bond of $1,000 or even $500. The period of their incarceration will be adverted to later. In the vast majority of the cases the bail was excessive. The Attorney General contents himself by saying that the bail was fixed by the inspector, an officer of the Department of Labor, but the participation of the Department of Justice in the proceedings was too active to permit of such easy exculpation. Both departments must share in what has every appearance of a design to keep the prisoners in jail rather than to insure their appearance to answer any order that might be entered.

2. The work of making the arrests in the Boston district was carried out under the supervision of one George E. Kelleher, heretofore referred to, agent of the Bureau of Investigation, particularly commended by the Attorney General. He is a man of intelligence and training, a graduate of Brown University and the Georgetown Law School. He sent out to those under him a set of instructions, appearing in a note at hearings, pages 53 and 54, in which is summarized those contained in the circular letter herein quoted at length from the bureau, but which contained a supplementary feature to be noticed. He claims that the draft here first mentioned was sent out before the receipt of the letter from the bureau, and that the latter, when received, displaced it. That seems quite unlikely in view of the identity of the language used in the two instruments. But that is unimportant, as the reference to it is made only to disclose the state of mind actuating those who carried on these "raids." Among other things Mr. Kelleher's subordinates are directed:

"8. If a person claims American citizenship, he must produce documentary evidence of same. If native born, through birth records. If naturalized, through producing for agent copy of naturalization papers. Be sure that these papers are final papers, containing words "and is hereby admitted to become a citizen of the United States." (Hearings, p. 54.)

The writer recalls that during the war a similar rule was in force concerning applications for passports. A gentleman 80 years of age, born in the State of New York, a veteran of the Civil War, past commander of the Grand Army of the Republic of the State of Montana, who had resided in that State since its birth and in the Territory since the pioneer days, who had repeatedly served as a member of the legislature of the State of which he was an honored citizen, and who sought a passport, intending to visit the Orient, found himself utterly unable to meet the requirements of the rule.

It has been held that the law indulges the presumption that every resident of this country is a citizen thereof. At least it casts upon anyone asserting the contrary the burden of establishing the fact.

By express provision of the statute this presumption is unavoidable to an oriental who is required to produce the proper certificate when his right to remain in the country is challenged by the department officials. The rule issued by Kelleher in his official capacity is harsh enough as to a naturalized citizen. His papers may not be readily available. It is rare that they are preserved with the care with which currency or bills receivable are guarded. The ordinary citizen of foreign birth seldom, if ever, has occasion to adduce them. In the case of the native-born citizen it would be exceptional that its requirements could be met except after no inconsiderable delay.

In the case of one for whom a warrant has been issued, it is to be presumed that an affidavit was filed as a basis for the warrant in which his alienage is averred. It was perhaps not intended that on the preliminary inquiry a searching investigation should be carried on to ascertain the truth of the charge in that respect. The instruction dealt primarily with those cases in which no warrant had been issued, applied to persons as to whom no one had charged alienage. The prisoner had simply been taken in one of the raids, was present at a meeting of one of the proscribed parties. This was deemed sufficient to subject him to the suspicion not only of being a member of the party and an alien, but gave rise on the issue of alienage to a rebuttable presumption against him of which he could free himself only by the proof called for by the rule here questioned.

In at least one case some 40 or more, a large number of whom were citizens, were gathered in under the mistaken belief on the part of the officers that they were raiding a communist meeting. As a matter of fact the gathering was assembled to consider the subject of organizing a cooperative baking association. (Hearings, p. 58.) An apparently trustworthy witness who, as a newspaper reporter inquired into the facts of the "raid" in Detroit at the time of its occurrence, told on information so gathered that everyone in the House of the Masses, even those eating in the restaurant, students attending the classes conducted under the authority of the society owning the building, merry-makers at a ball in progress, and even the orchestra playing thereat—a corps of musicians commonly employed about the city—were arrested. (Hearings, p. 712.)

The House of the Masses was the headquarters of the Socialist Party. When it split, a condition hereafter to be explained, the wing which became the Communist Party secured control of the building, but a suit was in progress to settle the question of the right to possession as between the two warring wings. The files of the Department of Labor disclose that in not a few cases the only evidence connecting the prisoner with any of the proscribed parties was attendance at a school conducted under its auspices. (Hearings, p. 328.) Quite naturally no inconsiderable number of those arrested were, in fact, citizens. A witness of high character, in no manner associated with one of the proscribed parties, estimates that about one-half of those taken in Detroit, in all about 1,000, were citizens. (Hearings, p. 728.) But it is not unlikely that in the number estimated by him to have been citizens were included a considerable number of aliens who succeeded in convincing the examining officers of their innocent character.

3. On the issue of membership the appearance of the name of the prisoner on what purported to be a roll of members was regarded as sufficient evidence that he was such. (Hearings, pp. 359, 360, 361.) Even if these purported rolls were identified as such, and they were not, according to the testimony, the recitals thereof would be the merest hearsay, particularly in the absence of evidence that they were kept in accordance with some rule or long-established custom of the society. Even official records must be identified as such before they can be admitted in evidence. When one reflects on how easily, considering the ardor of partisan enthusiasts, particularly on the eve of a campaign, the name of a citizen may be mistakenly enrolled as a member of a Democratic club or a Republican club, the proposal to subject a man to perpetual exile, whatever may be his obligations to his family or others, on such evidence, is shocking.

4. Neither the law nor the Constitution guarantees to the individual proceeded against in deportation proceedings the right to counsel, though the result may be of graver import to him than a conviction of crime. The law makes no provision for counsel for the accused and the constitutional guaranty in that respect extends to criminal prosecutions only. But an impelling sense of justice constrained the officials of the Department of Labor long since to establish a rule giving to the accused in deportation cases the right to be heard by counsel. Prior to December 30, 1919, and since March, 1919, the rule read as follows:

"At the beginning of the hearing under the warrant of arrest the alien shall be allowed to inspect the warrant of arrest and all the evidence on which it was issued, and shall be apprised that he may be represented by counsel. The alien shall be required then and there to state whether he desires counsel or waives the same, and his reply shall be entered on the record." (Hearings, p. 174.)

On December 30, 1919, while the 3,000 warrants issued in contemplation of the raids of January 2 were outstanding, all of such warrants bearing date December 27, 1919, in the absence of the Secretary and the Assistant Secretary of Labor, the solicitor of the department, one John W. Abercrombie, Acting Secretary, promulgated a new rule reading as follows:

"Preferably at the beginning of the hearing under the warrant of arrest, or, at any rate, as soon as such hearing has proceeded sufficiently in the development of the facts to protect the Government interests, the alien shall be allowed to inspect the warrant of arrest and all the evidence on which it was issued, and shall be apprised that thereafter he may be represented by counsel." (Hearings, p. 176.)

Under the new rule none of those with whose arrest this report is concerned were accorded the right of counsel at what is called the preliminary hearing, at which evidence was adduced against him and every effort made to draw from him, by both oral examination and written interrogatories, admissions of culpability.

When Secretary Wilson, who was absent on account of the serious illness of his wife, returned on January 27, 1920, he revoked the order of the Acting Secretary and restored the rule as it was prior to December 30, 1919, but too late, of course, to affect the cases of those taken in the raids of January 2, 1920.

5. Many of the accused, perhaps most of them, were unable to speak English and the services of an interpreter was consequently required. Not infrequently some agent of the Department of Justice acted. Such an agent conducted the initial investigation and made the report on which the proceedings were instituted; subscribed, if he did not swear to the charge, made the arrest, prosecuted at the preliminary hearing, and translated the testimony adduced. The same individual may not have acted in each capacity, but the injustice is but little mitigated by that fact. They were all moved by a common professional pride to hold as many of the prisoners as possible. It would have been humiliating to the entire force to see a very large percentage of the prisoners released, and the more there were discharged the more intense would become the desire to make a case against the remainder.

But if the rights guaranteed by the Constitution and accorded by the law of the land, heretofore regarded as peculiarly sacred and inviolable, were recklessly denied the victims of the "raids" made under review, the dictates of enlightened humanity were no less ruthlessly disregarded in connection therewith. Viewed from that standpoint, it is not unjust to speak of the affair as an unmitigated outrage.

No provision was made, at least no adequate provision, to take care of the thousands of persons taken into custody in these "raids" while the sifting process was going on and the department was endeavoring to identify those for whom warrants had been issued, those for whom telegraphic warrants were to be asked, and those who, because they were citizens, or, because lacking admissions, sufficient evidence even of the meager and inconsequential character deemed adequate was not at hand, were entitled to be discharged without further inquiry.

In Detroit this process consumed a week or more, 12 inspectors working continuously. (Hearings, p. 707.) The jails and detention houses of the great cities and industrial centers in which the raids were conducted were not sufficiently capacious to hold any such number of prisoners in addition to those brought in regularly for offenses giving rise to arrest. This condition was, of course, to be anticipated. In Detroit the prisoners were herded to the number of about 800 in the corridor on the top floor of the Federal Building, the total area of which was 4,872 square feet.

The conditions had better be told in the language of the assistant custodian of the building:

"On the night of January 2, Mr. Barkey, of the Department of Justice, special agent in Detroit, came to my office in the Federal Building. It was 4 o'clock, and he asked me if he could use the fifth-floor corridor of the Federal Building for the purpose of confining alleged radicals. He said he was going to make a little raid that night, and he would like to use the fifth-floor corridor, because the local jails were all full. There was no other place to put them."

"I said to him we would be glad to cooperate with him if that was the case. When he said he was going to make a raid, as I looked at raids, or as I had heard of raids, they had usually been about 25 or 30 men, probably never to exceed that many."

"Next morning when I came to the office they had, I understand—and I believe it is true; it would seem true, at least, by observation—400 men in this corridor; and within the next two or three days this number had increased, it was common knowledge, to 800 men in this fifth-floor corridor."

"Senator STERLING. How large was this corridor?"

"Mr. GARRED. This corridor had a total area of 448 square feet. If you are interested, I have prepared a sketch of this corridor, showing the dimensions and facilities [handing paper to the chairman]. This had no outside windows. The only light they had was through an open court in the center, over which was a skylight. They had one toilet—one water-closet—and these men were lined up, probably 40 and 50 in the line, awaiting their turn to use this toilet. Some of them were unable to wait, and urinated in the corner room, back in the corner where it was a little dark. Before long—before many days—the stench was quite unbearable in some parts of this corridor and room."

"Senator STERLING. You say 'before many days.' Were the entire 800 kept there for days? Were they not released from time to time?"

"Mr. GARRED. They were released from time to time, after probably the third day; I could not state definitely, but I am pretty sure it was at least three days they were kept there. The whole 800 were not there at the start. There were 400, and then they increased this number as they made subsequent raids; and probably at the end of the third day they had 800; and from then on it commenced to decrease as they examined them." (Hearings, p. 706.)

"Senator STERLING. Preliminary examinations were going on there all the time, you understand?"

"Mr. GARRED. Yes."

"Senator STERLING. And as the result of these preliminary examinations men were being released from time to time?"

"Mr. GARRED. Yes. They also had access to the roof. There are two stairways, one at each end of the corridor, and some of them went up on the roof for toilet purposes."

"Senator WALSH of Montana. They had air there?"

"Mr. GARRED. Yes."

"Senator STERLING. Is there a toilet on the roof?"

"Mr. GARRED. No; they went up there, though, and it was a flat roof."

"Senator STERLING. And they used the roof?"

"Mr. GARRED. Yes. They had hot and cold water over a slop sink adjacent to this toilet."

"As to food, the friends of these men brought in sandwiches and apples and milk, etc., in suit cases and boxes and bags, and they got food. As to some of those who had no friends, I do not know what they got. I guess, probably, they divided up. I went through this corridor two or three times—walked through—to see conditions." (Hearings, p. 707.)

"They had no bedding of any kind except newspapers and overcoats and clothing, and 110 awnings that we had there. We had 110 awnings stored in this attic space which we would have removed if we had known there were going to be so many in this corridor, and these men pulled the canvas off of those awnings, off of the frames, and used the canvas for bedding."

"Senator STERLING. How was it as to the air; was it reasonably good air?"

"Mr. GARRED. As I stated, there were no outside windows."

"Senator STERLING. No outside windows; and how about the ventilation?"

"Mr. GARRED. The ventilation was poor, because this was the top floor of the building, and all of the impure air from the other corridors came up there. This skylight space is open down to the first floor, from the second floor up, and of course all of the warm air and heat would go to the ceiling, and it was quite hot up there and rather close."

"Senator STERLING. This was in the wintertime?"

"Mr. GARRED. The 2d of January; yes."

"Senator WALSH of Montana. How long did that condition continue, Mr. Garred?"

"Mr. GARRED. Which condition are you speaking of?"

"Senator WALSH of Montana. The condition you have spoken of; the occupancy of the corridor?"

"Mr. GARRED. They were confined there from the night of January 2 to the forenoon of January 8, or some time during the 8th, I believe, before they were all removed." (Hearings, p. 707.)

"Senator STERLING. And you mean except as they were from time to time released on examination?"

"Mr. GARRED. Yes; some of them were there only two or three days, and perhaps not as long as that, some of them. They started to examine them, I believe, on the second day." (Hearings, p. 708.)

"Mr. GARRED. We protested about keeping them there so long without having the proper conveniences for men—human beings—and Mr. Barkey, the special agent in charge, told us that he was doing everything within his power to remove them as soon as possible. Fort Wayne had not been opened up to them at that time, I understand. There was some difficulty in getting Fort Wayne—in getting the War Department to let them use Fort Wayne—and he said they were negotiating and trying to get that, and as soon as they got that they would be able to handle them much faster." (Hearings, p. 708.)

"Mr. GARRED. The post-office building was only a temporary accommodation for them until they could make arrangements elsewhere, and some of them went to the county jail and some to the municipal-court building and other places." (Hearings, p. 709.)

"Senator WALSH of Montana. Who was in charge of these men while they were incarcerated at the Federal building?"

"Mr. GARRED. Mr. Barkey. Of course, there were guards at each end of this corridor, and it was screened off with gates at the fourth floor, under Mr. Barkey's supervision, I believe." (Hearings, p. 709.)

The local jails to which the prisoners who were held to await a more formal examination were so densely crowded that the sanitary conditions became so insufferable as to induce the city council to spread upon its records a solemn protest and demand that the prisoners be removed, asserting that their further detention therein was a menace to the health of the city. The resolution is set out in the record. (Hearings, p. 698.)

Thus prompted, the prisoners were removed to the Fort Wayne Barracks outside the city or in its suburbs. Of the 1,000 or more men arrested in Detroit 128 only were ordered deported on the final hearing before the Department of Labor. Just how many were detained for the more formal inquiry does not appear. The plight of those eventually held, and particularly of their families, aroused the sympathetic interests of the humane people of the city in which they had taken up their residence, for when the order was made, either because ships were not available for their transport or it was impossible because of conditions there prevailing to deliver them in the countries from which they came, they continued in confinement at the Fort Wayne Barracks. A committee consisting of four eminent business men and an Episcopal bishop was appointed, which, with the approval of the Assistant Secretary of Labor, undertook to review the cases for the purpose of making recommendations touching the disposition of those held. It called to its assistance three high-class lawyers, each of whom had a creditable war record. These lawyers examined the records upon which the prisoners were held and reported to the committee their conclusions. Thus aided the committee paroled 100, the department paroled 9 more, 3 were released on bond, and 8 it found so dangerous or so deserving of deportation that they were left at the barracks.

It may be the fact, doubtless it is the fact, that conditions for some reason were worse in Detroit than elsewhere. But they were scarcely less shocking at Deer Island, where were concentrated the prisoners taken in the Boston district, as appears from the following recital in the opinion filed by Judge Anderson in Skeffington v. Colyer:

"[10] At Deer Island the conditions were unfit and chaotic. No adequate preparations had been made to receive and care for so large a number of people. Some of the steam pipes were burst or disconnected. The place was cold; the weather was severe. The cells were not properly equipped with sanitary appliances. There was no adequate number of guards or officials to take a census of and properly care for so many. For several days the arrested aliens were held practically incommunicado. There was dire confusion of authority as between the immigration forces and the Department of Justice forces and the city officials who had charge of the prison. Most of this confusion and the resultant hardship to the arrested aliens was probably unintentional; it is now material only as it bears upon the question of due process of law, shortly to be discussed. Undoubtedly it did have some additional terrorizing effect upon the aliens. Inevitably the atmosphere of lawless disregard of the rights and feelings of these aliens as human beings affected, consciously or unconsciously, the inspectors who shortly began at Deer Island the hearings, the basis of the records involving the determination of their right to remain in this country.

"In the early days of Deer Island one alien committed suicide by throwing himself from the fifth floor and dashing his brains out in the corridor below in the presence of other horrified aliens. One was committed as insane; others were driven nearly, if not quite, to the verge of insanity." (Hearings, p. 59.)

At Newark the inspectors worked all night and until 2 or 3 o'clock the next day, ordering those to Ellis Island whom they deemed it justifiable to hold. (Hearings, p. 565.) At Boston the period of detention, while the weeding-out process was in progress, was from a few hours to two or three days. (Hearings, p. 56.)

It is to be borne in mind that among those thus detained for periods varying from a few hours in the dead of night to a week were some who, when the opportunity came in the regular course of the inquiry, were able to satisfy the inquisitors of their citizenship. Regrettable as it may be, there are individuals enjoying American citizenship even as a birthright who are numbered among the members of the Communist Party. Many such must have been gathered in. Moreover, some who were unquestionably innocent were taken.

Reference has heretofore been made to the arrest of a group of 39 at Lynn, Mass., assembled to confer about organizing a cooperative bakery, a considerable number of them, about one-half, according to Judge Anderson, being citizens. Thirty-eight of those arrested were discharged the next day. (Hearings, pp. 783, 58.)

One of the gentlemen serving on the Detroit committee gave the following testimony:

"To illustrate the dilemma that the American citizen was in, I was known to those people as a person who was a sort of arbiter, and was considered as a sort of friend of both sides, and I was not looked upon as an enemy of the proletariat, and a young man who with his wife had been of considerable assistance to me in these public meetings I was carrying on to educate the foreigners, came to my office, in my business place, one morning in a very much excited state of mind. His name is Adolph Meyer. He lives at 74 Medbury Avenue, Detroit. He told me this story, that he was attending a lecture, which was not a forbidden lecture by any means, and the hall was surrounded and everyone in the hall was taken and imprisoned, amongst them himself. When he did not come home, his wife, who was a young woman, began to worry about midnight, but she did not know where to inquire for him, and was in a great state of mind until she learned about this raid, and long before 5 o'clock in the morning she was taken to one of the buildings. She had no way of knowing what jail he was in, but finally she found him, along toward daylight, and was permitted to talk to him through the bars, and he was released the next morning.

"Senator STERLING. What hall was that and what was the purpose of the raid?

"Mr. INGRAM. It was raided for the purpose of taking people who were said to be members of the Communist Labor Party.

"Senator STERLING. It was the hall where they assembled, a hall that was the meeting place for that party?

"Mr. INGRAM. No; I think it was a public hall where some one was giving a public address; but it was assumed to be one of that kind of people, and that was why they were raided.

"Senator STERLING. Do you know whether that hall was a common meeting place for the members of the Communist Party?

"Mr. INGRAM. I do not know, but I do not think it was. I was not given to understand that it was. He said it was a public hall. I think he told me the hall, but I do not remember it. He wanted to know what could be done. Naturally he thought he had some remedy. I said that nothing could be done, that it was a mistake, and to forget it.

"Senator STERLING. Did he claim to be a citizen?

"Mr. INGRAM. He is a citizen.

"Senator STERLING. And he had been arrested?

"Mr. INGRAM. He had been detained all night, but they let him out just as soon as they found that he was a citizen. There is no question about his citizenship. There is no question about his being a law-abiding citizen. He is a skilled mechanic, and was working for Mr. Ford at that time. He is in business for himself now.

"Senator STERLING. He is a German, is he?

"Mr. INGRAM. I do not know. It is a German name. He does not appear to be a German, so far as his language is concerned. He is an educated man. He is in one of the best parts of the residential section of Detroit." (Hearings, pp. 728-729.)

Of the anxieties aroused in the families of those arrested, of the eager search of wives for unreturning husbands, of their pilgrimage from one place of concentration to another in their quest, hoping perhaps that no worse fate had befallen their loved ones than that they had been caught in the raids, of the distress occasioned and the want induced by the incarceration of the breadwinners of so many households, it is unnecessary that the hearings should tell, as they do. Such incidents and conditions were miserable concomitants of the proceedings.

This aspect of the affair never seems to have addressed itself to the conscience or the heart of the Attorney General. He coolly declared that it was no part of the business of the Department of Justice to look after the families of those who commit crimes or render themselves subject to arrest. But he overlooks the fact that none of those whose arrest he authorized were proceeded against upon any theory that they had committed any crime; that many of them, because of their citizenship or because they were obviously innocent, if aliens, would be entitled to their discharge without delay and that delay must necessarily ensue, considering the number to be taken, and that even among those held a large number would eventually be released for want of evidence to justify deportation or because their innocence was established. It seems quite likely from the meager records kept that at least one-half of those taken were discharged upon the preliminary inquiry.

Questioned about the amount of the bail in which the prisoners were held, the Attorney General indifferently remarked that bail was fixed by the Department of Labor, the intimation being conveyed that having regard to the line which separated the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice from that of the Department of Labor, the subject of bail came exclusively within the field of the latter. The trouble with that theory is that the law intrusts the whole subject to the department last named, and any line such as that suggested is purely arbitrary. Moreover, it is at war with the idea that the two departments were "cooperating." We must assume, from the stand taken by the Attorney General, that they were not "cooperating" in respect to bail. Apparently the view taken by him is that his department was called upon to perform functions analogous to those it discharges in connection with the prosecution of crime, the officials of the Department of Labor standing in the same relation as the judges of courts in criminal proceedings.

But everyone conversant with the administration of justice knows that, ordinarily, the most perfect "cooperation" prevails between the district attorney and the judge in respect to bail in criminal cases. The amount is ordinarily suggested by the prosecuting official or fixed by the judge after conference with him, and an intimation from him that bail ought to be reduced is rarely disregarded.

Having made the wholesale arrests with the deplorable consequences to which reference has been made, falling upon the guilty and the innocent alike, the Department of Justice can not escape its share of the responsibility for not making diligent inquiry as to whether multitudes of those held should not be admitted to bail in some nominal sum or allowed to go on their own recognizance. Even after orders of deportation had gone against them the Detroit committee "paroled" nearly half of those held at the Fort Wayne Barracks without, it would appear, the loss of a man.

The Attorney General assured the committee that he had never heard of the horrible conditions prevailing in the Detroit jail and other detention quarters or of the action of the city council with reference thereto, though the metropolitan newspapers carried articles detailing them, the publication of which contributed to the public sentiment resulting in the appointment of the revisory committee referred to. It remains questionable whether his innocence is exculpatory or an aggravation of the wrong done through his official conduct, as it must be judged in the light of the humane view of our times touching the treatment due even to convicts.

Some advance has been made in that regard—

Since man first pent his fellow men
Like brutes within an iron den.

It will be interesting to know about the character of the men and something about the women taken and held in these "raids," over 10,000 in all, and particularly about those eventually ordered deported.

That some of them were dangerous characters, agitators, with abnormal or corrupt minds, trouble makers, enemies of law and order in every country, contemplating an Arcadia to be reached through turbulence and disorder, ready to "wade through slaughter to a throne" supported by what they call "the proletariat" is quite likely. Doubtless the nine eventually held at the Fort Wayne Barracks after the local committee did its work, out of the thousand or more arrested in Detroit, were of that class, richly deserving deportation, but entitled nevertheless to the observance of the formalities required by the law in the proceedings against them, less tenderly regarded by it than persons accused of crime, however, heinous.

In the more or less hysterical state of mind that prevailed when the raids were in progress and which to some extent still persists, it was popularly believed that all those taken were of that class—that they were all "red." It was quite natural that persons more or less remotely or feebly sympathetic with such should attend the hearings of the committee, as they did, so that the inquiry became known to the newspaper reporters as the "red" hearings. Indeed, anyone who challenged the proceeding, either from a legal or a humanitarian standpoint, laid himself open to the suspicion of being to some extent incarnadine. As a matter of fact, the great majority of those arrested, yea, even of those ordered deported, were perfectly harmless, deluded individuals, many of them unable to speak a word of English, with little or no comprehension of the principles or the purposes of the political party of which upon one consideration or another they had become nominal members, offenders against the letter but not the spirit of the law.

In a report on cases submitted to him, speaking from the record, one of the lawyers called to aid the Detroit reviewing committee says:

"The evidence in these cases tends to show a technical membership in a Communist Party organization, but utterly fails to show the character of the membership. No attention is given to the social, racial, and educational factors involved, and no attempt is made to determine whether the man is a member of a certain organization simply because of the restaurant facilities and the classes in reading and writing, or because he is interested in the political doctrines which it represents. It does not appear that the men are at all cognizant of the political doctrines of the organization." (Hearings, p. 701.)

Another of the lawyers commented similarly. (Hearings, p. 702.) It is not difficult to accept these views when it is remembered that learned judges have differed on the question of whether the literature of the Communist Party does or does not propose the policy of destroying or advocate the destruction of the Government by force, so ambiguous, possibly, or at least so inconclusive, is the language of the documents. The two departments concerned entertained varying ideas touching the attitude of the Communist Labor Party in that regard. This may seem strange to some people, but the writer has long held the view, and expressed it on the floor of the Senate, that the I. W. W. advocates the destruction of the Government by force, but neither of the departments referred to appear to agree with him, or they would have proceeded, presumably, against its alien devotees as they did against those alleged to be members of the parties against whom the raids in question were directed.

Many of those arrested were householders, and not a few had accumulated considerable property. Instances were not rare in which the victims were the fathers of families, including a number of children born in America, while, sad to relate, not a few had enviable war records, having served in the grand Army of that country whose Government they were accused of proposing to overthrow by force and violence. (See hearings, pp. 313-380.) For, be it remembered, these things were not done during the war, when official acts questionable in character at other times, might be held excusable, if not justifiable or defensible. A year and more had elapsed since the armistice at the time of these raids. Among those taken were skilled mechanics. Altogether, save for the class first named, they were the raw material out of which the American public school has made and will make in the first generation native to our soil our sturdiest manhood and the peers in devotion to this country and its ideals of any of its citizens.

Mr. Barkley, the Detroit newspaper man heretofore mentioned, said of those apprehended in that city:

"They seemed to be simple men, not, perhaps, very highly educated. They were clean. Most of them were fairly well dressed for workmen, not dirty-looking fellows. They did not look like what we have been led to believe Bolsheviks look like—that is, when they were taken in there. After four or five days, of course, they had all grown a pretty good crop of beard. They were not permitted to shave, and they slept in their clothes."

Senator WALSH of Montana. Did they look like good, decent, reputable workmen, or did they look like what you might call tramps and general rounders?

"Mr. BARKLEY. No; they were reputable workmen. Their families were very well clothed. In fact, one of the papers stated about some well-dressed women who had incited these men. It was their wives and families who had come in there. Some of them were making good money—up to $10 and $12 a day. They were skilled workmen." (Hearings, pp. 718-719.)

He tells about one of the victims, one Walter B. Reps, as follows:

"He was born in Poland 34 years ago and married there and came to the United States in 1913. He was a small man, neatly dressed and sturdy, with work-calloused hands and an intelligent, kindly expression. He had been an industrious workman. He had learned his trade as a cabinetmaker in Poland, and when he reached the United States he came to Detroit and went to work at once in a furniture factory. Later he left this factory to work for the Ford Motor Co., where he was employed at the time of his arrest. In order to become more expert in mechanics and English, he attended a school conducted four nights a week in a Polish educational society's hall. In 1917 he bought a little house, paying $1,000 down and $75 every two months. He continued to go to night school and placed his children, now 5 and 7 years old, respectively, in the public schools. He had been a member of the Socialist Party in Poland, and as all his associates in Detroit were members of the Detroit Polish branch of the same party in this country he also joined here."

"When the Detroit Polish branch switched its allegiance from the Socialist Party to the Communist Party last fall he believed, as did his fellow members, that the switch meant merely a change in name, inasmuch as the membership group remained the same. That was the basis or ground for his arrest. He told me that he was arrested on the evening of January 2, when he and a dozen others were studying an English lesson at their hall, No. 1648 Central Avenue." (Hearings, p. 716.)

It was of this class of men Mr. Ingram, one of the Detroit committee, said:

"The hardship was incurred in the raiding rather than in custody. They did worry those young men who were ignorant of what was going on and uncertain as to what their future would be. That got some of them in that bad mental condition. They went crazy in some cases."

It should be said in explanation of a feature of the testimony of Mr. Barkley above that in the month of September, 1919, a convention of the Socialist Party was held in the city of Chicago at which a split occurred, the more radical wing, if that is the proper expression, taking the name of the Communist Party, the rank and file, as is usual in such cases, following their leaders, as a rule, in remaining with the old or joining with the new party.

Mr. Ingram read to the subcommittee the report of his revisory committee, constituted as heretofore stated, in which was set out that it was impressed with the fact that in the case of many (mostly young men still in their twenties) it was obvious they were of apparent simplicity and good will, innocent of political or social bias of any kind, having no idea or only very vague ones regarding the Communist Party and its declarations, for membership in which they were sentenced to deportation.

He added:

"It would have excited the sympathies of this committee to have seen that so many of these young men were absolutely naive. They were entirely innocent of any political consciousness."

And then he tells of one of these young men who "went crazy." Further on the report referred to says:

"The men seemed to be of excellent physique, remarkably free from social or any other disease, simple, straightforward in manner, and with few exceptions they seemed to possess mechanical skill in trades much needed in this country. Most of them disclaim any intention of violating the laws of this country or to commit acts of violence. For the most part they are impressed with the inequities of our system of distribution, and believe that a general discussion will lead to improvements of the economic system. Their impressions are, for the most part, infantile, and in general their discussions gave a valuable outlet to any feelings of resentment. Most of the men, however, did not join in the tabooed political parties on account of the principles, but largely on account of the language, races, social, and business association. The clubhouse was in most cases a convenient hang out, and only the smallest number was prepared to make any serious sacrifices for political or economic causes."

"Young men knowing only their mother tongue spurred to brave the risks of a strange land and language by their ambition to better their worldly position, they quickly yielded to the educational inducements of the institutions recommended by persons of their own race and speaking their own language. Thus they were lured by the prospect of not only learning the language of the people with whom they must now live, but by the further inducement of acquiring the education necessary to discharge the duties of citizenship in a land to which they were strangers." (Hearings, p. 740.)

During this long detention at the barracks they were eager students, Mr. Ingram tells us:

"Up there in the barracks I do not think there has ever been a time in the daytime but what 75 per cent of those prisoners were ranged around tables with a teacher and were studying. There were three subjects that they were particularly interested in. One was arithmetic, as they had an idea that arithmetic was the gateway to a business career; and then they were studying about government, and were studying the English language. There was some one of their class that was teaching them. It was interesting to see how they were teaching them in that adult way." (Hearings, p. 740.)

Mr. Butzel, a Detroit lawyer who was active in promoting the organization of the revisory committee, said:

"I want to make this plain. I was interested socially in this, and I wanted particularly to know how these people got into this thing, and I wanted to try to get the psychological backing of it. It was highly significant that there was not found in the whole crowd a single case of gonorrhea or of syphilis. There were a great many Tolstoyans, absolutely nonresistant, believing in no form of government and in no form of attack on government, who were followers of the Christ in the most literal way. There were a surprising number of skilled workmen; and the men who could not be classified as skilled were of the highest type of unskilled workmen, who had had some machinery experience. In ordinary times, if there was no political matter involved here, they were of the type that we should have imported from Russia; because we were very busy then, although we are not so now."

Senator STERLING. You speak of Tolstoyans. Were any of them apprehended and held?

"Mr. BUTZEL. Yes."

Senator STERLING. Were they held for deportation, many of them?

"Mr. BUTZEL. Yes; they had joined the Socialist Party and had been transferred to the Communist Party, and therefore they were held. They were technical members of the party."

"The Ukrainians who were members seemed to have joined the party principally for eating purposes, because the restaurant there was about the only place where they could get strict Ukrainian food and cooking; and if you wanted to eat there you joined and paid and got the meal. That was not quite so true of the other groups." (Hearings, pp. 703-704.)

The first raid was directed against the Union of Russian Workers which, according to a well-informed witness, had an inside and an outside council; the latter unexceptionable in its professions, the former advocating the overthrow of the Government by force. The witness referred to, W. W. Sibray, is immigration inspector at Pittsburgh. He said in an official report:

"It may be interesting to note that approximately 90 per cent of the number of the Russian workers taken into custody by this office entered the United States in 1913 and 1914. Most of them were of the ignorant peasant type and were unable to read and write. Americanization work practically ceased with the beginning of the war in 1914. These ignorant Russian workers were therefore cast adrift, with no effort on the part of our own people to teach and inculcate in them the spirit of Americanism. Of the number arrested four had families in this country. The rest of them left their families in Russia. After Russia made peace with Germany and the Allies declared a general blockade of the Russian ports these men were unable to communicate with or hear from their families. They had not been here long enough to learn to speak English, and their only associates were their own people. The worry and suspense as to the fate of their families in Russia was such as to place them in a proper frame of mind to seize upon any pretext offered to oppose the policy of our Government, and when organizers for the Union of Russian Workers presented themselves they quite readily became members of the organization. The majority of them, however, insisted that their only thought was to have the ports opened and be permitted to return to their native land." (Hearings, p. 749.)

There was incorporated in the record a pamphlet written by one Constantine M. Panunzio, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and published by the Federation of the Churches of Christ in America, giving the result of a study made by the author of the records in 200 of these deportation cases and of an investigation conducted by him into the affair of the raids, in the course of which he visited many of the jails in which the prisoners were confined, and talked to and studied them. There are some inaccuracies in the report touching the disclosures of the record, arising from the fact that the author is not a lawyer. But as a whole it must impress the just mind by its temperate and highly judicial character. Among the interesting facts disclosed are those related in the following extract:

"Of the 200 cases whose records were examined, 7 were women and 1 was a minor. Ten nationalities were represented in the list. One hundred and forty-eight, or 74 per cent, were Russians. Next in number came the Poles, with 19, or 9.5 per cent; the Lithuanians, with 9, or 4.5 per cent; the Austrians, with 8, or 4 per cent; the Croatsians, with 6, or 3 per cent. There were also 3 Germans, 2 Yugo-Slavs, 2 Hungarians, 1 Italian, 1 Bulgarian, and 1 Hollander. (Hearings, p. 312.)

"The war record of the alien was frequently omitted. However, 37 are recorded as having purchased Liberty bonds and 24 as having bought thrift stamps or contributed to some patriotic fund. Two of the alleged radicals who were arrested and held for deportation had actually served in the United States Army. In the case of Steve Kerekoff (warrant No. 54860/156), a certified copy of his honorable discharge from the Army was introduced in the alien's defense. When questioned as to the organization of which he was a member he replied, 'The American Legion.' His personal effects consisted of a suit case and an Army uniform. (Hearings, p. 313.)

"In connection with the prison investigations four ex-soldiers were found at Detroit among those being held on a charge of belief in the overthrow by force of the United States Government. These men were Poles, and each had received his honorable discharge from the Army. One had served 17 months in France and had been discharged because of disability. He had made application for citizenship while in France and remarked to the investigator: "They did not kill me in France; they get me here." A second had served 12 months at the front, and the other two had been in service 5 months each. Two of them had experienced difficulty in finding work after leaving the Army; one had been out of work for five months. Still another man said when interviewed that he had tried to join the Army, but had been rejected. He had volunteered for Government service and had his badge and certificate to prove this.

"Occupationally these persons represented the average run of immigrants in America. They were steel and brass workers, carpenters, painters, printers, restaurant waiters, teamsters, mechanics, shoemakers, and manual laborers. In over half of the cases no reference is found to the economic status of those studies. In only 19 of the records is it stated that the individual had no money. On the other hand, 45 persons were found to have sums ranging from a few dollars to $2,000. The money was usually in a savings bank, but one man kept his savings in a Prince Albert tobacco box, and one stated that his wife was his savings bank.

"A number had interests in various kinds of business. One man had an interest in an ice and coal business; one owned stock in a mining concern, and another in a motor-truck company. One man owned an automobile, two persons owned a home, nearly paid for, while two others owned grocery businesses worth $2,000 and $7,000, respectively. Another man referred to his having lost $1,700 in a business enterprise. The prison investigations showed similarly a considerable range in economic status.

"Four men stated that they had lost all they had since being arrested; one of these had given power of attorney to a fellow countryman who had taken all the money and disappeared.

"A personal testimony: It may be added that in some cases, both in the prison investigations and in the examination of the records, employers, social-service agents, pastors, and even a deputy sheriff, immigration inspectors, and Department of Justice agents spoke well of the men. In the case of four persons, a representative of the Ford plant in Detroit, where they had been employed, stated that he had always considered the men good workmen. An official physician at a certain detention station in a letter to the author, dated May 11, 1920, sums up the opinion of many persons who came into personal contact with the alleged radicals. This physician had had personal charge of all the aliens while they were being held pending their hearing or their deportation. I quote from his letter:

"Most of them impressed me as rather ordinary foreign workmen, a grade above altogether unskilled labor, of fair intelligence. A few had more intelligence and some were quite pleasant. A few also were obstinate, unreasonable, grouchy, and generally unpleasant. The few with whom I talked had fairly radical ideas of social change, advanced with varying degrees of skill. I never was able to corner anyone into an admission of a program of violence. None of the men pressed his views upon me until approached, and then only as a matter of statement. They quite resented some clerk's error in referring to them as anarchists. Order was kept fairly easily. The radicals chose their own committees, through whom they dealt with the authorities. They made rules for their own conduct.

"They complained occasionally of their food and the sanitation of their quarters; most of these complaints had at least some ground. I never heard of any violence against their guards or attempt at it.

"In general, a few of these people I should not care to have around me at all; they are a general nuisance. Most of them seem harmless." (Hearings, p. 314.)

It is not to be understood that it is contended that those who did not conscientiously embrace the principles of the Communist Party, knowing that it contemplated the overthrow of the Government by force, though they had in form become members of it, were not technically subject to deportation. We forbear entering upon this delicate question of law involved. Assistant Secretary of Labor Post, acting for his chief, held that something more must be shown than that the accused was technically a member of the proscribed party, or at least that if it appeared that he did not understand that the purpose of the organization was thus to overthrow our Government, he should be released. His view seems to have been quite like that of the Detroit committee and the lawyers upon whose recommendation it "paroled" many of those ordered deported. On this point, as well as upon the character of the Communist Labor Party as an organization affected by the deportation statute, a controversy arose between the Assistant Secretary of Labor and the Attorney General. But we unhesitatingly condemn the making simultaneously of thousands of arrests, including many such persons and multitudes of others who by no stretch of the statute were amenable to deportation, with not only the dire attendant consequences heretofore adverted to but with the result that the Department of Labor was so overwhelmed with the work of taking the testimony and reviewing cases that it was months before a final determination was arrived at; in many of them, the prisoners meanwhile, the innocent and the guilty, at least those not able to secure the excessive bail fixed, rotting in jail, and no relief at hand from the close confinement even when the order of deportation was made for most of those found subject thereto.

The following is quoted from the Panunzio report, which purports to speak from the records on file in the Department of Labor:

"Ignatz Maritzka (warrant No. 54860/734) was arrested on January 3, 1920. The warrant for his arrest was issued on January 16. Bond to the amount of $1,000 was asked, which the alien was unable to furnish. Absence of evidence led to the cancellation of the warrant of this alien on April 1, 1920. He was therefore detained for a period of 88 days.

"Sam Kot (warrant No. 54860/787) was arrested on or about January 15, 1920. His warrant was issued on January 17. The testimony and evidence presented at the hearing were such that the warrant was ordered canceled on April 14. Since bail was set at $1,000 and the alien was unable to furnish it, he was held from the time of his arrest until after April 14. He was therefore detained for a period of 90 days.

"Ivan Dudinsky (warrant No. 54810/346) was arrested on or about January 3, 1920. His warrant was issued on December 29, 1919. Bond to the amount of $10,000 was asked, which alien was unable to furnish. Efforts were made to have the bail reduced, but without success. The case was closed on March 12 and ordered reopened on March 22. On April 12 bail was reduced to $1,000, which was furnished, and the alien was released on or about that date. He was therefore detained for a period of 101 days. The alien had tuberculosis at the time.

"Wasil Lalajo (warrant 54709/190) was arrested on November 7, 1919, on warrant dated November 6. Bond was required to the amount of $1,000, which he was unable to furnish. A hearing was held on November 9, and the inspector made the following summary of findings:

"Two of the special agents who have investigated Lalajo's case strongly recommend that the warrant be canceled. In fact, they wanted me to release this alien last night, but owing to the fact that the warrant calls for a bond I did not feel like doing it without authority from the department. I recommend that the work in this case be canceled and that the department notify the inspector in charge at Cleveland by telegraph that this alien can return to work and to support his family."

"This statement was dated November 9, 1919. When the alien was visited in the Youngstown jail on April 8, 1920, five months, less one day, from the date of this recommendation, Lalajo was still being detained. All warrant proceedings against this alien were canceled 11 days later, and if he was released immediately upon the cancellation of proceedings he had been detained for a period of 162 days. His wife and children were meanwhile reported to be destitute and suffering." (Hearings, p. 337.)

Not infrequently after the accused had been held or was out on bail for two or three months, the Department of Justice which assumed the rôle of prosecutor, announced, as the record shows, that it had no evidence to sustain the charge or that the only evidence it had came from its confidential informants or "under-cover men," whose identity it was deemed inadvisable to expose.

Attention has been called to the fact that about one-half of those arrested were discharged upon the preliminary inquiry. Subsequently the same ratio is noticeable in the number of those released on the final hearing. From the 200 records examined by Panunzio it appears that in 98 cases the warrants were ordered canceled, in 78 orders of deportation were issued, the remainder being disposed of in various ways. (Hearings, p. 324.)

The Department of Justice procured the issuance of the warrants, made the arrests, acted as prosecutor before the inspectors before whom the preliminary inquiry was conducted, and having swamped the Department of Labor with the cases running into the thousands, the Attorney General nonchalantly asserts that he is not responsible for delays in that branch of the service.

Even if the wisdom of the policy of a rigid enforcement of the law against every individual ascertained to be a member of one of the proscribed parties, whatever the degree of his culpability be admitted, the course pursued of arresting thousands of them simultaneously is indefensible. It has usually been considered wise, in the case of riot and other outbreaks of a mob participated in by great numbers of people, to apprehend and try the leaders and inciters of the lawlessness, exercising some forbearance toward those who were induced unreflectingly to join or who were deluded into joining the movement. Such was the course pursued in the "Gordon riots" and in the "whisky insurrection." The Government of the United States did not hold or try for treason every soldier of the Confederacy who surrendered at Appomattox. Evidently the propriety of following that course must have addressed itself to the Attorney General, for he reported to Congress in connection with his testimony before the House committee in support of the estimate for his department in the spring of 1920, that it had caused the arrest for deportation of the "officers" of the Russian Workers and the "leaders" of the Communist and Communist Labor Parties. Had he gone more into detail, the committee could not have failed to appreciate the humorous element in the issuing of six thousand-odd warrants to arrest only the "officers" and "leaders" of the organizations named.

But if a stern sense of duty impelled the Attorney General to proceed against every alien falling even technically under the ban of the statute, there was no occasion for precipitation in making the arrests. Conceding that the purpose of the proscribed parties was, as charged, to overthrow the Government of the United States by force, there is not the slightest evidence furnished by any of the "raids," nor has evidence from any source been adduced of any intent presently to carry out such purpose. No military organization seems to have existed, no guns or munitions of war were captured, none were assembled so far as appears, no plans for a military movement were disclosed. At best or at worst, the leaders in the movement seem to have contemplated that at some indefinite time in the future, near or remote, depending upon a concatenation of circumstances, a situation would arise offering an opportunity to accomplish their ends through a display of force which would then be made.

Those foremost in the advocacy of this course, even those mildly advocating it, as distinguished from those who merely accepted the doctrine they taught, could have been arrested in an orderly way, given a hearing in an atmosphere less surcharged with hysteria than must have prevailed under the conditions herein outlined, the proceedings being dignified and safeguarded from error by the application of those principles which have ennobled the administration of justice in England and America, in contrast to that of the countries from which most of those directly affected came. Unfortunately, the course taken could not have impressed them with the view that any just claim could be made to superiority in our system. It is quite likely that by the time it became convenient to arrest the less guilty most of them would have abandoned their affiliation with the proscribed party, so that there would be no occasion to prosecute.

It is appreciated that such a course would not have placed the Government in the possession of the documentary evidence it secured in the raids, tending to establish the lawless character of the organization proscribed or the membership of particular individuals in it. It is perfectly evident that to secure such evidence was the prime purpose with which the raids were made, but the searches and seizures were, as demonstrated, the lawless acts of a mob. The law does not tolerate the procurement of evidence by such means. The wise men who framed our Constitution and who had some experience with arbitrary government were convinced that such means were inconsistent with the spirit of liberty, and on the whole subversive of justice. They believed in the doctrine that "every man's house is his castle," and determined to make the law of the Republic they were establishing at least as liberal as that of the parent country, because of the protection of which the most eloquent orator of the day said:

"The poorest man may, in his cottage, bid defiance to all the forces of the Crown. It may be frail; its roof may shake; the wind may blow through it; the storm may enter; the rain may enter; but the King of England may not enter; all his force dares not cross the threshold of the ruined tenement."

Those who conceived the procedure here criticized were oblivious of the letter and wholly unappreciative of the spirit of the Bill of Rights. It should be said, for what extenuation there may be in it, that the practice of making such unlawful searches and seizures is not without precedent in the department. It is an abuse of modern growth which repeated condemnation by the Supreme Court has been ineffective to stay. (Silverthorne v. United States, 251 U. S. 385; Weeks v. United States, 232 U. S. 383.)

It was singularly unfortunate that the campaign, for such it may appropriately be termed, against the proscribed organizations should have synchronized with the steel strike of 1919-20, popularly represented as a revolutionary movement contemplating the overthrow of the Government in line with the plans, real or supposed, of the parties against whose members the proceedings here reviewed were directed.

This view of that strike, industriously inculcated by the press, according to the report of the Interchurch World Movement on the strike, was, it is there asserted, wholly erroneous. Its investigators declared that the strike was the old-fashioned strike brought about by unduly long hours, inadequate pay, and untoward conditions, inaugurated to secure relief on those lines and for no other purpose and waged in old-fashioned way. The recent announcement of the United States Steel Co. that it has abandoned, or is about to abandon, the 12-hour day, to which, the report referred to says, approximately one-half of its employees, 69,000 in all, were subject, affords support to the conclusion therein reached.

It is quite likely that the leaders in the organizations proceeded against became officiously or otherwise prominent in the strike. It is a part of their plan to foment disturbances of that character. They profess to be the only true friends of labor, and to offer the only practical program for the relief of the wage-workers.

When they were arrested and their followers from the ranks of the strikers were jailed by the hundred, it was quite reasonable that the great body of those honestly in the movement to secure shorter hours and better wages should have reached the conclusion that the Government had taken sides with their employers in an effort to break the strike and even that the arrests were made to that end.

The participation in the deportation proceedings under inquiry on the part of the Department of Justice was a deliberate usurpation. Congress declined to give to the Department of Labor as liberal an appropriation for the conduct of such proceedings as is desired, but made a generous appropriation to the Department of Justice amounting to $1,000,000, according to former Acting Secretary of Labor Abercrombie, which was utilized to that end. The only $1,000,000 appropriation to the Department of Justice, available at the time in question, and therefore, the one which must have been referred to, was the usual appropriation for the "Detection and prosecution of crimes." The Attorney General when he appeared on March 18, 1920, before the House committee to ask for a similar appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, quite frankly told that it was out of the fund referred to that the expenses of the deportation proceedings referred to were met (hearings, p. 614), though it was reiterated, quite justifiably, during the hearing this committee, that the proceedings were not criminal in their nature and that the accused were consequently not entitled to the rights accorded to those accused of crime.

Some correspondence relating to this subject between a member of this committee and the Comptroller of the Treasury is set out:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS
IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS,
April 25, 1921.

Hon. W. W. WARWICK,
Comptroller of the Treasury,
Treasury Department, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. WARWICK: From some testimony given by Mr. Abercrombie, formerly Acting Secretary of Labor, before a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, the following is quoted:

"Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, you will recall that in response to a widespread demand Congress made an appropriation of $1,000,000, or approximately $1,000,000, or perhaps more than a million dollars, to the Department of Justice to be used for the purpose of detecting and prosecuting the so-called 'Reds.' The Department of Labor, through the Bureau of Immigration, had requested Congress to make an appropriation of some $500,000—my recollection is that it was $600,000—to be used by the Department of Labor through the Bureau of Immigration for a like purpose.

"The request of the Department of Labor was not granted. As a result, the Department of Justice had something like $1,000,000 for that purpose, while the authority to arrest, try, and deport aliens was in the Department of Labor. That department was greatly embarrassed by its inability to function adequately on account of lack of funds. The country was wild on the subject of the suppression of anarchy, every newspaper was full of it, and in response to that popular demand Congress gave this appropriation to the Department of Justice."

Will you have the kindness to advise me to what appropriation to the Department of Justice Mr. Abercrombie refers, if you are able from his statement to specify? The committee was inquiring into the acts of the Department of Justice in making arrests through the Bureau or Division of Investigation of persons believed to be subject to deportation, with a view to the rendition of appropriate orders for deportation by the Department of Labor. Can you furnish me with a statement of the expenditures made by the Department of Justice in that behalf and give me a reference to the authority for the making of the same?

Very truly yours,

T. J. WALSH.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMPTROLLER OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, April 27, 1921.

Hon. THOMAS J. WALSH,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: I have your letter of April 25, 1921, referring to testimony given by Mr. Abercrombie, formerly Acting Secretary of Labor, before a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary to the effect that Congress made an appropriation of approximately $1,000,000 or more to the Department of Justice for the purpose of detecting and prosecuting the so-called "Reds."

I find no such appropriation upon the books of the Treasury Department, or in any of the laws of Congress. For many years the Department of Justice has had annual appropriations for "Detection and prosecution of crimes" generally, but has never had a special appropriation for detecting and prosecuting aliens who are subject to deportation under section 2 of the act of October 16, 1918 (40 Stat., 1012), entitled "An act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes."

Annual appropriations of the Department of Labor under the head of Immigration Service have carried provisions for the expense of enforcing this statute. (Act of July 19, 1919, 41 Stat., 221; act of March 6, 1920, 41 Stat., 518; act of June 5, 1920, 41 Stat., 936.)

Agents of the Department of Justice who were employed under the appropriation "Detection and prosecution of crimes" incurred expenses in connection with the apprehension, arrest, and hearing before immigration officials of aliens who were alleged to be of the classes subject to deportation under this statute. The Department of Labor refused to reimburse the Department of Justice for these expenses from its appropriation on the ground that the services had been rendered by these agents without request or authority from the Department of Labor. The expenses were paid by the disbursing clerk of the Department of Justice from the appropriation for detection and prosecution of crimes. In a decision dated June 26, 1920, the Comptroller of the Treasury approved credit of these payments in the account of the disbursing clerk for reasons stated in the decision, a copy of which is inclosed for your information.

The expenses thus incurred and paid by the Department of Justice have not been segregated and set apart from other expenditures under this appropriation, so the aggregate amount thereof can not readily be ascertained and reported to you by this office. I am informed by the Department of Justice that such payments have aggregated approximately $55,000. That is probably a fairly correct estimate. If that statement is not sufficiently accurate for your purposes, the accounts and vouchers covering the payments are on file in the office of the Auditor for the State and Other Departments, who can examine them in detail and report as accurately as may be the sum total of these payments. The vouchers, however, are for salaries and expenses, and do not indicate the particular work on which each employee was engaged.

Probably the $1,000,000 appropriation to which Mr. Abercrombie referred is that made by Congress in the deficiency appropriation act of November 4, 1919 (41 Stat., 337), for "Detection and prosecution of crime." The regular appropriation for that fiscal year (1920) was made in the act of July 19, 1919 (41 Stat., 207), in the sum of $1,600,000. For the current fiscal year (1921) the appropriation is $2,000,000, in the act of June 5, 1920 (41 Stat., 921).

The hearings before the committees of Congress no doubt will show the reasons given by the Attorney General for asking the $1,000,000 appropriation.

Sincerely yours,

W. W. WARWICK, Comptroller.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMPTROLLER OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, June 26, 1920.

The Auditor for the State and Other Departments submitted for approval, disapproval, or modification his decision of June 8, 1920, to the effect that certain payments made by the disbursing clerk of the Department of Justice on account of expenses incurred by agents of the Department of Justice in connection with the apprehension, arrest, and hearing before immigration authorities of aliens who were alleged to be of the classes subject to arrest and deportation by the immigration authorities under the provisions of section 2 of the act of October 16, 1918 (40 Stat., 1012), may lawfully be credited to the disbursing clerk under the appropriation for "Detection and prosecution of crimes," from which the payments were made.

It appears that the apprehension and arrest of these aliens by agents of the Department of Justice grew out of activities of that department in connection with the enforcement of criminal laws relating to aliens and were made voluntarily without request of the Department of Labor. Administration of section 2 of the act of October 16, 1918, is made by the terms of the section placed in the Department of Labor, and it is not, strictly speaking, a criminal statute. However, I am of the opinion that the circumstances of the case justify an allowance of credit to the disbursing clerk for these payments. While there may be some doubt as to the propriety of the use of the appropriation for detection and prosecution of crimes for expenses of this character, the expense now in question seems to have grown out of or to have been connected with other lawful activities of these agents and was ordered by the Attorney General to be paid from this appropriation. The services were rendered and the expenses incurred without request or authority from the Department of Labor, and therefore are not properly chargeable to the appropriation of that department.

The auditor's decision that credit for the payments which have been made may be given under the appropriation for detection and prosecution of crimes is approved.

W. W. WARWICK, Comptroller.

It will be noted that the Department of Labor, despite the claim of "cooperation," insist that "the services rendered by" the "agents" of the Department of Justice, herein considered, were so rendered "without request or authority" from the former.

The most charitable view to take of the affair is that the Attorney General was in no ordinary frame of mind because of the dastardly effort, partly successful, to dynamite his house in the summer of 1919, and like attempts upon the lives of other public or prominent men.

It is refreshing to note that the transactions reviewed have not been suffered to pass without emphatic condemnation from the bar, supplementary to the arraignment found in the pamphlet the publication of which gave rise to the inquiry, among the sponsors for which is the dean of the law school of perhaps the foremost university in America.

Ex-Senator Beveridge challenged the legality and the justice of the procedure in an address delivered before the American Bar Association. (Hearings, p. 86.)

John Lord O'Brien, late Assistant Attorney General of the United States in charge of the criminal business of the department during the war, a vigorous prosecutor and an able lawyer, reviewed the deportation cases in an address before the Maryland State Bar Association and unsparingly denounced the course pursued. (Hearings, p. 781.)

Secretary Hughes, at the time the foremost figure at the bar in America, at the Harvard Law School centennial declared the proceedings here reviewed to "savor of the worst practices of tyranny." Hon. Francis Fisher Kane, United States district attorney for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, a personal and political friend of the Attorney General, resigned his office because he could not conscientiously carry out the policy of the department concerning deportations.

Had any degree of trust or confidence been reposed in the ability, judgment, and discretion of the several district attorneys in the matters herein dilated upon, there probably would have been little occasion for criticism.

The transactions reviewed justify the fears the founders of our Government quite generally entertained of a highly centralized government. This country is too large to warrant the belief that a satisfactory administration of the criminal law can be had under detailed directions from the city of Washington, or that the Department of Justice can handle successfully from the same center analogous deportation proceedings in remote and populous centers. It will be remembered that the officers charged with the duty of making the arrests were not admonished to confer with the local district attorney, or report to him, but to report to Mr. Hoover in Washington by wire. The policy exemplified in the transactions under consideration is gaining continually in strength until the United States district attorney is being reduced to the status of a mere clerk, while the force of the Department of Justice continues to grow, that explicit directions may be given him in almost every case he is called upon to institute or try.

In view of the revelations made by the inquiry, the result of which is here reported, it is recommended:

1. That that part of the act of October 16, 1918, which makes aliens subject to deportation who are "members of or affiliated with any organization that entertains a belief in, teaches or advocates the overthrow of force or violence of the Government of the United States be repealed, or that it be amended so as to afford a locus penitentie, by virtue of which one who has not himself taught that doctrine or been otherwise instrumental in propagating it, upon proof before a Federal court that he never consciously embraced it or had in good faith renounced it, may avert deportation. Those who believe in such a policy or inculcate such belief would still be liable under the statute.
2. The Department of Labor should be directed to revise its rules so as to make them conform to the plain mandate of the Constitution.
3. The issuance of warrants in deportation proceedings by judges and court commissioners should be authorized so there may be no occasion for resort to the device of telegraphic warrants.
4. The right to have counsel from the time of the arrest in proceedings for deportation should be guaranteed by law.
5. A limit should be fixed on the time during which one arrested in deportation proceedings may be held in jail to await a determination by the Department of Labor, the period of delay occasioned by him not to be included.

CHARGES OF ILLEGAL PRACTICES OF THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Mr. STERLING, from the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report:

On the 10th day of December, 1920, there was referred to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary for investigation and report the "Report upon the illegal practices of the United States Department of Justice," prepared by a self-constituted committee of lawyers in May, 1920, under the auspices of the National Popular Government League. The report was signed by the following-named lawyers:

R. G. Brown, Memphis, Tenn.	Alfred S. Niles, Baltimore, Md.
Zachariah Chafee, Jr., Cambridge, Mass.	Roscoe Pound, Cambridge, Mass.
Felix Frankfurter, Cambridge, Mass.	Jackson H. Ralston, Washington, D. C.
Ernst Freund, Chicago, Ill.	David Wallerstein, Philadelphia, Pa.
Swinburne Hale, New York City.	Frank P. Walsh, New York City.
Francis Fisher Kane, Philadelphia, Pa.	Tyrell Williams, St. Louis, Mo.

The report is addressed "To the American people," and the opening paragraph of the report is indicative of the general tenor of the charges made therein against certain practices of the Department of Justice. It reads:

"For more than six months we, the undersigned lawyers, whose sworn duty it is to uphold the Constitution and laws of the United States, have seen with growing apprehension the continued violation of that Constitution and breaking of those laws by the Department of Justice of the United States Government."

The report alleges that the illegal practices charged against the department were committed under the guise of a campaign for the suppression of radical activities conducted by the office of the Attorney General, whose agents throughout the country acted under express instructions from Washington; that in this campaign many of the constitutional guarantees relating to personal liberty and property were ignored and constitutional rights violated. Among other things it is charged that these illegal practices of the department included: (1) A violation of the eighth amendment of the Constitution, which provides that—

"excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted."

It is alleged that "punishments of the utmost cruelty and heretofore unthinkable in America have become usual"; "that great numbers of persons arrested, both aliens and citizens, have been threatened, beaten with blackjacks, struck with fists, jailed under abominable conditions, or actually tortured."

Certain exhibits annexed to the report are referred to as proof. To these and other exhibits some consideration will be given further on in this report.

(2) A violation of the fourth amendment to the Constitution, which provides:

"The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized."

It is alleged that many hundreds of persons have been arrested without warrant or pretense of warrant; that mass raids and mass arrests were made without warrant as a result of both oral and written instructions from Washington; that in "countless cases" the homes, offices, and gathering places of persons suspected of radical affiliations have been invaded and property seized and removed, without pretense of search warrant, for use by the Department of Justice, and that property which could not be removed or which was of no use to the department "was intentionally smashed and destroyed."

As proof of these charges further exhibits are referred to, and of which more later.

In this same connection, it is charged that the department made use of under-cover, provocative agents, "agents provocateurs," for the purpose not only of informing upon but of instigating acts which might be declared criminal.

(3) A violation of that part of the fifth amendment to the Constitution, which provides that—

"no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law."

In this connection, the report calls special attention to the Cannone case, as shown by Exhibit 9 annexed to the report, and in which case the committee of lawyers charges that the agents of the department "committed assault, forgery, and perjury."

In addition to these very serious charges of illegal and unconstitutional practices on the part of the Department of Justice and its agents, the Attorney General is charged with "deliberate misuse of his office and a deliberate squandering of funds intrusted to him by Congress in carrying on a propaganda against radicals through the public press for the purpose of prejudicing the public in favor of his actions."

In proof of this charge, reference is made to Exhibits 17 and 18, annexed to the report.

The report apparently in conclusion seeks to minimize the results of the efforts of the Attorney General against the so-called red menace, in making the statement that prior to January 1, 1920, there were actually deported 263 persons; that since January 1, 1920, there have been actually deported only 18 persons; and that since January 1, 1920 (and up to the time of making the report, of course), there have been ordered deported an additional 529 persons, making a total of only 810 persons actually deported and ordered deported since the beginning of the campaign instituted by the Department of Justice some time prior to January 1, 1920.

It will thus be seen that the charges made against the Department of Justice and the Attorney General are of a very serious character. They, in effect, say that the sacred rights of citizens and residents under the Constitution and laws, and the principles which govern our free institutions, have been ruthlessly violated by that department, and that the Attorney General himself is largely responsible for such violation.

But, under the principles invoked by those who charge these illegal practices committed by or under the direction of the Attorney General, it is but fair and just that that official and the Department of Justice, of which he was the head, should have the right to be heard, either by way of complete defense or in mitigation of any of the charges made. It is proposed, therefore, to call attention to the law applicable to the exclusion and deportation of aliens and to the decisions by the courts construing the law, and also briefly to review the evidence submitted in support of the charges of the committee of lawyers, hereinbefore summarized, as well as those portions of the evidence submitted to the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, charged with the conduct of the investigation, which are deemed at all relevant to the issues.

In the first place, it should be noted that the arrests and seizures complained of were made in cooperation with the Department of Labor in two distinct campaigns, or "raids," against different classes of aliens: The first, the raid against the Union of Russian Workers, of November 7, 1919; and the second, that of January 2, 1920, directed mainly against the members of the Communist Party and of the Communist Labor Party, membership in which organizations was deemed sufficient to subject the alien to deportation under the provisions of the act approved October 16, 1918. Sections 1 and 2 of this act are as follows:

"That aliens who are anarchists; aliens who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or of all forms of law; aliens who disbelieve in or are opposed to all organized government; aliens who advocate or teach the assassination of public officials; aliens who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property; aliens who are members of or affiliated with any organization that entertains a belief in, teaches, or advocates the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or of all forms of law, or that entertains or teaches disbelief in or opposition to all organized government, or that advocates the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character, or that advocates or teaches the unlawful destruction of property, shall be excluded from admission into the United States.

"Sec. 2. That any alien who, at any time after entering the United States, is found to have been at the time of entry, or to have become thereafter, a member of any one of the classes of aliens enumerated in section 1 of this act, shall, upon the warrant of the Secretary of Labor, be taken into custody and deported in the manner provided in the immigration act of February 5, 1917. The provisions of this section shall be applicable to the classes of aliens mentioned in this act irrespective of the time of their entry into the United States."

It was believed that the principles and constitutions of such organizations taught or advocated the overthrow of the Government by force and violence. It had been so held by the Secretary of Labor, whose decision upon the question is, under the law, final. (See sec. 19, immigration act of Feb. 5, 1917; Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 698.)

No form of procedure is prescribed by the act of October 16, 1918, beyond this, namely, that any alien who is a member of any one of the classes enumerated in section 1 of the act shall, "upon the warrant of the Secretary of Labor be taken into custody and deported in the manner provided in the immigration act of February 5, 1917."

The act of February 5, 1917, is scarcely more explicit in regard to procedure in deportation cases. Section 19 provides that—

"At any time within five years after entry, any alien who at the time of entry was a member of one or more of the classes excluded by law; * * * any alien who at any time after entry shall be found advocating or teaching the unlawful destruction of property, or advocating or teaching anarchy or the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or of all forms of law, or the assassination of public officials; * * * shall, upon warrant of the Secretary of Labor, be taken into custody and deported."

Aside from the proceedings before the special board of inquiry, provided for in the act of February 5, 1917, and which are not pertinent to the issues here involved, the only other reference in the act relating to procedure which may be construed to refer to procedure in cases like those in controversy is a provision relative to immigrant inspectors, found in section 16 of that act, as follows:

"Said inspectors shall have power to administer oaths and to take and consider evidence touching the right of any alien to enter, reenter, pass through, or reside in the United States, and where such action may be necessary to make a written record of such evidence; and any person to whom such oath has been administered, under the provisions of this act, who shall knowingly or willfully give false evidence or swear to any false statement in any way affecting or in relation to the right of any alien to admission, or readmission to, or to pass through, or to reside in the United States shall be deemed guilty, etc."

The further provision is made that—
"Any commissioner of immigration or inspector in charge shall also have power to require by subpoena the attendance and testimony of witnesses before said inspectors and the production of books, papers, and documents touching the right of any alien to enter, reenter, reside in, or pass through the United States, and to that end may invoke the aid of any court of the United States."

But with these as apparently the only provisions of the statute governing the power of the Secretary of Labor relative to deportation and the issuance of warrants therefor, and the power of immigration inspectors and the proceedings they are authorized to conduct, the Secretary of Labor promulgated a system of regulations and rules governing arrests of aliens for deportation and the hearings upon such arrests. The particular rule bearing upon the questions here involved is rule 22, with its various subdivisions. We quote such parts of the rule as are pertinent.

RULE 22. ARREST AND DEPORTATION ON WARRANT.

"Subdivision 1 of this rule simply enumerates the different classes of aliens subject to deportation as provided by section 19 of the immigration act of February 5, 1917.

SUBDIVISION 2. INVESTIGATION AND REPORT OF CASES.

"Officers shall make thorough investigation of all cases when they are credibly informed or have reason to believe that a specified alien in the United States is subject to arrest and deportation on warrant. All such cases, by whomsoever discovered, shall be reported to the immigration officer stationed nearest the place where the alien is found to be.

SUBDIVISION 3. APPLICATION FOR WARRANT OF ARREST.

"The application must state facts showing prima facie that the alien comes within one or more of the classes subject to deportation after entry; and, except in cases in which the burden of proof is upon the alien (Chinese) involved, should be accompanied by some substantial supporting evidence. If the facts stated are within the personal knowledge of the inspector reporting the case, they need not be in affidavit form. But, if based upon statements of persons not sworn officers of the Government (except in cases of public charges, covered by subdivision 4 hereof), the application should be accompanied by the affidavit of the person giving the information or by a transcript of a sworn statement taken from that person by an inspector. Telegraphic application may be resorted to only in case of necessity or when some substantial interest of the Government would be subserved thereby, and must state (a) that the usual written application is being forwarded by mail; and (b) the substance of the facts and proof therein contained. The code supplied by the department should be used whenever practicable.

"Subdivision 4 relates to the proof in cases of aliens who have become public charges.

SUBDIVISION 5. EXECUTION OF WARRANT OF ARREST AND HEARING THEREON.

"(a) Upon receipt of a telegraphic or written warrant of arrest the alien shall be taken before the person or persons therein named or described and granted a hearing to enable him to show cause, if any there be, why he should not be deported. Pending determination of the case, in the discretion of the immigration officer in charge, he may be taken into custody or allowed to remain in some place deemed by such officer secure and proper, except that in the absence of special instructions an alien confined in an institution shall not be removed therefrom until a warrant of deportation has been issued and is about to be served.

"(b) At the beginning of the hearing under the warrant of arrest the alien shall be allowed to inspect the warrant of arrest and all the evidence on which it was issued, and shall be apprised that he may be represented by counsel. The alien shall be required then and there to state whether he desires counsel or waives the same, and his reply shall be entered on the record. If counsel be selected, he shall be permitted to be present during the conduct of the hearing and to offer evidence to meet any evidence presented or adduced by the Government. Objections and exceptions of counsel shall not be entered on the record, but may be presented by him in accompanying brief. If, during the hearing, it shall appear to the examining inspector that there exists a reason additional to those stated in the warrant of arrest why the alien is in the country in violation of law, the alien's attention shall be directed to the facts which constitute such reason, and he shall be given an opportunity to show cause why he should not be deported therefor.

"(c) At the close of the hearing the full record shall be forwarded to the bureau, together with any written argument submitted by counsel and the recommendations of the examining officer and the officer in charge, for determination as to whether or not a deportation warrant shall issue.

SUBDIVISION 6. RELEASE UNDER BOND.

"The amount of any bond under which an arrested alien may be released shall be $500, unless different instructions are given by the department, which, prior to release, shall approve the bond, except that the approval of the local United States attorney as to form and execution shall be sufficient when the immigration officer in charge deems it proper, with a view to avoid delay, to submit the bond to such attorney for approval. United States bonds may be accepted in lieu of sureties on bail bond, or sureties may deposit United States bonds instead of justifying in real estate. Aliens who are unable to give bail shall be held in jail only in case no other secure place of detention can be found.

SUBDIVISION 7. WARRANT FOR DEPORTATION AND DEPORTATION THEREON.

"Upon receipt of the department's decision, or as soon thereafter as the circumstances of the case may require, the alien shall be taken into the custody of the immigration officials (if this has not occurred already) for deportation. Thereafter he shall be deported, previous notice of deportation having been given the steamship company concerned, together with a brief description of the alien and any other appropriate data, including the cause of deportation, physical and mental condition, and destination."

On December 31, 1919, the Acting Secretary of Labor, Mr. John W. Abercrombie, on the recommendation of the Commissioner General of Immigration, approved a modification of paragraph (b) of subdivision 5 of rule 22. The change made is the first sentence of paragraph (b) and as modified the sentence reads as follows: "Preferably at the beginning of the hearing under the warrant of arrest, or at any rate as soon as such hearing has proceeded sufficiently in the development of the facts to protect the Government's interests, the alien shall be allowed to inspect the warrant of arrest and all the evidence on which it was issued and shall be apprised that thereafter he may be represented by counsel." (Hearings, pp. 397-399.)

But recurring to the execution of the warrant, it will be observed that neither the statute nor the rules and regulations thereunder provide in what manner or by whom the warrant of arrest in a deportation proceeding shall be served, or by whom the alien shall be "taken into custody" upon the warrant of the Secretary of Labor. The rules do not designate any class of agents or inspectors of the Department of Labor or of the Bureau of Immigration who are or who may be specially commissioned to make such arrests. Admittedly the proceedings for the deportation of an alien are not criminal proceedings.

It is not necessary, therefore, that the arrest be accomplished by a marshal, sheriff, or other peace officer. So far as anything in the immigration law or rules is concerned, the arrest might be lawfully made by any private person to whom the Secretary of Labor or an immigration inspector should direct and deliver the warrant for service, the act of delivering itself being sufficient authorization for taking into custody the alien named therein.

The inquiry follows: If any agent of the Bureau of Immigration not specifically authorized by law or regulation, or any private person to whom a warrant for that purpose is given, may execute the warrant by taking the party into custody, why may not an agent of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice be qualified to receive from the Department of Labor, or any of its duly authorized agents or inspectors, the warrant issued by the Secretary of Labor, and to carry out the mandate of the warrant by taking into custody the party charged?

Taking into consideration the statutes, rules, and decisions of the courts relating to deportation, and therewith recognizing the fact that the deportation proceeding is not a criminal proceeding, we see no illegal practice, nor the violation of any constitutional right, in the mere fact that many—perhaps the great majority of—warrants in the so-called raids of November 7, 1919, and January 2, 1920, were executed by agents of the Department of Justice, the warrants therefor having been issued by the Secretary of Labor. Neither would it appear that any constitutional right had been violated in the issuance of a telegraphic warrant for arrest or a warrant based on a telegram received by the Department of Labor from a sworn officer or agent of either the Department of Labor or the Department of Justice.

In these raids there was from the outset and avowedly a close and consistent cooperation between the Department of Labor and the Department of Justice. There was an apparent necessity for it, arising largely out of the insufficiency of the appropriations for the Department of Labor, which left that department with a force of men wholly inadequate for the undertaking. The situation as viewed by the Department of Labor is shown in part, at least, by the statement before the committee of Mr. John W. Abercrombie, former solicitor for the Department of Labor, and Acting Secretary of Labor, as follows:

"Senator WALSH of Montana. Just what do you mean by saying that it was being handled by the Department of Justice? Is not this a matter that was entrusted to your office?

"Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I mean that the Department of Justice and the Department of Labor were cooperating in their activities relating to aliens charged with anarchy—relating to the arrest of aliens charged with violations of the anarchy laws.

"Senator WALSH of Montana. Were you ignorant of the matter to such an extent that you did not even know the day of the arrests?

"Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, you will recall that in response to a widespread demand Congress made an appropriation of $1,000,000, or approximately $1,000,000, or perhaps more than a million dollars, to the Department of Justice to be used for the purpose of detecting and prosecuting the so-called 'reds.' The Department of Labor, through the Bureau of Immigration, had requested Congress to make an appropriation of some $500,000—my recollection is that it was $600,000—to be used by the Department of Labor through the Bureau of Immigration for a like purpose.

"The request of the Department of Labor was not granted. As a result the Department of Justice had something like $1,000,000 for that purpose, while the authority to arrest, try, and deport aliens was in the Department of Labor. That department was greatly embarrassed by its inability to function adequately on account of lack of funds. The country was wild on the subject of the suppression of anarchy; every newspaper was full of it; and in response to that popular demand Congress gave this appropriation to the Department of Justice.

"Senator KING. Judge, may I interrupt you there? An appropriation was made, as I recall, for deportation purposes and investigations of the Department of Labor; but I am advised that somebody in the Department of Labor has devoted it—or at least a part of it—to other purposes.

"Mr. ABERCROMBIE. My recollection is that the increased appropriation made to the Department of Labor was for the purpose of deporting those who had already been ordered to be deported and who could not be deported on account of conditions incident to the war. We could not deport while the war was on, and as a result when the war closed there were many aliens—thousands of them, according to my recollection—who were held for deportation; and while I am not absolutely certain about it, my recollection is that the appropriation to which Senator KING refers was made for the purpose of deporting those who had already been found subject to deportation. At any rate the Department of Labor and the Department of Justice felt it their duty to cooperate, the Department of Justice having the money, the necessary appropriation, and the Department of Labor having the authority under the law to deport. So we cooperated to the extent that the Department of Labor issued warrants for arrests upon proper affidavits submitted by the Department of Justice.

"All the hearings, of course, under the law had to be conducted by the Department of Labor.

"Senator WALSH of Montana. But the arrests were actually made by the Department of Justice?

"Mr. ABERCROMBIE. In cooperation. The representatives of the Department of Justice and the Department of Labor acted cooperatively.

"Senator WALSH of Montana. And the expenses were met out of this appropriation for the Department of Justice?

"Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Their part of the expenses. Our officers were paid out of the regular appropriation of the Bureau of Immigration.

"Senator KING. All of the employees you had at your disposal for deportation purposes continued in cooperation with the Department of Justice employees?

"Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Yes. Our employees acted in cooperation with their employees."

"Senator STERLING. You had your regular force?"

"Mr. ABERCROMBIE. We had our regular force."

"Senator STERLING. Who were paid out of the general appropriation for the Department of Labor?"

"Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Yes; that is my understanding. It was simply an effort of the two departments to cooperate in the performance of important duties."

"Senator WALSH of Montana. Who else was there to pay in connection with the arrests besides your employees—the employees of the Department of Labor?"

"Mr. ABERCROMBIE. The employees of the Department of Labor and the employees of the Department of Justice cooperated in making the arrests. The arrests were made in large numbers, and whole clubs or societies were taken at one time; and just two or three immigration inspectors would not do it alone." (Hearings, pp. 403-407.)

"Mr. Charles T. Clayton, attorney at law, Washington, D. C., who had been an employee in the office of the Secretary of Labor, and whose duties for a time were to examine the records of immigration cases transmitted to the Secretary, was a witness at the hearings. He had been one of the subcommittee engaged in preparing the report of the committee of 12 lawyers, although he was not one of the signers of the report. Referring to cooperation between the Department of Labor and the Department of Justice on former occasions, he testified:

"Senator WALSH of Montana. * * * Did the department prior to the time of these raids have anything to do with the initiation of these deportation proceedings before the department?"

"Mr. CLAYTON. There had been times, I think, at intervals for many years, that field officers in the Department of Justice had worked with the field officers of the Department of Labor in such matters; that they got information about some persons already in the United States, having been admitted, who were engaged in practices not in conformity with the law, when they would bring the matter to the attention of the officers of the Department of Labor and cooperate with them in confining the guilty party, or in establishing such prima facie facts as to his guilt as would initiate processes in the Department of Labor."

"Senator WALSH of Montana. The Department of Labor had solicited the aid of the Department of Justice in connection with that work?"

"Mr. CLAYTON. That I could not answer."

"Senator WALSH of Montana. You would see no impropriety in that, would you? If officers of the Department of Justice, of the Bureau of Investigation, being out endeavoring to ascertain about criminal practices, found some man against whom no criminal charge could be brought, and yet he was in this country in violation of the immigration laws, you would see no impropriety in their calling the attention of the Department of Labor to that fact and rendering them such aid as they could in securing a ruling that that individual ought to be deported?"

"Mr. CLAYTON. I go further than that, and I should say there would be no impropriety in any citizen doing that." (Hearings, pp. 351-352.)

Further, as to cooperation and the need of cooperation between the two departments, Attorney General Palmer states as follows:

"Attorney General PALMER. The deportation statute, of course, is a statute to be executed, I may say, by the Department of Labor."

"But in December of 1919, when the situation in the country was pretty bad, Mr. Chairman, when violence had broken out in a great many places of a nature that gave all thoughtful citizens much concern, there was a feeling that there ought to be cooperation in the enforcement of this statute—of the closest kind—between the Department of Labor and the Department of Justice; and after conferences it was agreed that the Department of Justice would make the investigations and present the cases to the Department of Labor, laying the facts gathered by the Department of Justice before the Department of Labor and allowing the Department of Labor to act as the law provided."

"That course was proceeded with. Individual arrests for deportation were made, but the situation was too big to be met by that sort of thing. The Department of Justice came to the conclusion that there was an organized effort—or there were several organized efforts—of a quasi revolutionary character; efforts were being made to organize masses of people, as we believed and as the evidence showed, to attempt to injure the Government by force."

"The first organization that we investigated, which resulted in a number of arrests, was the Union of Russian Workers."

"Senator STERLING. This was after your understanding with the Department of Labor?"

"Attorney General PALMER. Yes."

"Senator BORAH. Was that understanding agreeable to the Department of Labor?"

"Attorney General PALMER. Yes. We made a large number of arrests of the members of the Union of Russian Workers, because their organization and its tenets, its purposes, its plans, its beliefs, brought them within the language of the deportation statute."

"Now, of course, we made simultaneous arrests. What is commonly called a 'raid' is really a large number of simultaneous arrests. That was not done because it had a sensational appearance. It was not done for any purpose of giving publicity to what was being done. It was done to protect the Government's interests in the matter. If there was a statute under which men had to be arrested—and there were large numbers, as the Government believed, that violated that statute—obviously we could not go and arrest one or two men and give all the rest of those men notice of what the Government was going to do, and get anywhere near the enforcement of the statute. So that the plan of simultaneous arrests was adopted, and several hundred of the members of this Union of Russian Workers were arrested and turned over to the inspectors of immigration and went through to the Department of Labor, and many of them were eventually deported under the statute."

"During the fall the formation and activities of the Communist Party and the Communist Labor Party proceeded, and by the end of the year 1919 we were convinced, and the Department of Labor agreed, that the Communist Party was an organization membership in which made an alien subject to deportation under the statute, and we organized our people for the purpose of making simultaneous arrests of the members of that party in 33 cities of the United States. Of course, larger numbers were involved, and the arrests, for the reasons I stated a moment ago, had to be simultaneous." (Hearings, pp. 7 and 8.)

"It is evident from the foregoing that both the public and Congress must have known of the activities of the Department of Justice in connection with deportation cases or in raids made for the purpose of apprehending criminals and aliens subject to deportation under the statute already quoted. But it is also to be observed that according to the uncontradicted testimony all examinations of parties arrested and all hearings were before an immigration agent or inspector, who alone could hold an alien for deportation."

Attorney General Palmer in his statement before the House Appropriations Committee, when considering the sundry civil appropriation bill, March, 1920, gave a detailed account showing the number of warrants issued, arrests made, including the arrests of leaders of the Communist and Communist Labor Parties, and the deportations ordered. He also discusses the form of deportation proceedings. The statement of Attorney General Palmer before the House committee will be found at pages 614-630 of the hearings before this committee."

In addition to the statement made by the Attorney General to the Appropriations Committee in connection with anarchist and similar activities, attention is called to the fact that in the spring of 1919 there were great and prolonged strikes in many of the industrial centers of the country, and that in these strikes foreign agitators and propagandists were prominent. It may be recalled, however, that Mr. William Z. Foster, an American citizen, as secretary of the committee composed of the 24 international unions, was the chief figure in the management of the great steel strike of 1919. He was before the subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor, appointed to investigate that strike. Excerpts from his book on "Syndicalism" were put into the record made by the committee, showing that he believed nothing illegal if necessary to carry out his views, and that he advocated violence in strikes. His associates were Mr. Margolis, attorney for the I. W. W. at Pittsburgh, and Vincent St. John, formerly secretary of the I. W. W. The committee characterized such men as dangerous to the country and dangerous to the cause of union labor. (Rept. No. 259, 66th Cong., 1st sess., pp. 17 et seq.) The belief was prevalent that many of the agitators were paid out of Russian money furnished for the purpose of stirring a large alien element of our population to revolutionary action. About the same time internal machines were addressed to many different Government officials, resulting in serious injury to some individuals; and these outrages were followed about a month later by bomb explosions wherein the lives and homes of various State and Federal officials were imperiled."

As a result of this agitation and these acts of violence, including attempts at assassination and destruction of property, the public was much aroused. There was considerable impatience because of the apparent inactivity of the Department of Justice, and this was to some extent reflected in the unanimous adoption of a Senate resolution introduced by Senator POINDEXTER October 19, 1919, which resolution is as follows:

SENATE RESOLUTION 213.

"Resolved, That the Attorney General of the United States is requested to advise and inform the Senate whether or not the Department of Justice has taken legal proceedings, and if not, why not; and if so, to what extent; for the arrest and punishment of the various persons within the United States who, during recent days and weeks, and for a considerable time continuously previous thereto, it is alleged, have attempted to bring about the forcible overthrow of the Government of the United States; who, it is alleged, have preached anarchy and sedition; who, it is alleged, have advised the defiance of law and authority, both by the printing and circulation of printed newspapers, books, pamphlets, circulars, stickers, and dodgers, and also by spoken word; and who, in like manner, it is alleged, have advised and openly advocated the unlawful obstruction of industry and the unlawful and violent destruction of property, in pursuance of a deliberate plan and purpose to destroy existing property rights and to impede and obstruct the conduct of business essential to the prosperity and life of the community."

"Also, the Attorney General is requested to advise and inform the Senate whether or not the Department of Justice has taken legal proceedings for the arrest and deportation of aliens who, it is alleged, have within the United States committed the acts aforesaid, and if not, why not; and if so, to what extent." (Senate hearings, p. 580.)

In response to this resolution the Attorney General submitted to the Senate a report in detail in which, among other things, he pointed out the proposed plan of cooperation with the Department of Labor in the enforcement of deportation statutes."

The Attorney General also, during 1920, issued a document entitled "Red Radicalism as Described by Its Own Leaders," the same having been printed by the Government Printing Office. This pamphlet contains exhibits collected by the Attorney General and the foreword concludes:

"The whole is submitted for the furtherance of a more realizing popular appreciation of the menace involved in the unrestrained spread of criminal communism among the masses."

The report of the Attorney General in response to the Poinexter resolution is Senate Document 153, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session. The Attorney General, after stating that the administration of the deportation statutes is entirely within the jurisdiction of the Department of Labor, but that it seemed to be the only means at his disposal of attacking the radical movement, and as Congress had seen fit to refuse appropriations to the Department of Labor for its enforcement he had cooperated with the immigration officials to the fullest extent, and, among other things, says:

"Since the organization of the radical division a more or less complete history of over 60,000 radically inclined individuals has been gathered together and classified and a foundation for action laid, either under the deportation statutes or legislation to be enacted by Congress. I should, of course, communicate to you but little of this information. However, it is at the disposal of Congress for proper and confidential use. The record in the Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman cases is marked 'Exhibit No. 6' and 'Exhibit No. 7.'"

"One of the first matters receiving the attention of the radical division after its organization was the various societies in the United States adhering to anarchistic doctrines. Principal among these was the organization known as the Federation of the Union of Russian Workers. The investigations made by this department soon led it to the conclusion that this organization was formed for the sole purpose of destroying all institutions of government and society. It was necessary, however, in order to prove the anarchistic nature of this organization, to secure copies of its constitution, as well as copies of documents and literature published and circulated by it. It is impossible for me to set forth the methods by which same were secured, owing to the extremely confidential nature of these investigations. After definitely establishing the fact that this organization was anarchistic in tendency and in teachings it then became necessary to locate the officers of each of the locals and to establish their membership to this society. Again this department experienced great difficulty in establishing membership, as the members had been advised to guard carefully against information connecting them with the organization."

"After thorough investigation in this matter the cases of the persons who were actively identified with the Union of Russian Workers were submitted to the Department of Labor, and that department issued warrants for the arrest of these persons. On November 7, 1919, simultaneous arrests of over 250 officers and members were made in 12 different cities of the United States upon the warrants issued by the Secretary of Labor charging these persons with advocating the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence.

"I am attaching hereto, marked as 'Exhibits Nos. 8 and 9,' two translations of publications issued by the Federation of the Union of Russian Workers, one entitled 'Manifesto of anarchists-communists,' and the second 'Fundamental principles,' which clearly indicate the purpose of this organization and which justify the drastic action taken by this department in the matter."

The Attorney General then attaches to his report a copy of detailed instructions to all the agents of his department, setting forth the requirements necessary to satisfy the Immigration Bureau in a deportation case. From these instructions we quote the following:

"The character of the organization may be proven—

"(a) By authentic copies of its charter, by-laws, or declaration of principles, official publications, and possibly by membership cards therein, if any. Proof may be made by the affidavit of anyone personally knowing the facts showing authenticity of the document referred to. The strongest proof possible should be obtained, and a number of affidavits from creditable persons should be secured.

"(b) By affidavit stating in detail the facts upon which it is based of persons who are members of, or affiliated with, or who have attended meetings of these organizations and can swear, from occurrences or things said or done at the meeting or meetings, that the particular organization believes in, teaches, or advocates any of the doctrines set forth in section 1 of these instructions.

"Mere proof that one may in general terms be said to be a Bolshevist, either by his own admission or by other evidence, is not sufficient. Additional facts must be secured bringing him within section 1 of these instructions.

"Membership in an organization may be shown by—

"(a) Production of a membership card, together with proof and circumstances showing that it belongs to the person under investigation.

"(b) Admission by the person under investigation that he is a member of such organization.

"(c) Proof that the person under investigation, with more or less regularity, attended and participated in meetings of said organization.

"(d) Assuming to act as officers or agents of such organization by seeking new members, collecting or disbursing money, or distributing its literature.

"(e) Any other facts that would tend to prove or strengthen the proof of such membership.

"Special agents must not satisfy themselves with proof of membership in an anarchistic organization, but should seek further to establish against the individual himself a case under one of the clauses of section 1 of these instructions.

"Special agents will constantly keep in mind the necessity of preserving the cover of our confidential informants, and in no case shall they rely upon the testimony of such cover informants during deportation proceedings."

In the opinion of your committee, these instructions issued by the Department of Justice here at Washington to its agents in the field do not indicate any purpose on the part of the Attorney General or of that official of the department having the investigation of radical activities in charge to act or to countenance the agents of the Bureau of Investigation to act in violation of the Constitution or to deprive any person whomsoever of any legal or constitutional right. On the contrary, it seems apparent to your committee that the department was, in the interests of the personal liberty and security of the persons suspected or taken into custody, proceeding with due caution and in accordance with well-recognized rules of evidence.

Under the conditions which existed at the time, your committee find nothing to condemn in the cooperation of the Department of Justice with the Department of Labor in apprehending any number of aliens whose beliefs or practices rendered them subject to deportation under the law, neither does your committee believe that any wrong is done or constitutional right invaded by taking membership in an "organization that entertains a belief in, teaches, or advocates the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or of all forms of law, or that entertains or teaches disbelief in or opposition to all organized government," as prima facie evidence at least of a like belief on the part of such member. It is doubtful whether under any Federal statute it is a crime for the individual alone, whether citizen or alien, in the absence of a conspiracy to so believe, teach, or advocate; but certainly in the interests of national self-preservation there should be no hesitancy in exercising the right to arrest and deport any alien who on investigation is found to come within any of the classes proscribed by the statute.

But, granting that cooperation between the agents of the two departments does not of itself involve or imply any violation of law or illegal practice, there is yet the question as to whether in the manner of carrying out the purpose to apprehend and deport all aliens subject to deportation the persons taken into custody, or whose houses and premises were searched, were consciously subjected to any undue hardship or were deprived of any legal or constitutional right by the agents of the department, and for which the department should be held responsible. In other words, to what extent, if at all, are the allegations of the committee of 12 lawyers, first herein referred to, supported by the evidence adduced at the hearings before your committee?

But first it should be borne in mind throughout the consideration of this subject that it is for the executive department of the Government to put in force any act of Congress for the exclusion or deportation of aliens. In the case of Nishimura Ekiu v. United States (142 U. S. 651) it is laid down as an accepted maxim of international law—

"that every sovereign nation has the power, as inherent in sovereignty and essential to self-preservation, to forbid the entrance of foreigners within its domains, or to admit them only in such cases and upon such conditions as it may see fit to prescribe. In the United States this power is vested in the National Government, to which the Constitution has committed the entire control of international relations, in peace as well as in war. It belongs to the political department of the Government, and may be exercised either through treaties made by the President and Senate or through statutes enacted by Congress."

And in the case of Fong Yue Ting v. United States (149 U. S. 698) it is said:

"The power of Congress, therefore, to expel, like the power to exclude, aliens, or any specified class of aliens, from the country may be exercised entirely through executive officers, or Congress may call in the aid of the judiciary to ascertain any contested facts on which an alien's right to be in the country has been made by Congress to depend."

In applying the foregoing principles to the case at bar, the court proceeded as follows:

"For the reasons stated in the earlier part of this opinion, Congress, under the power to exclude or expel aliens, might have directed any Chinese laborer found in the United States without a certificate of residence to be removed out of the country by executive officers without judicial trial or examination, just as it might have authorized such officers absolutely to prevent his entrance into the country. But Congress has not undertaken to do this."

The Fong Yue Ting case arose under the act of Congress of May 5, 1892, an act entitled "An act to prohibit the coming of Chinese persons into the United States." Section 6 of this act provided that— "any Chinese laborer, within the limits of the United States, who shall neglect, fail, or refuse to comply with the provisions of this act, or who, after one year from the passage hereof, shall be found within the jurisdiction of the United States without such certificate of residence shall be deemed and adjudged to be unlawfully within the United States, and may be arrested, by any United States customs official, collector of internal revenue or his deputies, United States marshal or his deputies, and taken before a United States judge, whose duty it shall be to order that he be deported from the United States as hereinbefore provided, unless he shall establish clearly to the satisfaction of said judge that by reason of accident, sickness, or other unavoidable cause he has been unable to procure his certificate, and to the satisfaction of the court, and by at least one credible white witness, that he was a resident of the United States at the time of the passage of this act."

Provision is made for cases where a certificate had been lost or destroyed, and for time in which to procure a duplicate, etc.

The court in the Fong Yue Ting case, in construing the act of 1892, says:

"The proceeding before a United States judge, as provided for in section 6 of the act of 1892, is in no proper sense a trial and sentence for a crime or offense; it is simply the ascertainment by appropriate and lawful means of the fact whether the conditions exist upon which Congress has enacted that an alien of this class may remain within the country. The order of deportation is not a punishment for crime; it is not a banishment in the sense in which that word is often applied to the expulsion of a citizen from his country by way of punishment; it is but a method of enforcing the return to his own country of an alien who has not complied with the conditions upon the performance of which the Government of the Nation, acting within its constitutional authority and through the proper departments, has determined that his continuing to reside here shall depend. He has not, therefore, been deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; and the provisions of the Constitution securing the right of trial by jury and prohibiting unreasonable searches and seizures and cruel and unusual punishments have no application." (See also In re Chin Wah, 182 Fed. 256.)

These quotations from great and leading cases will apply with equal force to the law and the procedure thereunder as hereinbefore set forth, and to the specific complaints of illegal practices to which the committee calls attention. The committee would emphasize the fact, however, that not only the law and judicial decisions but also the conditions as they existed or were believed to exist before and at the time of the raids should have weight in determining whether the Department of Justice or the Attorney General was, under the circumstances, guilty of illegal practices which merit the public condemnation and censure of the Congress. The committee is entitled to consider the interest of witnesses, the bias or prejudice arising therefrom, the circumstances under which affidavits describing alleged outrages and injuries were made, and the interest or bias of those who prepared these affidavits, and this for the reason that the credibility of these affidavit witnesses is, as will appear from the record, necessarily involved.

Referring to the exhibits attached to the report of the committee of 12, Exhibit 1 being a statement of the committee itself, alleges that in Bridgeport, Conn., on November 8, 1919, various workmen had come together to discuss ways and means for buying an automobile to be employed for instruction purposes, and that the meeting was raided; that 63 men were arrested without warrants and taken to the police station, where they were held for three days; that they slept on iron bunks without covers or mattresses, and were fed little or nothing; and that persons who applied to the Hartford jail to see their friends were also taken up and confined in the jail, and that some of the men were beaten and treated with hanging or suffocation in order to obtain answers from them, and that most of the men remained confined for five months, until they were transferred by authority of Mr. Post to Deer Island. It is also charged that prisoners were allowed no reading matter; that they were kept alone in their cells, except for visits of agents of the Department of Justice or hearings before inspectors; that they were refused knowledge of the charges against them or the amount of bail; that they were allowed only two to five minutes a day to wash their faces and hands, and only five minutes once a month to wash their bodies; that they were given practically no exercise, and were fed with foul and insufficient food.

These statements are based upon Exhibits 1a, 1b, and 1c, being the affidavits respectively of Simeon Nakhwat, Peter Muzek, and Anton Dimitroff.

Nakhwat in his affidavit tells of his arrest along with 62 others, at Bridgeport, Conn., on the 8th of November, 1919, stating that the arrest was made by Edward J. Hickey, a special agent of the Department of Justice, who had helping him about 14 Bridgeport policemen in uniform and about 9 Department of Justice agents in plain clothes; that after 3 days he was removed from the police station at Bridgeport to the Hartford jail, where he remained for 6 weeks without any hearing, and that on the seventh week he had one hearing before the Labor Department, which hearing was held in the post-office building, and that he was then returned to jail. He further states in his affidavit that in the thirteenth week of his confinement, Mr. Hickey came into his cell and asked him to give the address of a man called Boyko, in Green Point, Brooklyn; that he did not know this man, and told Hickey that he did not, and that thereupon Hickey struck him twice with his fist, once in the forehead and once in the jaw, knocking him down, and that Hickey then kicked him until he became unconscious. He states in his affidavit that Hickey is a big man, weighing about 200 pounds; that for 3 weeks after that he suffered severe pain where he was kicked in the back; that afterwards he asked the guards to let him have a doctor to treat a finger which had become infected; that he was refused, and, on a second request, they took him to the basement of the jail and put him into a pitch-dark room, the floor of the room being hot and the walls very warm to the touch, and that he was kept in the room for 36 hours, from 8.30 one morning to 8.30 the following evening, and that the only food received during these 36 hours was 1 glass of water and 1 slice of bread given him on the evening of the first day; that he was released from the jail on April 7, having been in confinement 5 months; that the only times he was allowed to be out of his cell, except on one occasion when he had an interview with a friend, was for 2 or 3 minutes every day when he was allowed to wash his face at a sink, and 5 minutes once a month he was allowed to take a bath in a tub. He charges that the food in the jail was very bad, some of it so foul that it could not be eaten at all, and not sufficient in quantity to maintain a person in health; that no books or newspapers were allowed him during the five months, although he asked for them. In his affidavit Nakhwat, while denying that he is an "anarchist, socialist, or Bolshevik," admits that he was a member of the Union of Russian Workers.

It seems incredible that any sensible and civilized human being would be guilty of the personal assaults and outrages alleged to have been committed upon and against the person of Semeon Nakhwat, and especially does it seem incredible that a wholly unprovoked and vicious assault, such as this is charged to be, should be committed by an agent or officer engaged in the enforcement of the law. One of the confidential instructions given to Agent George E. Kelleher, in charge of the Boston district, under date of December 27, is as follows: "Violence toward any aliens should be scrupulously avoided."

It is presumable that this was the attitude of the Department of Justice on the 8th of November preceding, when the Bridgeport arrests were made; and that if the assault, as described by Nakhwat, was committed it was absolutely contrary to the will of the Attorney General or of Mr. Burke, Chief of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, who signed the instructions sent to Mr. Kelleher, as above stated.

It will be observed that this affidavit alleges that the arrest and subsequent assault was made by Edward J. Hickey, but on the 29th day of May, 1920, at the city of Washington, D. C., Mr. Hickey, a special agent of the Department of Justice of the Bureau of Investigation, assigned to official duty in the district of Connecticut, made an affidavit in which he states that he has read carefully the alleged affidavit of Semeon Nakhwat, as printed in the report upon the illegal practices of the Department of Justice, and after reciting those portions of the affidavit relating to the arrest of Nakhwat and the vicious and brutal assault made upon Nakhwat by Hickey, has this further to say:

"Deponent further states that he was not in the city of Bridgeport, Conn., on the date given, November 8, 1919, and did not participate in and had no knowledge of either the said Semeon Nakhwat or his arrest; that deponent never even visited the meeting place referred to and had no knowledge of its character or location. Deponent further states that at no time has he entered the cell in the Hartford jail occupied by the said Semeon Nakhwat, and that he has never struck or otherwise abused him."

But with reference to personal assaults and cruelties by the agents or officers making the arrests, either at the time of the arrest or afterwards, it is probable that all the cases of such alleged cruelty have perhaps no better foundation than the case of Lem Kosopud and 14 others, all apparently Russians, decided by Judge Westenhaver in the District Court for the Northern District of Ohio June 12, 1920, and which case is hereinafter more particularly referred to. In the last paragraph but one of his opinion Judge Westenhaver states as follows:

"All of the specific objections urged on this hearing are covered by the foregoing observations. In addition thereto, it is said that some of the petitioners were at the time of their arrest or during their examination by the arresting officers insulted, abused, or physically mistreated. The evidence to this effect is so unsubstantial that I do not deem it necessary to comment thereon. Certainly nothing appears to indicate that the petitioners, or any of them, did not have a fair hearing, or that the executive officers abused their discretion or took any advantage of the petitioners, or deprived them of any opportunity to make as full and complete a defense as desired. All of them were called as witnesses, said that they were informed by the inspector of their right to counsel, and that this right had been waived."

The case of Peter Musek, covered in Exhibit 1b, also refers to conditions in Bridgeport and Hartford. The Attorney General in reply to this affidavit submitted (see p. 96) a copy of his statement before the House Committee on Rules, in which his case was explained. It is shown that extreme care was exercised in accounting and receipting for money and valuables taken from the aliens. The so-called steam room in the Hartford County jail was substantially admitted by counsel for the National Popular Government League before the House Rules Committee, to exist only in the imaginations of the aliens.

The affidavit of Anton Dimitroff (Exhibit C1), also of Bridgeport, Conn., covers substantially the same matter as contained in the two preceding exhibits.

The testimony before your committee in this case appears on page 98, and shows that the Attorney General has twice answered this affidavit, once before the House Rules Committee. Dimitroff also mentions the so-called steam room and conditions in the Hartford jail generally. These conditions are explained by the Attorney General on pages 93 to 96. The evidence fails to show that the conditions of confinement at Hartford differed materially from those in the average penal institutions. It was complained that the aliens were not permitted to have newspapers and magazines. In reply it was claimed that the only newspapers or magazines they desired were publications of an extremely radical character, such as the official organs of the Communist Party, and in several instances they refused other matter.

The pamphlet which forms the basis of this inquiry devotes considerable space to the raid on the Russian People's House at 133 East Fifteenth Street, New York City. This raid was made in November, 1919, during the time action was being taken against the Union of Russian Workers, an anarchist organization distinct from the Communist parties. The affidavits of Mitchell Lavrowsky (Exhibit 2b), Nicolaï Melnikoff (Exhibit 2c), Varfolomey Ischenko (Exhibit 2d), Semeon T. Kravchuk (Exhibit 2e), and Peter Karas (Exhibit 2f), are set forth, charging brutality on the part of agents of the Department of Justice, and also the theft of money and other property. These charges of brutality and theft were met by affidavits from the officers who participated in the affair, denying the allegations.

The committee deem it proper to set forth the short statement of Attorney General Palmer as made before the House Committee on Rules, followed by the affidavit of special agent of the Department of Justice, Frank Francisco, who had general charge of the raid on this house:

Mr. Palmer says:

"Now, as to the raid on the Russian People's House, New York, referred to on page 16 of the report. I have had a thorough investigation made of this so-called raid, and have in my possession affidavits from a number of individuals. Agent Francisco, who was in charge of the affair, with Sergeant Gegan, of the New York bomb squad, had entered the building and made known their identity. The two left one of the rooms to procure assistance, and as they left several bottles were thrown at them. Agent Edward Anderson, who participated, was on the third floor, where there were about 25 men in one room. After stating the purpose of his visit, and it appearing that the aliens involved were willing to accompany him, Anderson led the way. Upon reaching the head of the steps he was violently pushed and fell down the entire flight, causing bruises on his arm and leg. These two instances started a general disorder of the persons in the house, and it was necessary to call additional assistance in order to handle the men, who openly declared they were ready to fight. Under these conditions it was necessary to take all the parties involved in the affair to the offices of the department, where they could be examined with some order" (p. 106, House hearings).

Since Mr. Francisco was in general charge of all the proceedings at the Russian People's House, we deem it important that his affidavit should be set forth in full. It is as follows:

"Frank Francisco, of lawful age, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is a special agent of the Department of Justice of the United States; that on the night of November 7, 1919, he was in charge of a squad of special agents, and, accompanied by Sergt. James Gegan, of the New York bomb squad of the police department, city of New York, the latter commanding about 25 detectives, proceeded to and entered a house known as the People's House, at 133 East Fifteenth Street, the door of which was wide open, and upon the first floor Sergeant Gegan and myself showed our shields and told the occupants who we were. When Sergeant Gegan and myself left the room to secure the help of other detectives, and our backs being turned, several pop bottles were thrown at us, some coming from the rear of the room. While Sergeant Gegan was obtaining assistance, agent informed the men that there was to be no violence or resistance; that we were there to make an investigation, and we wanted their cooperation; that we did not want to apprehend anybody that was innocent."

"After I had finished talking, I heard several voices in the rear call the Department of Justice and the police 'sons of b—' and other vile names, and one individual shouted: 'We are ready to fight.' At this time there was a commotion upstairs, and Sergeant Gegan left the ground floor to investigate the matter upstairs, and in his absence several detectives, whose names are unknown to me, came to my assistance, probably saving me from assault, and it was necessary for the police to resist about a dozen men who were in the rear pushing and crowding others in front of them to attack the police and myself. No violence was used on the men in the front of the room, but we forced our way to the rear, where we found the disturbers, and they were immediately taken out of the room, placed in a patrol wagon, and sent to the office of the bureau of investigation, at 15 Park Row, this city."

"After these disturbers had been sent to the office of the Department of Justice, there was no more trouble on this floor. Investigation showed that a number of these men were prepared for trouble, as various parts of the room contained various instruments such as black-jacks and small 'billys.'"

"Deponent then went to the third floor, which was being used as a school, and found in the front part of the building a class of about 25 men, together with a teacher. They were guarded by either police officers or special agents of this department, and I informed them they were to be taken to the office of the Department of Justice, where they would be questioned as to their identity. When conveyances were ready, these men were passed out in single file, marched down the stairs, being counted as they left the room, also being counted at the door up to a number as high as 22, as the patrol wagons would not accommodate more than 22 persons. It was necessary to take these precautions in order to get the number of persons apprehended, and great caution was taken so as not to cause confusion or a miscount. The stairs used were very narrow and steep, and I recall that I mentioned this fact to Sergeant Gegan, and he had one of his men light a gas jet that had not been lighted, so the prisoners could see where they were going. There was no confusion in removing these 22 men."

"As near as I can recall, the school-teacher was not sent away with these men, but was held downstairs and was brought to the office in a separate cab, accompanied by several women, including Ethel Bernstein and several others."

"Deponent then went to the fourth floor, and to the best of my recollection there were about four men on this floor, and they were sent downstairs unaccompanied to the ground floor, I notifying Sergeant Gegan and the rest of his men that four men were coming down unaccompanied."

"Deponent was instructed by Agent Charles J. Scully to obtain evidence, such as books, records, and cards of the organization known as the Union of Russian Workers, and in a small room on the top floor I found a quantity of books, cards, which were confiscated and brought to the office. In this room were two typewriters with Russian keyboards. The typewriters not being evidence, same were left behind. I was one of the last persons to leave this building, and as I was leaving there was a crowd of about 100 people on the outside, and I was asked if any objection would be made to their entering the building. I saw at least 25 people enter the building, including two reporters of the New York Call, the latter information being obtained from the two men themselves, but none of their credentials were shown to deponent."

"After all the prisoners had been sent away, I returned to the office of the Department of Justice. On the following day, November 8, 1919, en route to the office of the Workman and Peasant, a newspaper, at 241 West Thirteenth Street, I stopped at the People's House, found the door open, and there saw two men sitting in the room who had been brought to the office on the night before and questioned and later released. I asked these men what they were doing there, and they stated they had chased some boys out of the place after they had found them destroying the property. They said the boys had been kicking pictures, cooking utensils, etc., around the floors of the different rooms, and also had broken a number of windows in the rear of the house. I then went upstairs, where I had secured the organization records, and found the typewriters above-mentioned had been destroyed. Upon my arrival I noticed that the gas had never been turned out, but had re-maintained lighted all night, making it possible for anyone to enter the building at any time they chose, especially as the house was mainly a place of curiosity for the people in the neighborhood, especially the children.

"In several bookcases, where we had removed books, the same had been thrown on the floor, thereby breaking same." (House hearing, pp. 100-101.)

This affidavit may serve to explain the charge made by the committee of 12 that "property . . . was intentionally smashed and destroyed."

The committee refers also to the affidavits of Special Agents Edward Anderson, Harry C. Leslie, and John L. Haas, found on pages 102 and 103 of the House hearings, and for specific denial of the affidavit of Nicolai Melikoff the committee refers to the affidavits of Frank Francisco, Harry C. Leslie, James A. Kennedy, and Charles J. Scully, found on pages 103 and 104 of the House hearings.

As a further answer of the department to the charge of brutalities following the arrests of members of the Union of Russian Workers and members of the Communist Party in New York, the committee calls attention to the affidavit of Mr. George F. Lamb, division superintendent in the Department of Justice, and assigned to the Bureau of Investigation in New York City, found on page 105 of the House hearings. Among other things, Mr. Lamb says in his affidavit that his attention had been called to charges made that various persons had been assaulted by agents of the department, either at the place where the arrest was made or after being brought to the office of the Bureau of Investigation. He says that he questioned all of the agents who had taken part in the arrests, and they denied having struck or otherwise assaulted any person on that occasion; that the examination conducted at the bureau was under his immediate supervision, and that he was present throughout the whole period of the examination, which did not terminate until about 4.30 o'clock a. m., November 8, the arrests having been made on the night of November 7. He describes how the examinations were held in various rooms of the bureau, all these rooms connecting, and that it would have been impossible to make a noise or create a disturbance in one room which would not have been heard in several of the adjacent rooms. He says that, being in charge of the bureau, he felt personally responsible for the proper conduct of the examinations, and all through the night visited each examiner in turn to see how he was progressing, and that at no time did he hear of anyone being assaulted or hear any improper language applied to any of the persons being examined. He says further that he has inquired of every agent who was connected in any way with the Union of Russian Workers matter on November 7 if he struck or assaulted or encouraged anybody else to strike or assault any of the parties arrested on that occasion, either in the rooms of the bureau or at any place outside of said bureau, and that every agent had denied having struck or assaulted anyone or having subjected a prisoner to improper treatment of any kind.

The committee also calls attention to the affidavit of Charles J. Scully, special agent of what is known as the radical division of the bureau, and who acted under the supervision of Director William J. Flynn and Division Superintendent Lamb, found on page 106 of the House hearings.

With these affidavits before them, the committee can not believe that the charges made of brutalities, or even improper conduct, on the part of the agents of the Department of Justice in the raid on the Russian People's House at 133 East Fifteenth Street, New York City, have been sustained. That if assaults on any of the men arrested were at any time committed by the agents of the department in any of the raids it is difficult to believe that they were committed without provocation or a first assault on the part of some of the men who were taken into custody.

Exhibit 3, in the pamphlet of the National Popular Government League, is an affidavit made by one Albert de Silver, who is an official of the National Civil Liberties Union, in regard to the alleged raid on the office of Novy Mir, one of the official organs of the Communist Party of America, a paper on which Leon Trotsky worked as an editorial writer prior to his becoming minister of war of Soviet Russia, and on which Ludwig C. A. K. Martens also held an editorial position prior to his becoming representative of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic, in New York City.

Mr. de Silver in his affidavit describes the confusion he found in the two rooms which had been occupied as editorial offices of the paper, saying that they were entirely covered with torn books and papers, some of them in Russian and some of them in English, and that there were pieces of broken typewriters mixed up in the wreckage, and that desks and tables had been upset and the contents removed and torn, and in some cases the panels and drawers of such desks and tables were smashed.

It is significant that Mr. de Silver, considering his position, did not appear before either the subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee or the House Rules Committee, although he alleges that he was an eyewitness. In his affidavit he states that on his visit to the office of Novy Mir he recognized and spoke to Mr. Mortimer R. Davis, special agent of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, who seemed to be in charge. He desired to know of Mr. Davis if he might go inside, and alleges that Mr. Davis said that he didn't care, but that he might get hit over the head if he did. In the hearing before the House Committee on Rules Mr. Palmer stated that Mr. Davis, who was then in St. Louis, had been communicated with by long distance, and that he denied emphatically that he had made any such statement to Mr. de Silver, and further stated that there was no undue destruction of property in the offices of the Novy Mir by agents of the Department of Justice on the night of January 6.

The circulation of the Novy Mir is estimated at 20,000. Two or three short extracts from editorials appearing in that paper may be of interest.

On March 8, 1917, under the title "Prepare soldiers of the revolution," among other things, is the following:

"It is important to establish everywhere reading circles of the Novy Mir, to read and discuss jointly the most important articles. It is necessary to rouse and push forward the proletarian mind. It is necessary to prepare soldiers of the revolution."

"A spirit of revolt spreads larger and larger over the working masses of the entire world. Neither threats nor curses of the high priests of the bourgeoisie society are capable of holding back the pressure of proletarian masses. Even in countries where heretofore the revolution has not yet unfurled its red flag and the bourgeois gods have not yet been deposed from their pedestals, over there grows a big wave of people's protests which may any day flare up with a red flame."

"But the revolutionary strike wave, extending more and more over the world, is raising the workingman of the United States, and will teach him the European methods of struggle. His rôle is yet to come."

Again—

"What must interest us and what we must consider first is the sentiment of the broad circles of American working masses. Are they ready to do something in order to really better their condition? The problem of the high cost of living will be solved only so much, as much as the organized American proletariat is capable, not with words but with deeds, to measure its strength with American capitalists and the Government that is defending their interests. All 'accused problems' can be and must be solved only from this point of view."

Exhibit No. 4 of the National Popular Government League is a short statement with regard to the Salsedo and Ella cases, which were reported in the daily press, during the month of May, 1920. Salsedo having jumped from the fourteenth floor of the Park Row Building, New York City, where the offices of the Department of Justice are located. He was confined there with Ella, both being detained in connection with the investigation of bomb plots. Those two cases are distinct from the nation-wide raids in November and December of the same year. The Attorney General before the House Rules Committee went into detail on this case, his testimony appearing on pages 41, 42, and 161 of the House committee record for June 1, 1920, showing that they were confined with their own consent and the consent of their attorneys, and that important admissions were made by Salsedo. There is nothing whatever in the record before either committee to indicate that the death of Salsedo was due even indirectly to negligence or improper actions on the part of the Government officers.

Exhibits Nos. 5, 5a, 5b, and 5c of the National Popular Government League refer to conditions in Detroit, Mich. The charges are similar to those already set forth, and include particularly unsanitary conditions in places of confinement. Exhibits 5a and 5b also refer to brutality.

There was considerable testimony in regard to conditions in Detroit, and the assistant custodian of the Federal building submitted the floor plan of that building. Undoubtedly the facilities were too limited for the large number of aliens apprehended, although Mr. Arthur L. Barkey, special agent in charge, in giving account of the conditions in answer to the charges made by Attorney Solomon G. Paperno, stated that the corridor around the Federal building, where the arrested aliens were taken, extended around the four sides of the building, and surrounded an open court, at the top of which was an extensive skylight, which during the daytime provided the entire lighting for the interior of the Federal building. He further stated that this corridor was 18 feet wide, 12 feet high, and in the aggregate measured 4,512 square feet, which allowed approximately 8 square feet for the occupancy of every alien held, and that it is therefore untrue that those arrested did not have sufficient room even comfortably to stand. It had been alleged by Mr. Paperno that the flooring in this corridor was stone, but Mr. Barkey says it is a wooden floor, which extends on all four sides of the corridor. Mr. Barkey's statement is found in full on pages 458-463 of the Senate hearings.

In answer to the charge as to insufficiency of food, it was shown that after the aliens had been removed from the Federal building there were large quantities of food left by them.

One of the witnesses as to conditions in Detroit was a member of the citizens' committee, appointed by the Assistant Secretary of Labor, Mr. Post, and the committee had also before it a pamphlet issued by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, prepared by Mr. Panunzio, as well as the letter from Attorney Paperno, of Detroit, to which the statement of Mr. Barkey, above referred to, is a reply.

Admitting, however, that there was for a few days an unfortunately crowded condition in the Federal building in Detroit, which it would seem the department agents sought to relieve as rapidly as possible with the facilities at hand, through their examinations of the aliens arrested, yet such condition was largely the result of a campaign of this size and character, although your committee believe that much of the inconvenience and hardship to persons arrested might have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable care and foresight to begin with.

While not taking the position that the agents of the Department of Justice, or both the Departments of Justice and Labor, had no sufficient cause for arresting and holding, either for warrants or for examination, the persons actually taken, yet the committee is of the opinion that in the Detroit raids the number likely to be arrested should, if possible, have been ascertained in advance and provision made by those in charge of the raids for the housing under reasonable conditions as to room and sanitation of all who were arrested.

There were two houses raided in the Detroit campaign—one the South Slavic Hall, which was the headquarters of the South Slavic Branch No. 17, Communist Party of America, and was a rendezvous for all radicals of that nationality, according to the statement of Mr. Barkey; and the other was the House of Masses, said by Mr. Barkey to be owned by an association composed of all the well-known radicals in that district. "It was a place in which for a long period of time speakers openly advocated the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence and was the distribution point for insidious propaganda against the country. When the agents visited these halls they found secret meetings in progress, and it was at these halls that the most active agitators were taken into custody for investigation."

The testimony of the Attorney General before the House Rules Committee on conditions in Detroit appears on pages 60 to 63, House hearings.

Exhibits 6 and 7 of the National Popular Government League refer to the subject of provocative agents, and the one notable instance cited purports to be given by Miss Pratt. Miss Pratt charged that one of the agents of the Department of Justice testified that as such he had joined the Communist Party of Buffalo and had become its recording secretary. He appeared as a witness against Miss Pratt before the board of education of Buffalo when she was suspended as a teacher in the public schools.

On page 87 of the House committee hearings this charge is branded by the Attorney General as a deliberate and unwarranted falsehood. He introduced a transcript of the record of the case before the board of education of Buffalo, and showed that the particular agent had no connection with the Department of Justice at the time, and, in fact, has never worked as an undercover agent. With regard to Petzold (Exhibit 7), the Attorney General replies to the House committee on page 95 of that record. This covers the same special agent referred to in the previous affidavit.

Exhibit 8 of the National Popular Government League is a general charge to the effect that the Department of Justice in western Pennsylvania and West Virginia at least followed the practice of using undercover informants employed by the private detective agencies, which in turn are employed by the steel and coal companies; the Department of Justice accepting the reports of these private detectives as the basis for action. No evidence of a substantial nature was presented to your committee on this point, either by the National Popular Government League or the witnesses who appeared. It is also charged in this connection that arrests were frequently made upon the unsupported statements of these private informants, the arrests being made by the local police without warrant, the police reporting the case to the Department of Justice, which then proceeds with an investigation. No facts are presented in this connection. Your committee can not censure the Department of Justice for making an investigation in cases reported to them by the police, regardless of how the arrest was made, provided the Government merely investigated and was not responsible for the initial arrest.

The pamphlet of the National Popular Government League devotes considerable space to the case of one Gaspare Canone, an anarchist of New York, there being included photographs purporting to show his condition after being subjected to brutal treatment by the Government agents and police as well as specimens of his handwriting purporting to show that his name was forged by Government agents, who placed the same on a statement alleged to have been made by him. The Attorney General referred to this case before the House Rules Committee, stating that he had ordered a special investigation of the same. He filed with your committee a number of affidavits of officers and employees in this department (see pp. 92 and 134 to 155 of Senate hearings) explaining the case in great detail. He also filed an authenticated photograph sworn to by a local police officer, who took the same just after Canone's arrest, and which shows the subject to be in an entirely different condition from that indicated in the exhibit filed with the charges. The charges are answered by the officers in the order made in this case and their affidavits appear in full. In addition, it is shown that Canone is an admitted anarchist.

Exhibits 10, 11, and 12 refer to the confidential instructions issued by the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice to its agents at the time of the raids. This subject is closely related to the exhibits immediately following, referring to the Colyer case at Boston, a habeas corpus proceeding in the United States district court before Judge George J. Anderson. These instructions of the department appear to form the main basis of the charges of illegal practices against the department. The decision of Judge Anderson appears to be based very largely on these same instructions, although in that proceeding the court gave consideration to a great mass of other matter. That the Department of Justice and the Attorney General, as the chief law officer of the United States, had sufficient legal authority to act in the enforcement of the deportation statutes, particularly in cooperation with the Department of Labor, has been already discussed.

On the subject of arrest without warrant, it appears from the testimony that warrants were applied for in many hundreds of cases, and that while executing or attempting to execute these warrants the officers found large numbers of individuals in circumstances indicating they also should be held as fit subjects for action similar to that contemplated in the cases where warrants were in their possession. In this respect it is claimed that the officers followed an old practice of the Immigration Service in detaining the party or parties and applying immediately for telegraphic warrants of arrest, and that the Department of Justice in its participation merely followed the custom of the other department.

But in such case what difference in principle between the arrest of a party without a warrant who is found in the commission of a public offense and the arrest of a party without a warrant who is found participating in the meeting of an organization proscribed under the deportation statute, and who to all appearances is a member of such organization? Especially if warrants were in possession for the arrest of specifically named persons found at a meeting of the proscribed organization, would not the agents be justified under the law in taking into custody for examination others found at the meeting but for whose arrest no warrants had been issued or even telegraphed for before the arrests were made?

Confusion arose in some instances due to the misappelling of difficult names, which resulted in mistaken identities. The Iwanko case, a discussion of which is found on pages 542-560, Senate hearings, is an example. It is hardly a matter of wonder that in a movement of such proportions some mistakes were made or that in some cases American citizens were arrested. In comparison to the total number of warrants issued or arrests made, it would appear that the percentage in which there was a mistake as to citizenship was, after all, very small, and the record shows clearly that promptly upon the discovery of American citizenship the party was released. There has been some difference of opinion in the courts with regard to arrests without a warrant in possession. Judge Anderson, in the Colyer case, took the position that in such a case there was not due "process of law," and ordered the release of the petitioners on habeas corpus. On the other hand, Judge Westenhaver, on June 12, 1920, in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, in the case of Lem Kosopud, ruled in effect that an arrest in these cases without the officer having a warrant in his possession is not irregular. The opinion of Judge Westenhaver is instructive, and more particularly so because it involves a large number of arrests of aliens made on telegraphic warrants on the night of January 2, 1920, and at the same time raids and arrests were made in other cities of the United States. It bears on nearly all the points involved in this investigation.

We quote from the opinion as follows:

"Other grounds more strongly urged in argument are the following: That the petitioners were originally arrested without warrant; that some, if not all, were immediately interrogated, before obtaining counsel, with respect to the charges alleged in the warrants; that the answers then made were given in evidence against them in some, if not all, of the cases on the hearing before the immigration inspector; and that at the time of their arrest membership cards in the Communist Party and literature in their possession tending to support the charge made in the warrant were seized and afterwards introduced in evidence against them. The warrants in all except two cases were issued December 29, 1919. Telegraphic notice of the issuance of these warrants was given to special agents of the Department of Justice and arrests made January 2 or 3, 1920. At the time of such arrest the formal warrants were not in the possession of the arresting officers. It is also true that immediately thereafter some, if not all, of the petitioners were interrogated without the presence of any counsel representing them, and the statements then made were afterwards made in evidence, and that in some instances membership cards and other incriminating evidence found in their possession were seized and used."

"Nor is any sound reason suggested why the original arrest was unlawful because the arresting officer did not have in his physical possession the warrant of arrest. It had been issued and instructions to act had been received by the arresting officer. It would be a strong proposition in an ordinary felony case to say that a fugitive from justice for whom a capias or warrant was outstanding could not be apprehended until the apprehending officer had physical possession of the capias or the warrant. If such were the law, criminals could circulate freely from one end of the land to the other, because they could always keep ahead of an officer with the warrant. The practice in such cases is precisely that which was followed in these cases."

"Nor do I perceive any good reason why the arresting officer may not lawfully interrogate or examine the person arrested with respect to the charge made against him, even though the alien is not then represented by counsel and is under arrest. This is the usual course in criminal proceedings. Whether his statements thus made may be given in evidence against him depends upon whether or not they were voluntary. They will be presumed to have been made voluntary unless the contrary appears, and they will be held to be involuntary only when shown to have been induced by threat, promise, or encouragement of hope of favor. The absence of counsel, the fact that the prisoner may not have been warned that he was not required to make a statement, or that if he did it might be used against him, or that he was under arrest and restraint, do not by themselves prevent the statements from being voluntary or make them incompetent as evidence. (See Wilson v. United States, 162 U. S. 613.)"

"No objection was made on the hearing before the immigration inspector, or at any other time, to the use of this testimony because it was not voluntary or on any other ground. Likewise, as to the membership cards and incriminating literature seized at the time of their arrest, the petitioners on the hearings freely admitted the authenticity of the cards, their membership in the Communist Party, familiarity with the contents of the incriminating literature, and in many, if not all, cases a belief in the views therein contained. To make available the constitutional provision that unreasonable searches and seizures without warrant render inadmissible evidence thus seized an objection should be interposed at some time or another. Whether, if such an objection had been interposed on the hearing before the immigration inspector or before an order of deportation was made, these cards and this literature would be admissible presents a question which does not arise upon the record and as to which no opinion need be expressed."

"Another objection much urged is that the petitioners did not have a fair hearing because they were not represented by counsel. As already stated, they did not have counsel when interrogated by the arresting officer. The immigration inspector, however, testified that all of them were advised during their hearings before him that they were entitled to have the assistance of counsel in preparing their defense and in defending against any order of deportation. The proceedings show that the warrant was fully read and explained to each of them, and that they were advised of their right to counsel, and that each of them waived his right to counsel."

"The only legal inquiry upon the foregoing facts is whether or not the petitioners were denied counsel in such a way as to deprive them of a fair hearing. Manifestly, the absence of counsel when they were being interrogated by the arresting officers is immaterial. The situation in that respect is no different from that which exists in most cases of arrest on a criminal charge. The aid and assistance of counsel at or during the hearing before the immigration inspector and before the order of deportation is made is the privilege which the law accords to aliens charged with being unlawfully within the United States. Nor does it make a hearing before an immigration inspector unfair and subject to review because the alien may not have had the benefit of counsel at the beginning of those proceedings. It is sufficient if, during the hearing, he is advised of his rights or is accorded counsel, and no part of the evidence previously taken or used against him is concealed or withheld from his counsel and he is not thereby deprived of the privilege of bringing forward any explanation or rebutting evidence. It was so held in the following cases: Low Wah Suey v. Backus (225 U. S. 460, 471); Mok Nuey Tan v. White (9 C. C. A.; 284 Fed. 743); Guiney v. Bonham (203 Fed. 582, 585)."

Your committee believes in administrative cases involving the control of immigrants the Government through its executive departments has and must continue to have what might seem to be but which are really not extraordinary powers. So far as arrests on telegraphic warrants are involved in the present charges against the Department of Justice, it is very evident that the department was but following rule 22 of the Department of Labor governing the proceedings in deportation cases, which rule and the practice under it was sustained by Judge Westenhaver in the Kosopud case. The validity of a telegraphic warrant when issued in accordance with the rule of the Labor Department is recognized in Jouras v. Allen (222 Fed. 756). So far as arrests without warrant of any kind are concerned, they should be justifiable, no law prohibiting them, in cases and under circumstances analogous to arrests in criminal cases when permitted at common law and under the statutes of perhaps all the States.

Concerning the charge of unlawful searches and seizures in these raids, evidence was introduced showing that search warrants were secured in many instances, and that certain provisions of the espionage act were used as the basis for the issuance of the same. When Title II of the espionage act, relating to search warrants, was framed the Judiciary Committee endeavored to clearly fix the limits of action thereunder so as to insure a due regard for the constitutional rights of the citizen. However, if your committee are to be guided wholly by the principles so plainly laid down in the case of Fong Yue Ting (149 U. S. 698) and in the case In re Chin Wah (182 Fed. 256), it would seem unnecessary to discuss further the question as to whether searches and seizures without warrant in deportation cases were inhibited by the Constitution, for the language of the court in the first named of these cases, and which is followed in the Chin Wah case, is that "the provisions of the Constitution, securing the right of trial by jury and prohibiting unreasonable searches and seizures and cruel and unusual punishments, have no application" in deportation proceedings. However, it is but proper to say that the view and explanation of the Attorney General concerning the theory under which search warrants were issued and used was that the evidence procured would be used as the basis for possible criminal prosecution. He refers to the fact that the cases of Silverthorne Lumber Co. v. United States (251 U. S. 385), and Ex parte John Jackson (96 U. S. 277), referred to in the charges against the Department of Justice, were not decided until, in the Silverthorne case 24 days, and in the Jackson case 40 days, after these raids, and that in framing the confidential instructions to the agents of the department he did not have the guide of these decisions, if they could have been of guidance at the time the instructions were framed.

Title II of the espionage act makes it incumbent upon the judge or commissioner, when proper grounds are shown, to issue the search warrant. It is only reasonable to suppose, therefore, that the officials considered the showing made sufficient to justify the issuance of the warrant. It should be observed that the evidence introduced by the Attorney General before both the House and Senate committees shows, among other things, that much of the radical propaganda material was disseminated through the mails. The espionage act makes it a penal offense to distribute certain described matter through the mails, and the Postmaster General in administering those sections had prohibited this class of matter. The Attorney General urges that the continued dissemination through the mails was, therefore, a violation of the penal statutes of the United States, in which the papers themselves were the means of committing the offense. He indicated his consideration of section 6 of the Criminal Code in connection with search warrants. Whether that section would apply to this class of matter has never been determined by any competent court, but the view of the Attorney General was that whether he actually uses the evidence procured on a search warrant for prosecution under one statute, or in the preparation of a case under another statute, or, in fact, whether he uses it in any prosecution at all, is a matter of administrative discretion for which he is not compelled to answer.

In the consideration of the written instructions issued by the Department of Justice in connection with the raids, and covering the matter of search warrants, the Attorney General contends that at least there were sufficient grounds upon which to base application for such warrants.

As to searches and seizures in the absence of search warrant, the Attorney General showed that in the average case searches and seizures were made with the consent either express or implied of the party whose premises were searched. It is but just to say that in many cases there was a conflict on this point between the testimony on behalf of the alien and that introduced by the Attorney General in reply. None of the aliens were examined directly by the committee, and it is a question under all the circumstances as to which is more worthy of belief. But the written instructions of the Department of Justice to their agents instruct that search warrants are to be procured "wherever necessary." The Attorney General explained this by stating that it was intended to cover those instances in which the alien objected to a search or stood upon his rights as to the search warrant. It should be noted that aside from the one case of Sedar Sarachuk, in which a denial is made by the Department of Justice, there was no case presented to your committee in which a search of the dwelling was made over the expressed protest of a householder.

Considerable attention has been devoted to the so-called immigration rule 22, before both your committee and the committee of the House Committee on Rules. The change made in this has been noted. Under the change aliens arrested on warrants of arrest for deportation were to be permitted to have counsel at such stage in the proceedings as would insure protection of the Government. It was shown that this rule was adopted because in many instances where a warrant of arrest was about to be served, and where the alien was permitted to have counsel from the very beginning, before identifying himself, he would refuse to answer even questions as to identity, on the advice of counsel. This rule was upheld by the United States Supreme Court in the case of Low Wah Suey (225 U. S. 460), where it is held that "a preliminary examination of an alien without counsel is permitted by the statute; and if at subsequent stages of the proceedings the alien has counsel, there is no denial of right." See also the Koposud case decided by Judge Westenhaver.

It seems necessary to quote again paragraph (b) of subdivision 5 of rule 22, as amended in December, 1919:

"Preferably, at the beginning of the hearing under the warrant of arrest, or, at any rate, as soon as such hearing has proceeded sufficiently in the development of the facts to protect the Government's interests, the alien shall be allowed to inspect the warrant of arrest and all the evidence on which it was issued, and shall be apprised that thereafter he may be represented by counsel."

It will be seen that the rule, in substance, requires that before the beginning or soon after the beginning of the hearing the alien shall be apprised that thereafter he may be represented by counsel.

Under the procedure authorized by this amended rule the Federal officer or officers conducted a preliminary examination of the alien, in which they used a form which had been prepared for that purpose, setting forth questions as to identity, birth, age, citizenship, address, and affiliations, if any, with certain specified organizations. The objection made to this procedure is wholly untenable under the authorities above cited.

But the record shows no case, so far as your committee is advised, where the alien was not, at least after the preliminary examination above mentioned, advised of his right to counsel, and no case in which he was prevented from securing counsel.

In view of the fact that these were not criminal cases, and because of the past experiences of the Government in even identifying the subjects, the committee is of the opinion that the rule was justified. In any event, the Department of Justice can not be charged with illegal practices, when it was following the rule of the Department of Labor, which rule already had been approved by the United States Supreme Court. However, the rule has since been changed.

In conclusion, on this particular subject, and with special regard to Exhibit No. 13 of the National Popular Government League, there has not only been a wide difference of opinion as to the regularity of process, but also on the question of whether the Communist and Communist Labor Parties fell within the provisions of the act of October 16, 1918, as proscribed organizations, membership in or affiliation with which subjected an alien to deportation. The Department of Labor ruled that the Communist Party was such a proscribed organization; but although the principles and teachings of both parties were identical, it saw fit to exclude the Communist Labor Party. This decision was made on the theory that the program of the Communist Party taught the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force.

Judge Anderson, in the Collyer case—a habeas corpus proceeding—endeavored to overrule the Department of Labor in this decision, he holding that the Communist Party did not teach the forcible overthrow of this Government. As stated above, he has since been overruled by the Court of Appeals; but prior to the decision of the higher court at least three Federal judges disagreed with him and ruled to the contrary (Judge Westenhaver, in the Koposud case, in Cleveland; Judge Knox, in the case of Marina Abern, in New York; and Judge Hough, of the Federal Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, in the case of Georgian v. Uhl), while Federal Judge Albert B. Anderson, of the United States District Court for Indiana, canceled the certificate of citizenship of Paul P. Glaser on the ground of membership in the Communist Party. (May 28, 1920, case No. 7926.)

Another portion of the confidential instructions of the Department of Justice, which was the subject of considerable question, is that instructing that confidential informants of the department should arrange, wherever possible, to have meetings fixed for the night on which it was contemplated to make the raids for the purpose of expedition. This, it was charged, was an evidence of the use of provocative agents. Your committee can not agree that the mere arranging for having subjects appear at a given time and place in order to expedite action by the authorities is a provocative act, so far as any offense is involved. The use of undercover informants is one of the oldest practices in criminal investigation, and it has the specific approval of the courts. In some cases the Supreme Court has refused to consider confidential informants and undercover agents as accomplices, even where they used decoys. (See Grimm v. United States, 156 U. S. 8, 604, and Goode v. United States, 159 U. S. 662.)

No evidence has been introduced before your committee showing that any of the undercover agents or informants of the Department of Justice ever actively participated in the framing of any portion of a platform or program or indulged in any speech or writing advocating or encouraging the teaching of violence or the use of force. The inferences drawn by Judge Anderson in the Collyer case, to the effect that Government agents were responsible for offensive portions of the platform and program of the Communist Party of America, certainly were not warranted from the evidence produced before your committee, including the record in the Collyer case.

Exhibit 16 of the National Popular Government League is merely the opinion of Assistant Secretary of Labor Post in the case of Thomas Truss, of Baltimore, canceling the warrant. The committee considers that this was put in for purposes of illustration, in view of the fact that the Attorney General before the House Rules Committee (see pp. 196-199) covered the facts in the Truss case in detail. Although several witnesses before your committee referred to the Truss case, no new evidence was introduced tending to show an illegal action on the part of the agents of the Department of Justice.

It is felt that your committee in this report has gone sufficiently into detail by referring to the charges presented in the order in which they appeared.

The inquiry included repeated demands upon the Attorney General for an explanation of the statutory authority for nearly every move made by the Department of Justice and the Department of Labor in the campaign. Your committee, however, feels that many of these details are of a character concerning which the Attorney General is permitted to exercise some administrative discretion along the lines indicated by the Supreme Court in the McDaniel case (7 Pet.), where it was said by the court that while the head of a department—

"... is limited in the exercise of his powers by law; * * * it does not follow that he must show a statutory provision for every thing he does."

Your committee, while not in any way impugning the motives or questioning the sincerity of any of the committee of 12 lawyers in making these charges against the Department of Justice, are disposed to believe that the special interests and affiliations of some of them are relevant to the inquiry.

Three of the most prominent of the committee of 12, namely, Felix Frankfurter, Ernst Freund, and Frank P. Walsh, were identified with the American Civil Liberties Union, a consolidation of organizations advocating unlimited free speech. This union was organized on January 12, 1920, the same being a reorganization of the National Civil Liberties Bureau. One of its directors was Mr. Roger N. Baldwin, who made a statement before the New York joint legislative committee, in which he set forth the purposes of the union and the scope of its activities. In the course of his statement he said, among other things:

"I would say on behalf of the entire committee that all of them disbelieve the legal theory of constructive intent, and that all of them believe in the right of persons to advocate the overthrow of government by force and violence, while all of the members of the committee totally disbelieve in any such doctrine themselves."

Mr. Baldwin gave some advice to Louis P. Lochner, noted for his pacifist activities after the war declaration, for his conduct of a lobby against the espionage act, and his connection with the Non-partisan League, a Socialist of German descent, in which Mr. Baldwin said:

"We want to also look like patriots in everything we do. We want to get a lot of good flags, talk a good deal about the Constitution and what our forefathers wanted to make of this country, and to show that we are the fellows that really stand for the spirit of their institutions."

One of the documents issued by the unions composing the American Civil Liberties Union has this to say:

"There should be no control whatever in advance of what any person desires to say. * * * There should be no prosecution for the mere expression of opinion on matters of public concern, however radical, however violent. Laws purporting to prevent the advocacy of the overthrow of the Government by force or violence are all violations of the right of free speech. The expression of all opinions, however obnoxious, should be tolerated."

Your committee think it has been rightly said that the "effect of the activities of the American Civil Liberties Union is to create in the minds of the ill-informed people the impression that it is un-American to interfere with the activities of those who seek to destroy American institutions. They seek to influence legislators and executives to repeal or veto any law calculated to protect the State or the Federal Government from the attacks of agitators" (pp. 1979-1982, Report of the New York legislative committee).

The conclusion of the New York committee is that the American Civil Liberties Union, in the last analysis, is a supporter of all subversive movements, and its propaganda is detrimental to the interests of the State. It attempts not only to protect crime but to encourage attacks upon our institutions in every form. Many of the members of its committee—that is, the committee of the American Civil Liberties Union—are undoubtedly sincere in their convictions, but the consequence of their activities is injurious to the public interest.

Zechariah Chafee, Jr., who testified before your committee, is a professor of law at Harvard University. He with Mr. Frankfurter were associated with other counsel for the aliens in the Collyer case. Although it does not appear that he is a member of the Civil Liberties Union, Mr. Chafee has written a book in which he declares that there should be no law against sedition and anarchy (p. 187, Senate hearings).

The activities of Mr. Frank P. Walsh have been quite pronounced. He has been something else than cochairman of the War Labor Board. He first was a member of the Neutral Conference Committee, organized ostensibly to bring before the public the idea of a conference of neutral nations, irrespective of peace platforms, preparedness, and the terms of the war settlement. While cochairman with ex-President Taft, of the War Labor Board, he advised and assisted in putting out propaganda literature justifying the position of the I. W. W. in New York. Mr. L. S. Chumley, who had his offices with the National Civil Liberties Bureau, was in correspondence with Roger Baldwin, hereinafter referred to, and in writing Mr. Baldwin said that Mr. Walsh would do the same, and asked for suggestions how to raise $25,000 bail for Haywood. It appears therefore that Mr. Walsh had his active relations with both the Civil Liberties Bureau and the I. W. W. (See p. 1901 of report of the New York legislative committee.)

Mr. Francis Fisher Kane, another of the 12, had on January 12, 1920, resigned his position as United States district attorney for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, stating as reasons therefor that he was out of sympathy with the antiradical policies of Mr. Palmer and his method of carrying them out. Entertaining the views he did and as expressed in a letter to the Attorney General of January 12, 1920, Mr. Kane acted most honorably in tendering his resignation, and his sincerity can not easily be questioned. He states in his letter that as he reads the manifestos of the Communist Party that party does not expressly stand for the overthrow of the Government by force; further that he "believes in the nationalization of the railroads, of the coal industry, and perhaps other public utilities." He disagrees with the Post Office Department in denying to the New York Call (Socialist) second-class mailing privileges and says that he would like to see section 3 of the espionage act die, etc. Mr. Kane's statement before the committee and the letter to the Attorney General, found on pages 294-350 of the Senate hearings, gives the impression that his tendencies are strongly Socialistic and serves to explain his part in the report of the committee of 12 and his appearance before the Senate committee.

Mr. Swinburne Hale is also a signer of the report of the committee of 12. While making no statement before the Senate committee, his testimony before the House committee was published in pamphlet form under the caption "Do we need more sedition laws?" He was a member of the platform committee of the committee of 48 at the St. Louis convention, December, 1919. He held the rank of captain in the National Army and was in the military intelligence section. He resigned when the New York legislative committee demanded information regarding Ludwig Martens. He is reported to have said during the course of a speech before the committee of 48 in Chicago, "I will never be drafted or serve again in another war of offense or defense."

Dean Tyrrell Williams, of the Washington University Law School, St. Louis, Mo., is also one of the complainants who appeared before the Senate committee. His statement is found at pages 207-224 of the hearings. The committee find nothing of value in the statement and little that is relevant to this inquiry.

Jackson H. Ralston, of Washington, D. C., one of the signers of the report, was responsible largely for the institution of the charges against the Department of Justice, as shown by his statement at pages 257-258 of the Senate hearings. Mr. Ralston communicated with the majority of those attorneys who signed the National Popular Government League report, and was counsel for some of the men arrested. He was counsel for Mr. Louis F. Post, Assistant Secretary of Labor, in a hearing before the House committee on charges against Mr. Post arising out of his actions and policies in connection with deportation proceedings. Impeachment proceedings against Mr. Post were threatened or imminent at the time, hence it does not seem far-fetched to say that the formal charges against the Department of Justice had their origin in the inquiry first made by the House concerning the course pursued by the Assistant Secretary of Labor. Mr. Ralston, as well as others who signed the report, are members of the National Popular Government League.

In conclusion, your committee is of the opinion there was no usurpation of power by the Department of Justice in its cooperation with the Department of Labor in the deportation proceedings which have been the subject of this inquiry; that the execution of warrants of arrest by the agents of the Department of Justice was lawful; that no constitutional right was violated in making arrests on telegraphic warrant, as permitted by rule 22 of the rules governing in deportation proceedings; that the change made in rule 22 in December, 1919, did not deprive any alien of "due process of law"; that in the matter of searches and seizures under warrant, or without search warrant, in deportation cases, the Attorney General could justify his course under the decision of the Supreme Court holding that in such cases the constitutional guaranties have no application. In any event, your committee do not find that any great hardship or deprivation ensued from the use of search warrants by the agents of the Department of Justice.

The question of simultaneous arrests or raids in different cities and sections of the country is largely a matter of policy. Reference has hereinafter been made to the conditions existing or believed to exist at the time these raids were made. The department evidently proceeded on the theory that simultaneous arrests was the most effective way of putting an end to extreme radical activities and ascertaining who among the great body of aliens in our country were subject to deportation because of their membership in organizations proscribed by the statute. Your committee can not say but that the policy thus adopted and carried out was an effective one. Subsequent events and conditions might very well indicate that it was effectual.

But, on the other hand, your committee are of the opinion that the arrests of aliens and their detention afterwards was in some instances accompanied by unnecessary hardships. In some instances, as at Detroit, for example, arrests in such large numbers should not have been made, or facilities should have been provided in advance for the accommodation, under reasonable conditions as to room and sanitation, of all who were arrested. It seems to your committee that there was a lamentable want of foresight on the part of those agents of the Department of Justice who were in charge of the raids in this respect. Further, more complete facilities should have been provided for the speedy examination of all who were taken into custody, in order that the work of those found not to be subject to deportation should not suffer or their families be deprived of their presence at home. There was, it seems to the committee, an unnecessary delay in making some of these examinations.

Further, we think that in some cases, particularly in the cases of the arrests at Bridgeport and Detroit, there was unreasonable delay in finally determining whether the aliens arrested were subject to deportation. But to what extent the Department of Justice should be held responsible for these delays your committee is hardly in a position to say. Presumably the work and any supervision on the part of the Department of Justice ended when the arrests were made and the alien was turned over to the immigration inspector of the Department of Labor. If delays were thereafter caused by a failure of the agents of the Department of Justice to present evidence in the case, then the department or such agents are responsible, but as to whether delay of this kind was caused by the agents of the Department of Justice does not clearly appear. But, in any event, and whoever is chargeable with such delay, aliens should not be kept confined in jails, barracks, or elsewhere for months, as was done in some cases, without determination of the question as to whether they are liable to deportation or not, or without actual deportation if found subject to deportation under the statute.

Your committee are of the opinion that in the interests of certainty and to avoid confusion in the administration of statutes providing for the deportation of aliens there should be some additional legislation amending present statutes so as to provide:

(a) A more explicit definition of what shall constitute opposition to the Government by force or what shall constitute the advocacy of the overthrow of the Government by force or violence, either by the individual or by any association or organization of individuals.

(b) That the Department of Justice, through the Bureau of Investigation, be given specific concurrent authority with the Bureau of Immigration of the Department of Labor in the apprehension of aliens subject to deportation for any of the statutory reasons, the general jurisdiction of the Department of Labor to issue warrants for arrest in such cases and to hear and determine the same to remain in the Department of Labor as at present.

(c) That the Attorney General of the United States be given specific authority to be represented by a duly authorized assistant in all cases before the Department of Labor based upon evidence or information submitted by the Department of Justice and to have the right to examine and cross-examine witnesses.

(d) That in addition to agents of the Department of Justice warrants of arrest in deportation cases may be executed by any civil officer of any State or of the United States engaged in the enforcement of law to whom such warrant may be addressed and delivered for service.

(e) A limit should be fixed on the time during which one arrested in deportation proceedings may be held in jail to await a determination by the Department of Labor, the period of delay occasioned by him not to be included, and a limit also to the time within which he shall be deported if found subject to deportation.

CHARGES OF ILLEGAL PRACTICES OF THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

REPLY BY SENATOR WALSH OF MONTANA TO THE REPORT HERETOFORE SUBMITTED BY SENATOR STERLING TOUCHING CHARGES OF ILLEGAL PRACTICES OF THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

The report submitted by the Senator from South Dakota in the nature of a comment made upon the disclosures before the subcommittee directed to inquire into the charges of illegal practices by the Department of Justice would, if approved or acquiesced in, afford more occasion for alarm, in the view of the undersigned, than even the acts of the department he has heretofore felt compelled to condemn.

It will be noted that in no particular are the facts as recited in the report submitted by me disputed. Issue is taken on some of the legal propositions advanced, and in connection therewith views are expressed which, but for the exigency which their author conceives to exist, never would be asserted by him or by anyone who appreciates or prizes the essentials of liberty. To these the observations herewith submitted will be in the main addressed. In passing, however, it may be remarked that by every adroit method of approval the committee is by the report under review solicited to conclude that "the end justifies the means." Even the horrible condition which prevailed in Detroit in consequence of the wholesale arrests made there is, in a measure, condoned by the mildness of the criticism directed at those responsible for it. It was perhaps somewhat worse there than elsewhere, but in some degree the same dire consequences must have ensued wherever the hordes taken in the "raid" were assembled. It was not only at Detroit that some of the victims "went crazy."

I shall spend no time on those portions of the report in which there are considered at some length the alleged abusive treatment of individual aliens by the subordinates of the department, set out in the pamphlet of the Popular Government League, and the character of the lawyers assuming the authorship of the same, obvious attempts to divert attention from the serious matters revealed by the hearings. It is enough to say, with reference to the wrongs so complained of, that even if fully established it would be sufficient for the responsible superior officers to say, as they no doubt might truthfully say, that they had in no manner countenanced them and had no knowledge that they were perpetrated.

I can not forbear, however, from remarking that perhaps the state of the record in that regard might not be so satisfactory to the Senator from South Dakota had he made any effort to go into the charges in that line. The department came forward with its version of the affair, presented as was the showing in the pamphlet, as a rule, by affidavit. The writer thought it useless, and perhaps more than useless, to spend time upon such an inquiry. No other member of the committee proposed a searching inquiry or proposed to call the alleged victims or those likely to support their complaint. And now it is regarded persuasive that the charges were not backed up at the hearing.

This is no adversary proceeding in which the National Popular Government League or any individual or group of individuals is required to assume the burden of proof. In the pamphlet is an affidavit of one De Silver, telling of the way a raid upon and search of the office of the newspaper organ of the Communist Party was carried out, the place being described as being in a state of wreck thereafter. The report says:

"It is significant that Mr. De Silver, considering his position, did not appear before either the subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee or the House Rules Committee, although he alleges that he was an eyewitness."

Mr. De Silver was not called before the subcommittee of which the Senator from South Dakota was the chairman. If the issue upon which Mr. De Silver testified was by the chairman deemed important, he had the power of the Senate to compel the attendance of the witness and to require him to subject himself to examination and cross-examination.

As to the alleged "radical" tendencies of the lawyers mentioned, their character neither in that regard nor in any other appears to have any relevancy whatever to the inquiry before this committee, either with respect to the facts which, as stated, are not denied, or with respect to the law applicable to such facts.

It might reasonably be assumed that some at least of those making complaint of the treatment accorded those taken in the raids were upon one consideration or another more or less sympathetic with them.

The argument of the Senator from South Dakota proceeds upon the theory, not avowed but nevertheless clear, that the Department of Justice may do anything which the law does not forbid. He finds, for instance, that while under the act of 1892 a Chinaman may be arrested, with a view to his deportation, by any United States customs official, collector of internal revenue or his deputies, or United States marshal or his deputies, and, impliedly, by no one else, a white man may be arrested by anyone to whom the Secretary of Labor, or even an immigration inspector, may deliver the warrant for service or by anyone who may by either of such officials be directed to do so, there being in the law no class of officers expressly authorized to make service of the warrant upon white aliens. So he reasons concerning searches and seizures. Reaching the conclusion that the fourth amendment does not extend to deportation proceedings and finding in the law no express prohibition upon the perpetration, under the express command of the department, of such outrages as the evidence shows were committed, in order to secure documentary evidence, he finds nothing to condemn, in either the order or the manner in which it was carried out. I proceed to canvass the contention that searches and seizures such as those ordered and carried out as shown by the record before us are not forbidden by the fourth amendment.

It is indisputable that the Government may admit or exclude aliens in its discretion except as it may be restrained by treaty, and may, accordingly, prescribe the conditions under which they may enter or remain. It is likewise settled beyond controversy that no one is entitled to have tried by a court the question as to whether he is or is not subject to deportation—the determination of that question may be reposed in an administrative officer. That one charged with being an alien in this country in violation of its laws is entitled to a hearing before he can be deported would seem to need neither elucidation nor argument. It is monstrous to conclude, as one must conclude if the argument of the Senator from South Dakota is to be followed to its logical result, that the Secretary of Labor may deport anyone, even a citizen of the United States, whom he believes to be subject to deportation, without being required to observe the constitutional principle that no person shall be deprived of his life, liberty, or property without due process of law, implying, as it does, as declared by Webster, the right to be heard before being condemned. Indeed, orders of deportation come under review by the courts only upon the contention that by the proceedings resulting in them the petitioner has been, and that by the execution of such order they will be, deprived of their liberty without due process of law, the court being by section 753, Revised Statutes of the United States, authorized to issue and to hear writs of habeas corpus when a prisoner is in custody. "In violation of the Constitution * * * of the United States." The question was squarely presented to the Japanese immigration case (189 U. S. 86, 100-101), in which the conclusion of the court was expressed in the following language:

"It has been settled that the power to exclude or expel aliens belonged to the political department of the Government, and that the order of an executive officer invested with the power to determine finally the facts upon which an alien's right to enter this country or remain in it depended was due process of law, and no other tribunal, unless expressly authorized by law to do so, was at liberty to re-examine the evidence on which he acted or to controvert its sufficiency. (Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 698, 713; Nishimura Ekiu v. United States, 142 U. S. 651, 659; Lem Moon Sing v. United States, 158 U. S. 538, 547). But this court has never held, nor must we now be understood as holding, that administrative officers when executing the provisions of a statute involving the liberty of persons may disregard the fundamental principles that inhere in "due process of law" as understood at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. One of these principles is that no person shall be deprived of his liberty without opportunity at some time to be heard before such officers in respect of the matters upon which that liberty depends, not necessarily an opportunity upon a regular set occasion and according to the forms of judicial procedure but one that will secure the prompt, vigorous action contemplated by Congress and at the same time be appropriate to the nature of the case upon which such officers are required to act. Therefore it is not competent for the Secretary of the Treasury or any executive officer at any time within the year limited by the statute arbitrarily to cause an alien who has entered the country and has become subject in all respects to its jurisdiction and a part of its population, although alleged to be illegally here, to be taken into custody and deported without giving him all opportunity to be heard upon the questions involving his right to be and remain in the United States. No such arbitrary power can exist where the principles involved in due process of law are recognized."

It will be noticed that the case first cited in the above quotation is Fong Yue Ting v. United States (149 U. S. 698, 713). The proposition determined therein is accurately stated in the opening sentence of the excerpt above set out. The counsel for the alien had insisted that the proceedings under review before a United States judge, as provided by section 6 of the act of 1892, were judicial in their character, criminal in their nature, and that the guarantees of the Constitution in reference to criminal proceedings were applicable. Attacking the views expressed by the court, Justice Brewer said:

"I utterly dissent from and reject the doctrine expressed in the opinion of the majority that 'Congress, under the power to exclude or expel aliens, might have directed any Chinese laborer found in the United States without a certificate of residence to be removed out of the country by executive officers, without judicial trial or examination, just as it might have authorized such officers absolutely to prevent his entrance into the country.' An arrest in that way for that purpose would not be a reasonable seizure of the person within the meaning of the fourth article of the amendments to the Constitution. It would be brutal and oppressive."

And again:

"His deportation is thus imposed for neglect to obtain a certificate of residence, from which he can only escape by showing his inability to secure it from one of the causes named. That is the punishment for his neglect, and that, being of an infamous character, can only be imposed after indictment, trial, and conviction."

These expressions from the dissenting opinion are not quoted in the belief that they, rather than the majority opinion, constitute the sounder view of the law, but simply to indicate the question that was before the court in the Fong Yue Ting case and what was decided therein. They were answered in the opinion of the court thus:

"The order of deportation is not a punishment for crime. It is not a banishment in the sense in which that word is often applied to the expulsion of a citizen from his country by way of punishment. It is but a method of enforcing the return to his own country of an alien who has not complied with the conditions upon the performance of which the Government of the Nation, acting within its constitutional authority and through the proper departments, has determined that his continuing to reside here shall depend."

Then follows the remark so much relied upon by the Senator from South Dakota:

"He has not, therefore, been deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; and the provisions of the Constitution securing the right of trial by jury and prohibiting unreasonable searches and seizures and cruel and unusual punishments have no application."

Justice Gray, for the court, was trying to make it clear that those provisions of the Constitution securing certain rights to defendants in criminal proceedings are inapplicable to proceedings for deportation. If what he said is to be considered as an asseveration that the fourth amendment applies only to warrants issued in criminal proceedings, it must be considered as having been overruled in Weeks v. U. S. (232 U. S. 392), referred to in the original report of the writer, in the opinion in which the court says:

"The effect of the fourth amendment is to put the courts of the United States and Federal officials, in the exercise of their power and authority, under limitations and restraints as to the exercise of such power and authority, and to forever secure the people, their persons, houses, papers, and effects against all unreasonable searches and seizures under the guise of law. This protection reaches all alike, whether accused of crime or not, and the duty of giving to it force and effect is obligatory upon all intrusted under our Federal system with the enforcement of the laws."

Indeed, no one who attends to the history of the times in which the amendment in question had its origin can have any doubt about the proposition thus stated by the court. It is perfectly well known that the amendment was proposed and adopted as a guaranty against practices like the issuance of writs of assistance, the controversy over which stirred the Colonies from Massachusetts to Georgia. Those writs were not issued in criminal proceedings, but were sued out by the customs officers to search for smuggled goods.

The question of the applicability of the fourth amendment to arrests with a view to deportation was not presented in the Fong Yue Ting case, and being a habeas corpus proceeding to test not the original arrest but the order of deportation could not have been presented. It is perfectly well settled that in such a proceeding the validity of the original arrest is not a subject of inquiry. In Ekin v. United States, 142 U. S. 651, 662, the court said:

"A writ of habeas corpus is not like an action to recover damages for an unlawful arrest or commitment, but its object is to ascertain whether the prisoner can lawfully be detained in custody; and if sufficient ground for his detention by the Government is shown he is not to be discharged for defects in the original arrest or commitment." (Ex parte Bollman & Swartwout, 4 Cranch, 75, 114, 125; Coleman v. Tennessee, 97 U. S. 509, 519; United States v. McBratney, 104 U. S. 621, 624; Kelley v. Thomas, 15 Gray, 192; The King v. Marks, 3 East, 157; Shuttleworth's Case, 9 Q. B. 651.)

To the same effect are Moy Wing Sun v. Prentiss (234 Fed. 24), Ex Part Chin Him (227 Fed. 131), and Ong Seen v. Burnett (232 Fed. 850).

The question to be determined is not whether the alien was or was not legally arrested, but whether he is or is not entitled to remain in the United States. The legality of his arrest can be determined only upon a motion seasonably interposed to discharge him or in an action for false imprisonment. So on an appeal from a judgment of conviction, the question to be resolved is the guilt or innocence of the defendant, and it is wholly irrelevant whether he was legally or illegally arrested.

Much is claimed for the opinion of Judge Westenhaver, referred to in the report which is the subject of this comment, and particularly it is asserted that it was by him decided that arrests in deportation proceedings may be made without a warrant. That is not what he held. What he asserted was simply that the arresting officer need not necessarily have the warrant in hand. No one will contend that when a sheriff goes with a posse to make an arrest under a warrant the member thereof who actually makes the capture must have manual possession of the warrant, but the rule applicable in such a case affords no justification for an arrest in Concord, N. H., because of a warrant in the hands of an officer in Boston, and a fortiori for an arrest without any warrant. But whatever was said by Judge Westenhaver touching the validity of the original arrest was as shown by the authorities cited above, wholly beside the question before him. Anything said on the subject is obiter in the extreme sense, irrelevant except that in considering the question of whether the hearing by the administrative officers was fair—that is to say, whether the prisoner had a hearing in a just sense—oppressive and illegal acts of the arresting officer appearing to act conjointly with his inquisitors may be taken into consideration. (Whitefield v. Hanges, 222 Fed. 745, 748-749.)

The Department of Justice did not have the view when it directed, nor did its agents when they carried out, the searches and seizures complained of, that the fourth amendment is inapplicable to and affords no guaranty whatever in deportation proceedings against either arbitrary arrests or unreasonable searches and seizures.

The general circular of instructions issued by the bureau of investigation to its agents who were to carry on the raids—which, by the way, though made the basis of much of the criticism in the report heretofore submitted by the writer, is not even mentioned in that here reviewed—admonishes them to sue out search warrants wherever "absolutely necessary" to secure the documentary evidence it was hoped would be captured. And such search warrants were sued out in pretended conformity to the requirements of the fourth amendment, but upon a showing that no lawyer could regard as sufficient, as shown in the earlier report to this committee. Not only was the showing no more than a pretense of compliance with the Constitution but the warrant, in its command, made no efforts at "particularly describing the * * * thing to be seized."

But let it be assumed that the fourth amendment has no application to deportation proceedings. Still there is no warrant in the law for entering a man's house, rifling his drawers, peering into his private papers, and walking off with any documents that are his, for any purpose, much less to use them as evidence against him.

Speaking of the great argument of James Otis against the oppressive writs of assistance, John Adams said: "Then and there the Revolution began." Otis, who appeared on the stage, of course, before the fourth amendment came into existence, contended that searches such as were contemplated under writs of the character against which he arraigned were contrary to the principles of elemental justice and violative of the spirit of the common law. But even the arrogant minions of the Crown did not go so far as to insist upon the right to search without any warrant, nor to contend that, in the absence of any express provision in the law prohibiting searches without a warrant, they were at liberty to prosecute such.

The circular letter referred to, which the Senator from South Dakota chooses to ignore, says:

"I have made mention above that the meeting places and residences of the members should be thoroughly searched. I leave it entirely to your discretion as to the method by which you should gain access to such places. If, due to the local conditions in your territory, you find that it is absolutely necessary for you to obtain a search warrant for the premises, you should communicate with the local authorities a few hours before the time for the arrests is set and request a warrant to search the premises."

He informs the committee that no searches were made except with the consent of the inmates or the occupants of the dwellings. It can not be pretended that the subcommittee made any inquiry into the conditions under which each search and seizure was made—the command was to search and seize volens volens and to get a search warrant where "absolutely necessary."

Of what consequence is it that some of the subordinates of the department or all of them considerately disobeyed this command or executed it with some attention to the proprieties which their innate devotion to the principles of liberty suggested. The law, under any and all circumstances, forbade the searches and seizures for the purpose of securing evidence, and the pretense that they were made to secure the implement of crime ought to be left for exploitation to those who are responsible for them. It does not commend the report of the Senator from South Dakota that he does not frankly admit that they were entirely lawless. He advances, however, a new excuse for them, not heretofore thought of by the young man, Mr. Hoover, who, as shown by the famous circular letter, was acting as counsel in the prosecution of the raids, namely, that under the espionage act the circulars and other proselytizing literature being put out by the proscribed organizations having been declared by the Postmaster General to be unmailable, they became instruments for the commission of the crime of mailing the same. The fact that the Postmaster General held the matter to be unmailable is of no consequence. The statute reads as follows:

"SEC. 2. Every letter, writing, circular, postal card, picture, print, engraving, photograph, newspaper, pamphlet, book, or other publication, matter, or thing of any kind containing any matter advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States is hereby declared to be nonmailable."

"SEC. 3. Whoever shall use, or attempt to use, the mails or Postal Service of the United States for the transmission of any matter declared by this title to be nonmailable shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both."

No new feature is introduced into the question by this statute, except possibly the feature of forcible resistance to the law as distinguished from forcible overthrow of the Government. It is even less exact to speak of the literature as "property to be used in the commission of a felony" when appeal is made to this statute than when reference is made to section 6 of the Criminal Code. In my judgment it is not an instrument for the commission of either crime, though it undoubtedly might and probably would be evidence of the intent to commit either or both. But let that go. I inquire again, What justification can be offered—none has been—for the direction of the circular emanating from the department to seize membership cards, financial records, "all literature, whatever its character, books (minutes of the meetings of the society, even works in its library, if it has one), papers, and anything hanging on the walls," a print of Carl Marx or a picture of the fall of the Bastille, for instance?

I confess to some surprise that the Senator from South Dakota did not frankly admit that the claim that the searches and seizures ordered by the department and carried out by its subordinates is not a mere pretense and a very shallow pretense, the object—and the only object of them—being to secure evidence. Nor can I refrain from remarking that even in the zeal that he has displayed to exonerate the officials responsible for them he has had no word to say for either the absurd showing upon which the warrants were issued or the equally absurd character of the command they carry. He must justify them, so far as his own conscience is concerned, upon the theory that they are not expressly forbidden in the law, for in justice to him it should be said, with reference to the considerations just canvassed the report says, not that he maintains but that "the Attorney General claims" or "the Attorney General insists."

Not so with respect to arrests without a warrant. Here the Senator himself subscribes to the doctrine that the absence of a prohibition in the law affords room for the belief that they are justifiable. Here is his language:

"So far as arrests without warrant of any kind are concerned, they should be justifiable, no law prohibiting them, in cases and under circumstances analogous to arrests in criminal cases when permitted at common law and under the statutes of perhaps all the States."

The common law—the development of ages—authorizes the arrest of one caught flagrante delicto—in the actual commission of a crime. Upon what course of reasoning can the conclusion be arrived at that one who has committed no crime, but is subject to arrest under a purely statutory proceeding, with a view to his deportation, authorizing an arrest by authority of a warrant, can be arrested without a warrant? It is said that by analogy the right arises. Even if that were admitted, the conditions are by no means analogous. An officer may arrest one caught in the act, because all the facts necessary to the guilt of the prisoner takes place under the very eyes of his captor. His testimony alone will furnish proof of the guilt of the offender. But the officer who arrests one taken at a meeting of the Communist Party may, and probably will, be unable to say (1) whether the meeting was, indeed, a meeting of the Communist Party; (2) whether, though the prisoner was at the meeting, he was, in fact, a member of the party, or possibly a postulate who went with a view to determining whether to become a member or not, or went out of mere curiosity, or as a student of politics or sociology or as a reporter for some journal; or (3) whether the man is an alien or a citizen of the United States. Though it would be a strained inference to conclude that every man at the meeting is a member of the proscribed party, it would be wholly inadmissible to conclude that all members or all those attending are aliens. It is impossible to overlook the fact that many of those identified with the proscribed organizations are American citizens—the leaders often are. Bill Haywood and most of his associates, the moving spirits of the I. W. W., are such. Eugene Debs is a native American, and so, I believe, are Foster and Morgolis.

So much for arrests without any warrant. As to telegraphic warrants, the report of the Senator from South Dakota asserts that their "validity" "when issued in accordance with the rule of the Labor Department is 'recognized' in Jouras v. Allen (222 Fed. 756)."

The value of the report under review in its discussion of the law involved may be gauged by the following from the opinion of the court in that case, written by Judge Sanborn:

"Gust Jouras is a Greek. He entered the United States in accordance with its law in 1903, when he was about 16 years of age, and has resided in it ever since. For five years prior to his arrest by the inspector he lived in Kansas City. He was, and long had been, engaged in operating restaurants and lunch wagons in that city, and at the time of his arrest he and his two partners were the owners of two restaurants worth $1,500, which they were operating. The record convinces that he was a quiet, peaceable, business boy. There is no evidence that he was violent, passionate, or dangerous, or that he ever concealed, or intended to conceal, his whereabouts, or to flee or clandestinely escape from any charge or arrest. Prior to January 5, 1914, the inspector took the ex parte statements of Mrs. Brown and other prostitutes in reference to the charge subsequently made against Jouras, and on that day made a telegraphic application for a telegraphic warrant of arrest. He received such a warrant of arrest, which read in this way:

"Arrow Gust Jouras receipt or relay thirty.

"4.05 p. m.

"W. B. WILSON, Secretary."

"The meaning of this statement is said by the inspector to be:

"Arrest following named alien (Gust Jouras) and bring before yourself for hearing, forwarding record of proceedings to the department; alien found receiving, sharing in, and deriving benefit from the earnings of a prostitute or prostitutes. Authority granted for release under bond in the sum of $3,000."

"Rule 22b of the Department of Labor requires that during the hearing the alien shall be allowed to inspect the warrant. The purpose of that portion of that rule is to inform the accused of the genuineness of the signature to the warrant and of the charges against him. But such a telegraphic warrant in a code of which the alien is ignorant accomplishes neither of these objects. The signature to it is not the genuine signature of the Secretary, or any officer, and the telegram gives the accused no information. Hence rule 22, subdivision 2, requires that 'Telegraphic application may be resorted to only in case of necessity.' There was neither necessity nor reason for a telegraphic application in this case. But the inspector having made a telegraphic application and procured the telegraphic warrant at about 4 p. m. on Saturday, January 5, 1914, went to Jouras's restaurant, seized him, and caused him to be thrown into and kept in solitary confinement in a dark cell at police headquarters 'for investigation' during Saturday night, Sunday, Sunday night, and until Monday at 11 a. m., when he took him to his room, handcuffed him, and with a weapon at his command gave him a hearing there without counsel or friend, which consisted of questioning him in an exceedingly threatening manner, and writing down what he succeeded in extracting from him. This course of action was arbitrary, contrary to the rule regarding telegraphic applications, a clear abuse of the discretion of the inspector, and a hearing thus conducted is unfair and contrary to the fundamental principles which inhere in due process of law." (United States v. Ruiz, 203 Fed. 441, 443; 121 C. C. A. 551.)

The case immediately preceding the Jouras case, as they are reported in 222 Federal, is Whitfield v. Hanges, which might, with equal accuracy, be said to "recognize" the "validity" of telegraphic warrants, for, as in the Jouras case, not a word is said as to whether such warrants are or are not valid. But some aspects of the proceedings assailed before this committee as they present themselves to the judicial mind are revealed in their repellent character by the following from the opinion in that case by the same eminent judge who wrote the opinion in the Jouras case:

"The appellant received a telegraphic warrant of arrest, caused the appellees to be arrested, and was examining one of them, and with his employees, Captain Campbell and another police officer, was holding them in confinement and preventing them from seeing or consulting with any other person, when their counsel appeared and demanded to see and consult with them and to take part in the examination. The inspector refused this request, permitted no one to see and consult with them until after he had examined each of them in secret. After their examination was completed he permitted them for the first time to see anyone but himself and the police officers and to have counsel and to introduce the testimony of witnesses. It will be noticed that the rule gives the inspector no authority secretly, in the presence of no one but himself and his police officers, whose presence and power unavoidably places the defenseless alien under fear and restraint, to examine or question him. It is limited to giving authority to the inspector to give the alien a hearing to enable him to show cause why he should not be deported, and by its terms it excludes a secret examination of the alien to extort a confession or evidence unfavorable to him. The provisions of the rule that the inspector shall grant the alien a hearing, that during the hearing he shall be permitted to inspect the warrant, and that at such stage thereof as the officer deems proper he shall be permitted to have counsel were made for the benefit of the alien for the purpose of giving him a fair trial. The liberty, and the property also—for if he is imprisoned and deported he must lose his business and sacrifice his property—of a permanent resident alien, like the appellees, as well as their deportation, are involved in the issue, and these provisions of the rule should be liberally construed to accomplish their plain purpose. To the same end the discretion of the inspector in determining when the alien shall inspect the warrant and when he shall have counsel should be exercised so that his hearing shall be full and fair. A denial of permission to him to see the warrant and to have counsel within five minutes of the close of the hearing would be a clear abuse of discretion and would render the provisions of the rule as administered 'inconsistent with law' and void. Although a law or rule be fair and just in appearance, yet if it is applied and administered by public authority with an evil eye and an oppressive hand, so as to deprive a person of his fundamental rights, it can not be sustained." (Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 374, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220; Henderson v. Mayor of New York, 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. Ed. 543; Chy Lung v. Freeman, 92 U. S. 275, 23 L. Ed. 550; Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. Ed. 676; Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 26 L. Ed. 587; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 5 Sup. Ct. 730, 28 L. Ed. 1145.)

"One of the objects of this rule was to give, not to deprive, the alien of the benefit of counsel. The time when an alien, who is ordinarily ignorant of the law, of legal procedure and of his rights, may derive the most benefit of counsel is when he is arrested and his hearing begins. It would have been no abuse of the discretion of the inspector to have permitted the appellees to have counsel to advise them immediately upon their arrest, to be present and to take part in the proceedings at and after the first stage of the examination and hearing of the aliens. Such a course would have been in accord with the fundamental principles of English and American jurisprudence, consistent with the law, and it should have been pursued."

The practice here so emphatically and so justly condemned was that regularly pursued in connection with the raids of November, 1919, and January, 1920. It will be noted that the court seems to regard the right of the prisoner, in custody in deportation proceedings, to counsel "when he is arrested and his hearing begins" as essential to a fair hearing and consequently that to deny it is to proceed without due process of law. If that be sound, and it certainly is sensible, then the midnight change in the rule regarding counsel, effected intervening the issuance of the warrants in anticipation of the raids of January 2 and their execution, was void, as it was applied, and the refusal to permit those proceeded against to procure or consult counsel until after what is referred to as the preliminary hearing was a censurable abuse.

In the Pannunzio report the author states that he found men who had been in jail for weeks and for months in some cases and were still held incommunicado because they had not yet had their preliminary hearing. (Hearings, pp. 335-336.)

The quotation last above will serve to dissipate an erroneous view, evidently entertained by a member of the committee, that the examination to which the persons taken in the raids were presently subjected, without the presence or assistance of counsel, was conducted by the arresting officer and that complaint in that regard had no better foundation than would be a criticism of a sheriff for talking with his prisoner.

The fact is that the examination was not in the nature of an informal conversation between the prisoner and the arresting officer, but was a formal inquiry before an immigration inspector, who, at the so-called final hearing, heard and recorded any additional evidence that might be adduced either for or against the prisoner and who, under the rules, was required, on transmitting the record to the department, to make recommendations as to the disposition which should be made of the case.

Though the Senator from South Dakota insists that the warrant authorized by the statute may be served by anyone to whom it is delivered for service, and consequently that it may be addressed to anyone, because the statute does not say to whom it shall be addressed or who may serve it—another application of the principle for which he contends that anything may be done which the law does not forbid—he is not so confident of the soundness of that position as to abandon the fiction that the officers of the Department of Justice were "cooperating" with those of the Department of Labor in making the arrests. This he asseverates and reasseverates, though he is significantly silent about the command of the Burke letter, "It is to be distinctly understood that the arrests made are being made under the direction and supervision of the Department of Justice," and so they were made. Neither does he think it worth while to comment on the statement in the letter of the Comptroller of the Treasury that the Department of Labor declined to reimburse the Department of Justice on account of expenses incurred by it in connection with the arrests, because the services had been rendered "without request or authority from the Department of Labor."

Enough has been said on the legal propositions advanced in the original report, successfully assailed, as it is insisted, in no particular, namely—

1. The agents of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice have no authority to make arrests in deportation proceedings, if, indeed, they have authority to make arrests at all.

2. The agents of the Department of Labor have no authority to make an arrest looking to deportation without a warrant.

3. The issuance of a warrant upon the unsworn statement of an agent of the Bureau of Investigation is a plain violation of the fourth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

4. There is no authority in the law for the conduct of a search in deportation proceedings, either of the residence of the alien or of the meeting places of societies condemned by the immigration laws, or for the seizure of books, records, or papers of either.

5. There is no authority in the law for the issuance of a search warrant in deportation proceedings at all.

6. There is no authority in the law for the issuance of a search warrant to seize books or papers to be used as evidence, even of the commission of a crime, much less to establish a case in deportation proceedings.

Touching the inhumanity of arresting thousands of persons in one night, necessitating their being kept in fearfully overcrowded quarters, involving long delay in the preliminary hearing before the release of those who, upon no theory of the law or the evidence, could be deported, and still longer delay before the department, overwhelmed as it was, could finally decide whether the prisoner was or was not entitled to be released, the report has nothing to say except in feeble extenuation of the conditions admitted to have prevailed at Detroit, said to have been speedily relieved. It will be remembered that the jails of the city being crowded with those held after their escape from the fetid quarters to which they were originally confined in the Federal building, the city council spread upon its records a formal resolution demanding that they be removed, the health of the city being imperiled by the condition of the prisons occasioned by the presence of prisoners in such numbers.

Nothing is said in justification or excuse of the course of the department in that regard, save for a remark presently to be noticed, for it can not be said that the comment that the making of simultaneous arrests is an administrative matter resting in the discretion of the officers charged with the execution of the laws offers either excuse or justification. Undoubtedly it is an administrative matter—that is the nature of the complaint, that the discretion reposed in the department was frightfully, cruelly abused; that there was no exigency which required the simultaneous arrest of thousands of persons, including multitudes who were not legally subject to detention, and other multitudes who, though possibly technically subject to deportation, were perfectly harmless, deluded individuals, prospective citizens of a most desirable class, wanting only a rudimentary knowledge of our system of government with which they had had no opportunity to acquaint themselves. The committee is still unapprised of the reason for these wholesale arrests or why the generality of those held were not tolerated until in due course they could be proceeded against in an orderly manner, the "leaders" only in the revolutionary movement, if there was one, and the "officers" of the proscribed societies being apprehended, as the Attorney General with fine sarcasm advised the committee he had done. The course pursued had a virtue, however, in the opinion of the Senator from South Dakota—it was effectual. He says:

"The department evidently proceeded on the theory that simultaneous arrests was the most effective way of putting an end to extreme radical activities and ascertaining who among the great body of aliens in our country were subject to deportation because of their membership in organizations proscribed by the statute. Your committee can not say but that the policy thus adopted and carried out was an effectual one. Subsequent events and conditions might very well indicate that it was effectual."

That is the idea. Why quibble over the law or dwell upon rights guaranteed by the Constitution? Why cavil at the means if the ends attained are to be commended? Let that spirit have the slightest countenance from the Senate of the United States and the criminally inclined will cry, "Eie upon your laws." If we do not respect them, who may be expected to except from dread of the gallows or the dungeon?

Whether the course pursued, as it has been reviewed, to put "an end to extreme radical activities" was effectual or not is wholly beside the question before this committee, and varying opinions may well be indulged with respect thereto. For myself, I find it difficult to conceive of a course more powerfully calculated to excite widespread hatred of our Government and of all government, seeing that ours is, as we confidently believe, the best that the world knows. The indignities and outrages suffered by the victims, the majority of whom were released, will rankle in their breasts until their dying day, and their friends and relatives will share with them the conviction that justice "for a season bade the world farewell" when they went through the ordeal from which some of them emerged maniacal.

I am skeptical about the claim that the subsidence of radical activities is attributable to these lawless raids, particularly as the same change is noticeable all over Europe. That the change has ensued proves nothing to me. Post hoc non propter hoc. At the time the proceedings reviewed were in progress scare articles in the newspapers had excited the belief that Bolshevism was about to overrun Europe and to engulf America. It is quite probable that the founders of that political cult, with the ardor that has been often found to characterize the devotees of a new religion, went or sent their missionaries into remote countries to spread the faith which they had embraced and excited the enthusiasm and aroused the activities of those harboring related notions of government and of the organization of society in this country and other countries. It was claimed, and perhaps established, that very considerable sums of money were expended by the new Russian Government in propaganda, so widely and effectually pursued during the war, in disseminating the doctrines to which it was nominally attached. If Europe ever was alarmed at the prospect of being overrun either by the arms or the ideas of Russia, it has fully recovered its normal state; if there ever prevailed any general idea that the people of Europe were about to embrace Bolshevism, it has been dissipated.

Perhaps the initial enthusiasm of its advocates has waned; perhaps their pecuniary resources for purposes of propaganda have been exhausted; perhaps, in the distress which has calamitously come upon the people of Russia, they find better uses for their money at home; perhaps the ill success that has attended Bolshevik rule in Russia has hardened the hearts of those who might otherwise yield to the persuasive tongues of its evangelists in foreign parts or chilled the populace that might otherwise have heedlessly accepted their plan for the regeneration of the world; perhaps, and more likely, the public mind, overwrought by the war, has been restored to its normal operation and the plain common sense of the American people has again asserted itself. Perhaps it is one or all of these causes, or others not mentioned, rather than the lawless acts of the Department of Justice, that is responsible for the decadence of extreme radical activities in this country.

It is advanced that they should be condoned because both "the public and Congress must have known of the activities of the Department of Justice in connection with deportation cases or in raids made for the purpose of apprehending criminals and aliens subject to deportation." In that connection reference is made to the testimony of the Attorney General given before the House Committee on Rules in the month of March, 1920, and to the Poindexter resolution. The fact was evidently overlooked that the information given to the public by the hearings before the House committee was disclosed some months after the raids, and that the disclosure then made by the Attorney General was to the effect that he had caused to be apprehended the "leaders" and "officers" of the proscribed organizations. The response of the Attorney General to the Poindexter resolution of October 17, 1919, was timely, being transmitted under date of November 15, 1919. By the resolution he was requested to advise the Senate as to what steps he had taken to prosecute those guilty of the bomb outrages or of efforts to overthrow the Government by force, or of similar offenses, and also to advise "and inform the Senate whether or not the Department of Justice has taken legal proceedings for the arrest and deportation of aliens who, it is alleged, have within the United States committed the acts aforesaid; and if not, why not; and if so, to what extent."

To that part of the resolution he responded as follows:

"The administration of this law (the deportation statute) is entirely within the jurisdiction of the Department of Labor."

"However, under the existing conditions of our laws, it seemed to be the only means at my disposal of attacking the radical movement, and as Congress had seen fit to refuse appropriations to the Department of Labor for its enforcement, I have cooperated with the immigration officials to the fullest extent." (S. Doc. No. 153, 66th Cong., 1st sess., p. 10.)

The conclusion is a strained one that Congress either knew in advance or was later advised of the cruelties inflicted upon or the injustices suffered by the great multitudes caught in the raids.

Congress has not yet condoned the practices here condemned, and while it retains its right to the respect of the American people it never can condone them. We must either indorse the conduct of the department or we must repudiate its acts. There is no middle course. The offense, if offense there has been, was that of the Department of Justice. We become equally guilty if, being brought to our attention, and we find ourselves unable to commend it on the one hand, we refrain, from any cause, from denouncing it on the other.

Nor can we ignore the matter on the assumption that the affair is a closed incident. The same practices, or others of like character, are being even now pursued by the department officials. The New York World of August 6, 1921, has the following news item:

"After arresting Giuseppe di Filippi, the 23-year-old Bayonne (N. J.) truckman, on the charge of being the driver of the Wall Street bomb wagon, and keeping him in a cell 14 days, practically incommunicado. Government officials went into court yesterday, 80 days following the original arrest, and asked that the charge be dismissed, virtually admitting that their suspicions were unfounded. Ellipio was taken into custody by agents of the Department of Justice May 17 last on information furnished by Thomas J. Smith, a former lieutenant of the New York fire department, who "positively" identified the young Italian as the driver of the hearse wagon. Smith had previously "positively" identified Tito Ligi in Scranton.

There was a time when it was fondly believed that nothing of the kind could occur in America, that the constitutional guaranty of a speedy public trial meant something more than a mere declaration, and imprisonment without an immediate hearing to determine whether there existed probable cause for holding the prisoner was unknown in this land of liberty.

Recently the offices of a committee directing a strike on a Georgia railway in the city of Atlanta were invaded upon the pretended authority of a subpoena duces tecum by the United States marshal, acting under the direction of a representative of the department, and all books, papers, and other documents therein seized and carried away to be used as evidence before a grand jury, at the time, on the initiative of the same department official, engaged in an inquiry as to whether the officers whose papers had thus been taken were not guilty of some offense cognizable by a Federal grand jury in connection with the strike then in progress. It is to the credit of the administration of justice in that jurisdiction that the court upon the petition of the parties whose rights were thus trampled upon, ordered the surrender of the documents and of all copies of the same which might have been made.

It has been said that though the clangor of arms had ceased, though actual peace had prevailed for more than a year when the raids were made, it was a time of high feeling, approaching hysteria, because of the general apprehension of the spread of Bolshevism, because of the dastardly bomb outrages, and the activities generally of the "reds." Of this state of mind the Poindexter resolution affords some evidence. There is no extension in that condition. It is only in such times that the guaranties of the Constitution as to personal rights are of any practical value. In seasons of calm no one thinks of denying them; they are accorded as a matter of course. It is rare except when the public mind is stirred by some overwhelming catastrophe or is agitated at some hideous crime, or otherwise overwrought, that one is required to appeal to his constitutional rights. If, in such times, the Constitution is not a shield, the encomiums which statesmen and jurists have paid it are fustian.

CREDIT EXTENSION FOR EXPORT OF GRAIN PRODUCTS.

Mr. NORBECK. I ask that an editorial which recently appeared in the Nation be printed in the Record in 8-point type. It relates to credit extension for the export of grain products.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the Record in 8-point type, as follows:

[From the Nation of January 24, 1923.]

SENATOR NORRIS'S "SOCIALISM."

Of all the measures which have been put forward to help the poor farmer—who grows noticeably more militant in his poverty as the days go by—none has been so completely frowned upon by the pillars of normalcy as the Norris bill. The recent extended debate on this measure afforded us the gratifying spectacle of advocates of Government subsidies for ships, railroads, and banks denouncing Mr. Norris's proposals as the most "socialistic" agricultural program ever presented.

In the eyes of the administration spokesmen who are also engaged in formulating a prescription for the ills of the farmer (through the appropriate agency of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency) the Norris bill was radically wrong. To these men the ideal remedy for the farmer is a remedy which halts the union now being cemented between the workers on the land and the workers in the city, a remedy appeasing the former while it does nothing to encourage the latter. The Norris bill, on the contrary, was specifically designed to "increase the price which the producer receives and decrease the price which the consumer pays." The essence of it was the proposal that the Government itself step in between the producer and consumer, eliminating some of the costly processes which eat up the farmer's profits and the worker's wages and stabilizing the great agricultural industry by stabilizing the marketing of its products. The Government was not to have a monopoly of the distribution of food, but through its competition was to force efficiency and economy. The bill would have created the farmers and consumers financial corporation, to be managed by a board of three directors appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. Capital stock, amounting to $100,000,000, was to be subscribed by the Government. The corporation would have been empowered:

"To build, buy, lease, and operate elevators and storage warehouses; to buy agricultural products from any person or cooperative organization of producers within the United States and to sell such products to any person or cooperative organization of consumers within the United States, and to any person or cooperative organization of consumers, or to any government or subdivision of government without the United States; to act as agent of any person or cooperative organization producing or dealing in agricultural products within the United States in the sale of such products either within or without the United States; and to make advances for the purpose of assisting any person or cooperative organization in financing the sale, or exportation and sale, of such agricultural products, but in no case shall any of the money so advanced be expended without the United States. Every such advance, and any sale of such products made on time, shall be secured by adequate security of such character as shall be prescribed by the board of directors."

The measure had another provision of special interest in view of the pending ship subsidy bill. This provision was thus explained by Senator NORRIS:

"It provides—and this has some relation to the ship subsidy bill that we are seeking to displace—that to this corporation shall be turned over by the Government any ship or ships that it owns, not chartered to any other corporation or not in use, with the provision that this corporation can use such ships as may be necessary in transporting the products it handles from this country to foreign ports, without any compensation for the use of those ships, except to keep them in repair and pay the expense of operation, and that in case of war, or when the President at any time believes there is danger of war, he shall notify the corporation, and the ships shall be immediately turned back, without the payment of any money. This will enable the Government to recuperate its merchant marine without any expense whatever."

Well, for the present the Norris bill is dead. The ship subsidy measure has been displaced by the Capper farm credits bill, which would extend the life of the War Finance Corporation and provide for the incorporation of various credit concerns, with power to buy and distribute farm products. But no appropriation for the accomplishment of these ends is included in the bill. Senator LENOX's measure, also awaiting consideration, would authorize the Treasury to advance $5,000,000 each to the 12 Federal land banks. Both of these proposals aim at easier credit facilities for the farmer; neither goes to the root of the problem of distribution and fair prices. More credit for the farmer is all very well, but eventually mortgages or notes fall due, and as things stand the farmer has no cash with which to meet them, because it has cost him more to produce his wheat, his corn, and his potatoes than he has realized by their sale. Both farmer and labor groups in Congress supported the Norris bill. The Farmers' National Council aided in its drafting and backed it vigorously. The Cleveland conference of progressives indorsed its passage. And then when the vote came the progressives found themselves alone. Republicans and Democrats discovered their fundamental intimacy and voted to substitute for the ship subsidy bill the safe but ingratiating phrases of Senator CAPPER's measure. By this move the whole question of agricultural legislation is given over to the scant mercies of the Banking and Currency Committee.

Senator NORRIS had good authority for his "socialistic" bill, even though it antedated the Constitution:

"They shall build houses and inhabit them; they shall plant vineyards and eat the fruit of them. They shall not build and another inhabit. They shall not plant and another eat."

But it takes party support rather than authorities or precedents to pass bills, and the vote against Senator NORRIS's measure was 53 to 19. We hope that this easy fusion against the first radical proposal of the progressive bloc need not be taken as an omen; but, perhaps, after all the chief function of the progressives may be not to pass legislation nor even to block legislation, but to show the country and the old parties that valid political differences have little relation to party names.

VISÉ RESTRICTIONS AND FEES (H. DOC. NO. 547).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State recommending that Congress confer upon the President authority to modify visé fees and requirements applicable to aliens temporarily visiting the United States. Such action is recommended to enable the Secretary of State to enter upon negotiations with foreign governments with a view to obtaining reciprocal modification of existing visé restrictions and fees. The recommendations of the Secretary of State have my full concurrence.

WARREN G. HARDING.

[Inclosure: From Secretary of State, as above.]

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 5, 1923.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 13835. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to appraise tribal property of Indians, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REMOVALS IN BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I submit a resolution which I send to the desk, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the resolution be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 432), as follows:

Whereas pursuant to an Executive order of the President of the United States, issued March 31, 1922, and immediately effective, the director and 27 other officials of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing were summarily removed from their positions and stricken from the rolls of the civil service; and

Whereas it would appear from subsequent investigation that this removal was without just cause; and

Whereas said removal reflects upon the honor and integrity of the officials so discharged; and

Whereas those who were given the places from which said employees were removed have been publicly charged as being instrumental in having issued said Executive order; and

Whereas it would be for the best interest of the service that the whole matter should be made public; and

Whereas it would be helpful to know the character, reputation, and fitness of those removed and those appointed to succeed them: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Civil Service be, and is hereby, directed to inquire into the cause or causes of the removal of said employees; the right of the President to have made the order; the character, reputation, and fitness of the men and women so removed; the power of the President to name their successors; the character, reputation, and fitness of the men and women so designated as their successors, and all other facts and circumstances with reference to the matter, and to report to the Senate its findings and such recommendations as it may see fit before the 1st day of March, 1923.

The committee is hereby empowered to send for books and papers; to require the attendance of witnesses; to administer oaths, and do all things necessary to carry out the purpose of this resolution.

That the discharged employees, if they shall desire, may be represented by counsel of their own choosing and by them to be paid. The same privilege, under the same condition, is extended to the director of the bureau and those with him appointed to the places vacated by the said Executive order.

All expenses not otherwise herein provided for shall be paid out of the contingent expenses of the Senate, such expenses to include a stenographer to be paid not exceeding $1.25 per printed page of said testimony.

Mr. STERLING rose.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I will yield to the Senator from South Dakota, the chairman of the Committee on Civil Service, if he desires to make a suggestion. However, if he will wait a moment, I was going to suggest that the resolution submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] would have, first, to be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Has the resolution for which the Senator from Arkansas desires consideration been referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not been.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I make the point of order that the resolution must be referred to that committee. It can not be called up for consideration in the Senate unless it has been so referred.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator from Mississippi will yield to me for a moment, I wish to say that I am merely asking unanimous consent that the resolution may be considered. Of course, if the Senator wishes to make his point of order he may do so, but I hope he will not make it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is a rule of the Senate and of the House of Representatives requiring that all measures which necessitate the payment of money out of the contingent fund shall be referred to the Committee on Accounts in the House of Representatives and to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate in the Senate.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am aware of that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There can be no unanimous consent even given for the consideration of such measures unless they have taken that course. The reason of the rule, Mr. President, is perfectly plain, if Senators will stop to think a moment. It is that neither House should be allowed by itself to make appropriations ultimately out of the Treasury, for the appropriations out of the contingent funds do ultimately come out of the Treasury. I beg the Senator from Arkansas to believe that I do not even know what his resolution is nor what it is aimed at, but I do know that, as I caught the reading of the resolution, it provides that money shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. The requirement as to the reference of such resolutions to the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate is not a rule, but it is a law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We have found frequently during the last 25 or 30 years that measures calling for appropriations have been passed in each House by unanimous consent which were not acts of Congress, but were merely the act of one House of Congress, although having the effect of law. So the law requires that all measures making appropriations out of the contingent fund shall go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate and to the Committee on Accounts of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, of course I shall not attempt to argue with the Senator from Mississippi. I realize there is such a statute, but I know it is violated frequently. I shall ask, then, that the resolution be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and I hope the committee will report it promptly to the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to reiterate, merely for the record, that the requirement for the reference of such resolutions to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate is not a rule of the Senate, but it is imposed by an act of Congress.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am conscious that it is an act of Congress; everybody knows that.

Mr. SMOOT. No; everybody does not know it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Arkansas will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. CARAWAY subsequently said:

Mr. President, I desire to take just a moment with reference to the resolution which I submitted a few moments ago and which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The importance of securing some action upon that resolution immediately arises from the fact that the Executive order removing the employees referred to in the resolution from the civil service was issued on the 31st day of last March. Their rights as civil-service employees will be gone if there is not something done with this matter before the year shall have expired. They have waited patiently for a statement to be issued by the President giving his reasons for their summary removal. The facts have been developed by investigation conducted both by the Treasury Department and by the Attorney General's Department, and the reports have been with the President now for two months. They show that there was no wrongdoing on the part of these people, and therefore that they have lived for a year under a suspicion and under a cloud that never ought to have been cast upon their fair names. One of them is dead. Another is thought to be stricken with a fatal illness. All of them are entitled that the world should know what the facts were. I sincerely hope, therefore, that no one will stand in the way of a full and free and thorough investigation.

The investigation goes further than ordinarily would be requested because of the fact that by the wording of the Executive order and the extraordinary nature of the order the country was led to believe that these officials had been guilty of some wrongdoing.

Therefore I say they have labored under a cloud of suspicion for a year; they are entitled to a thorough public examination of the causes of their removal, of their characters and reputations and fitness for the employment in which they were engaged; and since that is true and since it has been said over and over again that they were removed for political reasons and that those who succeeded them were the instigators of the order, the character and reputation and fitness of the people who succeeded them should also be gone into, and the public made to know just what the facts were.

I have been perfectly willing myself, though the resolution has been drawn for weeks, to defer its introduction until those people who were friendly with the administration—I refer to Republican Senators with whom I have counseled—should feel that the President had been given all the time necessary in order to make restitution to these discharged employees. The time has arrived, in their judgment, when some action ought to be had. The resolution is full. It gives every side of the controversy a chance to be heard. It gives the discharged employees, if they should wish it, the opportunity to be represented by counsel and provides that they shall pay for the counsel; it gives those who took their places an opportunity to be represented by counsel, if they shall see fit to employ one, to be paid by them as the others are to pay their counsel. There can be no political bias to it, because each side shall be represented; everyone whose interest has been jeopardized shall have his chance to be heard, and nobody, I take it, can object to its consideration.

I hope, therefore, that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate will see fit to report back the resolution at once, and have the examination before the year shall have expired and these employees shall have lost all their rights.

MOBILE RIVER BRIDGE, ALA.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, on Friday last I introduced the bill (S. 4469) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge or bridges and trestles over the navigable channels of the mouth of the Mobile River, in the State of Alabama. I asked that the bill go over until to-day. It is on the Vice President's table, and I now ask unanimous consent for immediate consideration.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, it would have to be referred to a committee.

Mr. HEFLIN. No; it would not.

Mr. CURTIS. Under the rules it must go to a committee.

Mr. HEFLIN. Not if unanimous consent is granted for the consideration. Mr. President, the time will be out on the 14th of the present month for the company to commence the work.

Mr. CURTIS. Let me remind the Senator that the Committee on Commerce reports such bills out almost immediately. I ask that the bill may be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HEFLIN. Of course, if the Senator objects it will have to take that course.

Mr. CURTIS. It is not a question of objecting; under the rule it must go to the committee.

Mr. HEFLIN. Unanimous consent sets aside the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, has morning business been concluded?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no further morning business, morning business is concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar may begin at Order of Business No. 975, where we left off when the calendar was last called, and that the Senate consider bills that are not objected to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I ask the Senator to consent that the call of the calendar begin with Order of Business 969, which is just ahead of the number indicated by him. Order of Business No. 969 was passed over at the request of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to beginning the consideration of the calendar at Order of Business No. 969?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Kansas. In the last call of the calendar was the suggestion included that no bills should be considered except by unanimous consent?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not remember; I was not in the Chamber when the request was made at that time.

Mr. NORRIS. The only objection I have to the Senator's request is that it embraces only unobjected bills.

Mr. CURTIS. I made the request in that form for the reason, if the Senator will permit me, that on the last occasion when the calendar was considered and there was no stipulation as to unobjected bills being considered, practically all the morning hour was devoted to the consideration of one bill, and others to which there was no objection were not reached. There are on the calendar a number of bills to which there is no objection, and I think it would be well to dispose of them, because it might be possible to have them passed by the House if the Senate should consider and act upon them now.

Mr. NORRIS. I appreciate the Senator's point, but at the same time, if we always do that when the calendar is called and only bills which are unobjected to are considered, it means that one Senator may prevent the passage of any bill.

Mr. CURTIS. That is true.

Mr. NORRIS. I am willing that we should proceed in the manner suggested by the Senator on the call of the calendar to-day and consider only unobjected bills, but I should like to have it understood that when we take up the calendar again the request for the consideration of only unobjected bills will not be made, but that the bills on the calendar will be considered under the rule.

Mr. CURTIS. That course will be satisfactory to me, so far as I am concerned.

FAMILY OF LIEUT. HENRY N. FALLON (RETIRED).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar under the unanimous-consent agreement.

The bill (S. 3553) for the relief of the family of Lieut. Henry N. Fallon (retired), was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$2,078.93," and insert "$1,500," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to the family of Lieut. Henry N. Fallon, United States Navy (retired), out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,500 in full satisfaction of all claims for expenses incurred by them or under their direction in the locating and caring for Lieut. Henry N. Fallon, after his escape from St. Elizabeths Hospital, District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM J. EWING.

The bill (S. 3226) for the relief of William J. Ewing, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$2,000," and insert "$1,560," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William J. Ewing, or his legal representatives, the sum of $1,560, as full compensation for permanent injuries received by the said Ewing on the 18th day of December, 1901, at San Francisco, Calif., while in the performance of his duties as an employee of the United States Life-Saving Service.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] to state briefly the reasons for the passage of this bill. I have not had time to read the report in full, but the Senator may know just exactly what the reasons are.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the reasons are set forth in detail by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon; also in affidavits by those who were acquainted with the claimant.

Briefly, Mr. Ewing was in the service of the Government, working in the capacity of one connected with the life-saving station in San Francisco. While in the course of a drill, Mr. Ewing's shoulder was dislocated and many of the muscles were torn from the bones. He received treatment and finally was compelled to resign, and now is permanently injured, being unable to earn his living. The Secretary of the Treasury—and I think that is significant in itself—after making a careful and thorough examination of all the facts, has reported favorably, unconditionally so. The committee—and, by the way, that is the only grievance I have—have reduced the amount from $2,000 to $1,560, which I think is very small compensation for the injury sustained, permanent in its character as it is, while in the performance of his duty. I can not conceive of any objection that could be had to this claim, in view of the condition in which we find Mr. Ewing to be.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I read the report, this accident occurred many years ago, over 20 years ago. It seems to me the Government is put at a great disadvantage when claims for payment are presented 20 years after the alleged injury. I shall object to the consideration of the bill until we have further information in regard to it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what is the technical objection of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KING. I object to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ROBERT J. KIRK.

The bill (S. 3849) for the relief of Robert J. Kirk was announced as next in order and was read.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not desire to object to the consideration of this bill, but I think the Senate ought to defeat its passage.

The statutes forbade, and still forbid, persons from holding the offices of referee in bankruptcy and United States commissioner at the same time. The policy of the law preventing one person from holding those two offices seems to me to be a good one. In any event, it is the statute which Congress enacted in 1896, and which is still in effect.

This is an appropriation to award the beneficiary, Mr. Kirk, a comparatively small sum of money for services rendered as United States commissioner while at the same time he was, in fact, a referee in bankruptcy in the same district. The justification for the bill in the committee report is that the beneficiary was ignorant of the law which forbade him to hold the two offices, and that he resigned when he discovered that he could not legally perform the functions of the two offices.

In my judgment, Mr. President, that is no justification at all. Aside from the well-established maxim of the law that every one is presumed to know the law, which we all admit is a legal fiction in many instances, it is important that one who assumes to exercise the functions of an office should know that he is eligible to perform those duties. The statute denied Mr. Kirk the right to become United States commissioner while at the same time performing the functions of a referee in bankruptcy, and I believe the bill ought to be defeated. I do not care to consume any great length of time in discussing it. If the policy of the law which forbids persons from serving as United States commissioners and referees in bankruptcy at the same time is wrong, we ought to repeal the law. We passed the law, however, believing it wholesome and in the public interest, and it is a wholesome and a beneficial statute; and instead of enforcing it we now propose to relax it in the case of an individual who was so ignorant that he did not know that under the law he did not have a right to occupy these two offices at once.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the author of this bill, is unavoidably absent to-day. He is very much interested in the measure; and I ask the Senator from Arkansas if he will not extend the Senator from South Carolina the courtesy of permitting the bill to go over until his return?

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Kansas can ask that the bill go over; any Senator can do that; and I shall be glad to make the request myself, in view of the statement of the Senator from Kansas. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CHARLES D. SHAY.

The bill (S. 2002) for the relief of Charles D. Shay, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Employees' Compensation Commission shall be, and it is hereby, authorized to extend to Charles D. Shay, who received injuries April 7, 1910, without fault or negligence on his part, while in the performance of his duties as locomotive engineer on the Panama Railroad, the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, compensation hereunder to commence from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator if this matter has not already been referred to the Employees' Compensation Commission. I judge, from a letter here from A. L. Flint, chief of office of the Panama Canal, that it has been. In his letter dated May 11, 1920, addressed to Hon. SELDEN P. SPENCER, chairman of the Committee on Claims, he says:

Sir: I am in receipt of your letter of the 8th instant, requesting a report in connection with the bill (S. 2599) for the relief of Charles D. Shay.

In reply I inclose herewith a copy of a letter addressed to this office by the auditor of the Panama Canal, dated December 31, 1917, in reference to Mr. Shay's case, which is self-explanatory.

In view of the reference in the auditor's letter to file 8883 of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor as giving the complete history of Mr. Shay's case, copies of your letter and this acknowledgment are being referred to the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, as it is understood that all files in the Department of Labor with reference to injury compensation cases have been referred to that commission.

So it seems to me that the bill as amended is of little use.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PURCHASE OF SEED GRAIN FOR EASTERN WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 4281) to appropriate $500,000 for the purchase of seed grain to be supplied to farmers in the crop-failure areas of eastern Washington, said amount to be expended under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, for the crop of 1923, to make advances or loans to farmers in eastern Washington, where he shall find that special need for such assistance exists, for the purchase of wheat for seed purposes, and, when necessary, to procure such seed and sell same to such farmers. Such advances, loans, or sales shall be made upon such terms and conditions and subject to such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe, including an agreement by each farmer to use the seed thus obtained by him for the production of grain. A first lien on the crop to be produced from seed obtained through a loan, advance, or sale made under this section shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be deemed sufficient security therefor. All such advances or loans shall be made through such agencies as the Secretary of Agriculture shall designate. For carrying out the purposes of this section there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000, to be immediately available, and not more than $10,000 may be used in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, by the Secretary of Agriculture in the administration of this act.

SEC. 2. That any person who shall knowingly make any false representation for the purpose of obtaining an advance, loan, or sale under this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if I am not mistaken, this bill was incorporated in an appropriation bill, and the House, objecting to it, it went out.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this amendment was offered by the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] to the agricultural appropriation bill. It went out in conference. This bill itself was introduced by the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], and while it proposes to do the same thing, yet it is a separate measure. Inasmuch as the Senator from Washington is here, he can explain it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the measure seems to be of an emergent nature; at least, it is framed upon the theory that an emergency exists. I think the Senate ought to consider the bill, but I would like to have an explanation of the circumstances and conditions which make necessary the passage of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what I rose to state was that the House absolutely refused to agree to a provision of the same character as the proposed bill, when attached as an amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill, the Senate having agreed to it, and it would seem almost a waste of time to pass this bill now, as it is a Senate bill, and send it to the House with the expectation of having it pass the House during the few remaining days of the present session.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I point out to the Senator from Utah that under the legislative practice now, an authorization should be made for the appropriation before the appropriation is actually embraced in the bill; so that the position taken by the House of Representatives was technically in compliance with the procedure of both branches of Congress at this time. If a separate bill should be passed authorizing the appropriation, the facts justifying the authorization, it must be that the body at the other end of the Capitol would pass the bill as an emergency measure.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, for the sake of accuracy I want to state to the Senator from Utah that the amendment was not defeated in the House. It did not come to a vote. It passed the Senate, however, and went into conference, the House conferees objected to the item, and the Senate conferees receded from the amendment. It did not reach the House, as a matter of fact, for consideration.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator is in error about that. He will remember that we disagreed about the item, and it went to the House and was rejected by the House.

Mr. McNARY. On a vote?

Mr. JONES of Washington. They did not take a yea-and-nay vote, but upon a vote without a division it was defeated.

Mr. McNARY. In that particular I stand corrected.

Mr. JONES of Washington. May I say just a word, as I was called out of the Chamber when the matter came up. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas is a very proper one, and I believe the House would look at this matter in an entirely different light if it were presented in a separate bill rather than as an item in an appropriation bill which they had not considered at all. If this bill passes the Senate it will go to the House, and in the House will be referred to the proper committee, and will be considered; and I am very much in hopes that the Senate will pass it. The situation was explained quite fully when the amendment covering this matter came up during the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill. I do not want to take the time of the Senate this morning, during this unanimous-consent consideration of the calendar, to speak at length upon the bill.

I just want to say that in about five of the counties in eastern Washington there has been an absolute wheat failure during the last five or six years. The farmers there got only a little over $1,300 or $1,700 out of the loans we have made for that purpose heretofore, not because they did not need it but because the local banks took care of the situation as well as they possibly could. They have reached their limit now, however; they can not take care of the situation any further, and there are about 400,000 acres of land which have already been prepared for this year's seeding; that is, they expected to put in the wheat in the fall, and they could not get the seed, and they could not do it; but it is summer fallowed and ready to plant. The estimate is that there would be a production of about 4,000,000 additional bushels of wheat if these people could get the seed. They are in dire distress. There is probably greater need for it in this locality than in almost any locality that suffered when we made those loans heretofore, and the language of this bill is exactly the language of the preceding appropriation for this purpose. Of course, this applies to only one State; it applies to eastern Washington alone. That is the section of the country that is affected; and I would like to have the Senate act as it did when the matter was presented as an amendment to the appropriation bill. It seemed to be convinced of the necessity for it then; and I hope the Senate will pass this bill as a separate measure, and I hope that the full committee, where the matter will probably be heard, will act favorably on it and that there will be favorable action also in the House.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROAD CONGRESSES.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 263) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to accept membership for the United States in the Permanent Association of the International Road Congresses, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there does not appear to be a printed or other report from the committee accompanying the joint resolution. I would like to ask the Senator who introduced the resolution, or the Senator reporting the same, what will be the approximate expense incurred by the passage of the joint resolution?

Mr. TOWNSEND. There is no report, as the Senator suggests, but there was filed with the committee a message from the President of the United States on December 14 last in response to a letter from the Secretary of State, that prompted by a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture setting forth a reason for membership as provided in the joint resolution. I wrote to the department for information in reference to the cost. It is set forth in Document No. 275, which I hold in my hand, and which I filed with my joint resolution, and a copy of which I had hoped to have laid before each Senator. In substance, this conference, or congress, was instituted, as I remember, in 1908, being held at Paris. Later, in 1910, it was held at Brussels, and somewhere else two years later. Then the war came on and the activities of the congress were discontinued. This year there is a meeting to be held at Seville, Spain, and our Government has received an invitation to attend. The Secretary of Agriculture brings the matter to the Secretary of State with the statement that under the law he is not permitted to accept membership in such an organization or to invite such organization to the United States.

It is provided in the joint resolution that we shall take the maximum membership, which is 15. The subsidy, as they call it, or the charge, is 1,000 francs for each member, which would mean 15,000 francs, which, with the franc at 20 cents, would be about $3,000; but, of course, that is not the value of the franc now.

Mr. WARREN. An annual assessment?

Mr. TOWNSEND. An annual assessment.

Mr. WARREN. Of $3,000?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It would be that if the franc were worth 20 cents, but as it is now worth about 7 cents, it would be about $900.

Mr. ROBINSON. Out of what fund would the expenses of our members be paid?

Mr. TOWNSEND. They would be paid out of the fund which now goes to the road division of the Department of Agriculture for administration purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON. What would be the amount of that, approximately?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have forgotten. I think the law provides that not to exceed 3 per cent of the appropriation for the road department is to be devoted to administration purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask the Senator from Michigan, who I am sure has studied the question, what functions are performed by the international road congress? May I say, in connection with the question, that I can understand very well that the United States would have a direct interest in an international road congress which related to Canada and Mexico, perhaps, but it is very difficult for me to comprehend what benefit can accrue to the United States Government by representation in an international road congress assembled in Seville, Spain, or anywhere else on another continent. I would like to be informed by the Senator from Michigan why it is that the State Department and the Department of Agriculture have found it wise and essential that this Government have representation, and the maximum representation, too, at a road congress to be held in the city of Seville, Spain.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That congress is composed of representatives from practically every country in Europe, and from a large majority of the countries in South America. The general objects of the congress are set forth in the following statement:

1. By organizing road congresses.
2. By publishing papers, proceedings, and other documents.

3. By collecting the results of (a) tests carried out on roads; (b) laboratory tests throughout the world on materials which are used or are suitable for road construction and maintenance. These tests may be either in the form of mere records collected by the association or they may have been carried out by the association itself or through its instrumentality.

Its affairs are managed by a permanent international commission.

The Senator says he wants to know why we would be interested in a road congress attended by representatives from other countries, aside from Canada and Mexico. The Senator is well aware, I am sure, of the fact that road construction is one of the great subjects now under consideration throughout the world. The United States itself is expending millions of dollars upon roads. We are trying, through the department and otherwise, to prosecute investigations as to the character of roads, the character of road materials, and the methods which should be employed in construction.

Some of the nations of the Old World have built the best roads that have ever been constructed. It stands to reason that we could learn something and we could contribute something at the same time. The former Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Meredith, urged upon Congress very strongly that this Nation take out membership in the association. The present Secretary of Agriculture sets forth in a complete document the reasons why we should be members and should participate in the congresses which are to be held, as we hope now, annually. There has not been one held since about 1912 or 1914 on account of the war, as I remember, but one is to be held this year in Seville.

Mr. ROBINSON. With the indulgence of the Senator from Michigan, the results of scientific experimentation, whether conducted by the delegates who assemble in an international road congress or the representatives of the governmental departments which ordinarily make such investigations, can be obtained without sending an expensive delegation to attend an international congress. If the Secretary of Agriculture wanted to find out, for instance, what the Government of Spain has accomplished in the way of discovering new or better road materials, he would ordinarily not send a junket representative of the Department of Agriculture to attend a general public conference but would send an expert, and that expert would be able to procure all the information which would be available for delegates to an international congress, and much more, in all probability. Here is a proposal to incur the expenses necessary for the sending of 15 delegates.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Oh, no; the Senator is entirely mistaken about that. It is not intended that there should be more than one or two delegates sent, but we would have our membership represented by the highest number, which is 15. There never would be more than one delegate. By the way, the Secretary of Agriculture, through the Department of State, has sent unofficial representatives to various of the congresses. They were not entitled to vote. We could not invite the congress to the United States under the law without having membership in the congress. It was thought desirable by the department that we should not only have official representatives at the congress but that we should also be in a position to invite the congress to meet in the United States on a subject, I repeat, which is second in importance to none other coming before the Congress of the country.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will pardon me, the joint resolution provides expressly that the United States shall be represented in the congress by the maximum number of delegates allowable. It seems that the policy of the joint resolution is not only to authorize but to require that the Government be represented by 15 delegates. Of course, if representation is necessary or desirable at all, it might be wise that the Government should have a full delegation at the congress, but I want to say to the Senator from Michigan in all seriousness that I very much doubt whether benefits to this Government would accrue corresponding to the expense that would be incurred under the joint resolution.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If I were not satisfied that the men who have given the closest thought and attention to the subject, and who have devoted a great deal of study to it, were right about the proposition which the department has recommended, and that the expense of it would be paid out of appropriations which they already have, thus involving no additional expense to the Government, I should not have urged the joint resolution.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think we are working under Rule VIII, and it seems to me Senators are exceeding the time limit in their discussions. There are other bills of importance on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The limit of discussion is five minutes under the rule.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. I shall not object to the present consideration of the joint resolution, but I shall vote against it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the proposition, it seems to me, is of considerable importance. It is true, as has been suggested, that it might be made a junket under the terms of the joint resolution. If it is carried out, however, in good faith and with the intentions of those who are behind it, none would go as delegates except experts. If they handle the matter right, it can be made very useful, it seems to me.

I appreciate the point that is made by the Senator from Arkansas. It is possible to send 15 delegates. We could easily remedy that by amending the joint resolution. It seems to me 15 are entirely too many, and that we should limit it to 3 or some such number. It might be well to have some provision in the joint resolution about the kind of people who should be delegates, but I think the committee have gone on the theory that it would be carried out in good faith, and I have no doubt that it would be so carried out. If it is, and the right kind of men are selected as delegates, we shall get great benefit from it.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask the Senator from Michigan by whom the delegates are to be selected under the joint resolution?

Mr. TOWNSEND. They would be selected by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. ROBINSON. The joint resolution does not so provide.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is the intention, however. That has been done. As I said, they have been doing it for some time without any official recognition. They want official recognition and want a vote in the congress. They want to have the right to invite the congress to the United States once in a while.

Mr. ROBINSON. There is nothing in the joint resolution to prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from making the selection, nor is there anything in the joint resolution which authorizes or requires him to do it.

Mr. NORRIS. I would suggest to the Senator from Michigan that he amend the joint resolution so as to limit the number of delegates to three, which I think would be ample.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The only object in having 15 the maximum representation is as set forth in the statement of the Secretary of Agriculture, that it gives us the highest standing with other countries of similar importance before the congress. I asked him particularly how many delegates would be sent. He said probably never more than one expert from the department, but he would have authority to vote there for the 15 memberships for which we pay the subsidy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to accept membership in the Permanent Association of International Road Congresses and that the United States be represented in that congress by the maximum number of delegates allowable, and that the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to expend annually, out of the administrative fund provided by section 21 of the Federal highway act of 1921, the sums necessary to cover the membership fees and such other expenses as may be necessary in maintaining membership in said association.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMOS Y. STARBUCK.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I notice upon the calendar that bills providing for the restoration of injured employees under the retirement act, so they may get the benefit of it, have been referred to the Committee on Claims. The other day I introduced such a bill (S. 4460), following the usual form. I asked that it be referred to the Committee on Claims, but I found on getting a copy of the bill that it had been referred to the Committee on Civil Service. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Civil Service whether such a bill has been referred to his committee?

Mr. STERLING. I hardly know to what bill the Senator refers.

Mr. NORRIS. We have just passed several on the calendar.

Mr. STERLING. Bills for relief?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. Do they relate to the civil service?

Mr. NORRIS. For instance, Order of Business No. 977, the bill (S. 2002) for the relief of Charles D. Shay. I notice that bill is word for word, with the exception of one added clause with reference to the date when restoration shall be effective, with the measure which I introduced the other day. The bill was reported and is on the calendar as reported by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. New] from the Committee on Claims. I had no choice with reference to the bill I introduced. I would just as lief the bill should be referred to the Committee on Civil Service, but I realize that there may be some difficulty before action is taken on the measure and I would like to have it follow the other bills, to whichever committee is the proper one.

Mr. STERLING. My attention has not been called to either of the bills and I do not know whether they are of such a nature that they ought to be referred to the Committee on Civil Service or not.

Mr. NORRIS. I will read the bill which I introduced:

That the Commissioner of Pensions shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to extend to Amos Y. Starbuck, a former employee of the Railway Mail Service, the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees of the classified civil service, and for other purposes."

If the Senator will read the other bill to which I have called attention, reported by the Committee on Claims, he will see that it is a copy of the bill I have just read. I am willing that my bill shall go to either committee. I have no choice; but it seems to me it ought to go to the Committee on Claims. I asked that it be referred to that committee, but the Chair referred it, I notice, to the Committee on Civil Service. While the chairmen of both committees are both present, I would like to have the matter straightened out. If such bills as that are to be referred to the Committee on Claims, I want to ask that the bill I have introduced shall be so referred.

Mr. STERLING. I am not anxious that any particular bill shall be referred to the Committee on Civil Service or that the Committee on Civil Service shall have the work of examining and considering the bill, but on the face of it it would seem to me it is a bill quite appropriate for reference to the Committee on Civil Service, because it has to do with the civil-service retirement law and the rights of parties under it.

Mr. NORRIS. I am quite willing it should stay there, only I wanted to have the Senate know that I have called attention to it and I do not want objection to be raised afterwards that it should have gone to the Committee on Claims, which is reporting some bills just exactly like it.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Nebraska is correct. A great many bills of that nature have been referred to the Committee on Claims and have been considered by that committee. Usually, I think, they have been referred to that committee at the request of the author of the bill. I think that has more to do with it than anything else, so far as the reference to the Committee on Claims is concerned.

Mr. NORRIS. Out of deference to the chairman of the Committee on Civil Service, I shall make no request. I will let the measure remain with his committee.

EDITH B. MACON.

The bill (S. 1678) for the relief of Edith B. Macon was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should be glad to have the bill read.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Edith B. Macon, the daughter of and sole heir of the estate of Davis W. and Elizabeth L. W. Bailey, deceased, the sum of $3,127.85, one half of said sum to be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half out of the Treasury of the United States, in settlement of the claim of said Davis W. Bailey against the District of Columbia under his contract for laying asphalt pavement in said District: Provided, That the sum aforesaid, when paid, shall be accepted as a full and final settlement both of principal and interest of the award made July 18, 1892, for the sum of $10,519.20, and duly filed in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in favor of the said Elizabeth L. W. Bailey as administratrix of said estate of said Davis W. Bailey.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the bill is very unusual in form and substance. It appears on the face of the bill that in the year 1892 some tribunal made an award, finding these parties were entitled to $10,519.20. After a lapse of a little more than 30 years a bill is brought into the Senate appropriating the sum of $3,127.85, with the proviso attached that the parties must accept that sum in full accord and satisfaction of an award for three times that amount, made more than 30 years ago.

I wish to ask the author of the bill or the Senator reporting it for an explanation of the matter, and particularly why, if an award has been made in the sum of more than $10,000, the parties who are the beneficiaries under that award should be required to receive one-third of the amount after the lapse of 30 years in full satisfaction of the award? By whom was the award made and under what circumstances?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, if the Senator from Arkansas would read the report accompanying the bill he would find two communications, in one of which—

Mr. ROBINSON. But I have not the time to read the report.

Mr. MOSES. He would find that is the sum agreed upon by the corporation counsel for the District of Columbia as being the proper sum to be paid. He would then find another letter which recommends that a reduced sum be paid, upon the ground that the profits which accrued from a contract then were larger than the profits which would accrue from a contract now made under circumstances more highly competitive than they were forty-odd years ago.

I introduced the bill, Mr. President, and I wish to say to the Senator from Arkansas that possibly one reason for accepting a greatly reduced sum from the award originally made by the courts thirty-odd years ago is that practically everybody connected with the case, both claimants and counsel, have died. The counsel in this case died within a few months, and there is nobody left but the daughter of the original claimant who received the original award. The report was prepared by the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD], and, after a careful examination of all the papers and communication with the District authorities, recommended to the full Committee on the District of Columbia that the bill should be reported favorably without amendment.

It is, to be sure, as the Senator indicates, an old claim, but the Senator knows perfectly well the heart-breaking experience of people who have done legitimate work for the Government and who have been years here in trying to get their pay for it. This is simply one of numerous similar cases. I think this bill has particular merit, inasmuch as it has been passed upon by the court and by the District authorities. I assume that the Senator has reference rather, when he speaks of the peculiar form of the bill, to the provision that half of the sum to be paid shall be paid out of the District treasury and half out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I have reference to the provision of the bill which specifies that a court judgment of $10,000 and more which was entered more than 30 years ago shall be satisfied by a legislative enactment through the payment of a little more than $3,000.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President—

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will wait for just a moment, I desire to say that his statement that the profits allowable under transactions of the nature involved in this bill were greater 30 years ago than they now are, and for that reason the requirements that the beneficiary shall receive one-third of the amount found to be due 30 years ago is justified, seems most extraordinary.

Mr. MOSES. No; I did not say that.

Mr. ROBINSON. The court—

Mr. MOSES. If the Senator will permit me right there, I desire to say that I do not advance that as an argument which I propose; that is stated in one of the documents which are embraced in the report.

Mr. ROBINSON. With no intention to reflect upon any individual, I desire to say that any governmental or legislative process which would assume to settle a court judgment rendered more than 30 years ago for one-third of the face of the judgment approximates dishonesty.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator will pardon an interruption, I desire to say that the report discloses that the judgment referred to was reversed in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. MOSES. It does.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That decision was rendered upon the ground that the judgment was entered upon an award made by arbitrators, and that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia had no authority under the law to submit the claim to arbitration and award. So it goes back to the original cause of action, which arose earlier than 1879.

Here are some dates which are given in the report:

The contract was made July 30, 1879.

Suspended February 12, 1880.

Original suit for damages brought February 24, 1883.

The arbitrator made his award on July 18, 1892.

Suit was filed upon this award August 8, 1893.

Was confirmed by court of appeals November 3, 1896.

The award was reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States May 31, 1898, upon the ground that the commissioners had no power or authority under the law to submit the claim to arbitration. So we go clear back to a claim that originated in 1879, and that failed away back in 1898, because the judgment had been reversed.

Mr. MOSES. That does not change the essential fact that the work was performed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly it does. By all of the rules of reason the statute of limitations long ago ran against the claim. As the Senator has stated, everybody who knew anything about the matter is dead—dead long ago—so that every reason that is at the foundation of the statute of limitations may be urged against this claim.

Mr. MOSES. The only reason why it is brought here is because no action can be taken anywhere else.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. MOSES. Yes.

Mr. KING. I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that the present commissioners state that there was a counterclaim against the contractor for defective work, and that in any event the board only recommended $1,220.86.

Mr. MOSES. Yes; that is on the basis of their statement that, under present competitive conditions, the profits accruing from this work would not have been as much as they were. The Senator will find in earlier documents filed by the commissioners that the deduction of the countercharge had already been made from the sum of four thousand and odd dollars. I am stating the case only as I know it from the record.

Mr. KING. I reserve the right to object. I think we ought to have a little fuller explanation. Furthermore, I suggest to the Senator that in any event the Commissioners of the District of Columbia have no authority, as I am advised, to pay any amount which is properly payable out of the Treasury of the United States. I suggest to the Senator that he let the bill go over until the next calendar day.

Mr. MOSES. I have no recourse, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. I want the Senator to be entirely satisfied.

Mr. MOSES. I have to be.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

SOPHIE K. STEPHENS.

The bill (S. 1528) for the relief of Sophie K. Stephens was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I reserve the right to object to the bill after it shall have been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). The bill will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "$7,500" and in lieu thereof to insert "$512.75," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Sophie K. Stephens, of 2107 Beverly Road, Brooklyn, N. Y., the sum of $512.75, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as compensation for and in full satisfaction of all claims for damages against the United States for injuries sustained on December 4, 1918, by falling over United States mail sacks which had been left on the sidewalk in front of the Kensington post office, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Mr. KING. I should like to have some explanation from the committee with reference to this claim. In the absence of such explanation, I object, and ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

SUPREME LODGE OF THE WORLD, LOYAL ORDER OF MOOSE.

The bill (S. 4275) incorporating the Supreme Lodge of the World, Loyal Order of Moose, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, this bill comes from the Committee on the District of Columbia. It provides for the incorporation of the Loyal Order of Moose, the bill reciting that this organization is to become a corporation in the District of Columbia—not of the District of Columbia, but in the District of Columbia.

Heretofore, I think without exception, all of the very many bills introduced providing for Federal incorporation have gone to the Committee on the Judiciary. That committee has been so overwhelmed with applications for special corporate charters that it has been obliged to establish a rule for the exclusion from the benefit of Federal incorporation of any organization whose purpose is not to carry out some power granted to the Congress by the Constitution. Some relaxation in that rule, or at least some liberality in its application, has been urged in behalf of organizations associated with the conduct of the late war, such as the disabled veterans and the nurses whose services were so valuable in connection with the war. Up to the present time, however, the committee has not felt constrained to relax in any degree whatever its rule in regard to that matter. I shall submit at the earliest possible date an amendment to the rule which will authorize the incorporation of organizations which participated in the late war, including the nurses and the veterans, but I am perfectly certain that the Committee on the Judiciary, which has always handled this subject, will not consent to any further relaxation of the rule.

Now, apparently, organizations which desire incorporation endeavor to avoid that by having their bills referred to some other committee, and we have here a bill providing for the incorporation of the Loyal Order of Moose. If this bill shall pass, there will be nothing for the Committee on the Judiciary to do except to abrogate its rule and allow other similar measures to be considered exactly the same way.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator permit me to say that this particular request for incorporation goes a little bit further than ordinarily is the case? It is not a Federal corporation alone, but the bill proposes to incorporate "the Supreme Lodge of the World." I do not know exactly where American congressional power comes to organize anything as a "supreme lodge of the world" of any description.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is quite true.

I regret very much to be obliged to get in the way of the enactment of this legislation, but I am merely calling attention of the Senate to the door that it is opening, if the Committee on the Judiciary is to be deprived of a power it has always heretofore exercised to pass preliminarily upon these questions, and all these applications for incorporations are going to go to any and every committee that the projector or proposer of the bill may care to submit it to.

Mr. President, I wish to call attention to the fact that the Code of the District of Columbia makes ample provisions for the incorporation of fraternal organizations which desire to be incorporated as corporations of the District of Columbia. The provisions will be found in section 749 et sequitur of the Code of the District of Columbia. Of course, if this organization is to be a corporation of the District of Columbia, there is no need of a special statute, for we have made provision already for the incorporation of corporations under the District of Columbia. This will be a Federal corporation. It will enjoy the privilege, if this bill goes through, of having all of its cases tried in the Federal courts throughout the country, wherever they may arise—a privilege not enjoyed by other fraternal organizations.

In view of that situation, Mr. President, I move that this bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Montana.

The motion was agreed to.

ADMISSION OF REFUGEES FROM NEAR EASTERN COUNTRIES.

The bill (S. 4092) providing for the admission into the United States of certain refugees from near eastern countries was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let that go over.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Oregon will withhold temporarily his objection to this bill.

Mr. McNARY. I withhold it for the present.

Mr. STERLING. The bill is a very important one, and it seems to me under the circumstances that this country can do no less than to admit these Armenian refugees to the number that the Commissioner General of Immigration estimates would come in under the terms of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. What is the number?

Mr. STERLING. The number, according to the estimate of the Commissioner General of Immigration, is perhaps between five and six thousand under the first part of the bill, besides the 25,000 orphaned or homeless children who might be allowed to come in.

Mr. President, the bill is confined to Armenian refugees alone. The Committee on Immigration modified the bill so that it would include people of that race alone, and it provides for the admission only of those who have relatives in this country within certain degrees. It provides, as I said, for the admission of these 25,000 orphaned or homeless children according to the terms of a bill introduced by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], which was incorporated in the bill. They are admitted under such safeguards that no peril or menace can possibly arise to the people of this country. Every one of these immigrant refugees must be guaranteed against becoming a public charge. They are admitted under the closest restrictions as to relatives in this country and as to their being supported by those relatives in case there is need for their support.

With reference to the orphaned or homeless children, they may be taken into American or Armenian homes, their support being guaranteed, or they may be taken by some philanthropic institution or orphanage, their support being guaranteed. That pertains, of course, to orphaned or homeless children under the age of 16 years. No refugees would be admitted as orphans who are over that age, and no others would be admitted unless they come under the other terms of the bill, which, as I have stated, would admit between 5,000 and 6,000 at the utmost.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to a question?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The bill expires June 30, 1924, I believe.

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. No person can be admitted under its provisions after that time?

Mr. STERLING. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator states, I believe, that it is expected that about 5,000 persons will be admitted under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. STERLING. Between five and six thousand, according to the commissioner general. He can not estimate it exactly, but he thinks that is a high estimate.

Mr. ROBINSON. What I desire to know particularly is how the estimate is arrived at—by what process.

Mr. STERLING. It can not be arrived at except by taking into account, of course, the Armenians in this country now and ascertaining as nearly as possible those who may have relatives who fled from Smyrna or that vicinity during the late disaster there.

Mr. ROBINSON. Any person who can qualify under the bill is entitled to admission at any time prior to June 30, 1924?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. So that in the administration of the bill there can be no discrimination? If the number should exceed the estimated number, that will make no difference in the administration of the bill?

Mr. STERLING. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. The persons would be admitted without regard to the number who had theretofore been admitted?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Provided they qualified.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; I say, provided they qualified.

Mr. STERLING. The Commissioner General of Immigration appeared before the committee, and I can not think the number will exceed the number stated by him. According to the best information they have, it can not exceed that number.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from South Dakota a question?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. What is the limitation; how many?

Mr. STERLING. Between five and six thousand, the Commissioner General of Immigration says.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. And 25,000 children?

Mr. STERLING. And 25,000 children, who will be taken care of in the manner provided for in the bill.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NEW. I am not objecting to the subject matter of this bill at all, but I think it is pretty evident that operating as we are for consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII, it will be impossible to dispose of this bill within the 25 minutes remaining. It will be impossible for us to give proper consideration to it. There are half a dozen Senators on their feet now with questions to ask about this bill. While, as I say, I am not objecting to the bill itself, it is perfectly evident that the further consideration of the bill now will effectually block the consideration of anything else that is on the calendar.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to say, in reply to that, that bills have been considered here this morning—private claim bills, I think—that have consumed much more time than we have consumed so far in the consideration of this bill. As to any questions that may be asked, I will say that the bill is brief, and I will endeavor to answer quickly and briefly any questions that may be asked by any Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit an interruption, I should like to make a few remarks. They will not take over three or four minutes. We have spent more time this morning upon the consideration of a claim for $3,000, a claim 30 years old, than we have thus far spent on this bill.

What is this bill for? Here are these Armenians who went to Palestine and fought for the Allies and their associates during the late war, who have been decimated, to say the very least, perhaps more than that. In fact, some of the estimates go so far as to say that one-third of the entire population has been killed and more than a tenth of the women raped; and that the Senate of the United States can not give a few minutes to the consideration of a measure of this kind is a reflection upon American humanity and American patriotism. Even the Soviet Russian Government, I notice, set aside the other day a lot of land in Russian Armenia for Armenian fugitives. The council at Lausanne has just surrendered to the Turks the demand for a homeland for the Christian Armenian people in Asia. The Turks positively refused it; and there was not enough spirit in France, Italy, and Great Britain to read an ultimatum to them to stop the murder and the rape and the deportation of these people.

All that this bill asks is that something like 5,000 or 6,000 adults shall be admitted, provided they are otherwise admissible under our immigration laws—remember that; they must not be diseased and they must not be illiterate—and that 25,000 little children, orphaned or homeless, shall be allowed to come to America and go to orphan asylums, whether religious or governmental or philanthropic, which shall give bond to prevent them from becoming a public charge until they are old enough to work for themselves. That is all the bill provides; and certainly the Senator from Indiana is not going to tell me that he will object to a few minutes being spent upon the explanation of the bill, and a request for unanimous consent, when we have spent twice that much time upon a little question of $3,000 here this morning.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, as the Senator from South Dakota knows, I am not opposed to this bill. Indeed, I participated in the consideration of it, and in the drafting of the amendments. If the bill is to be now considered, I am very strongly in favor of it. I want, however, to correct one misapprehension that Senators seem to have. The only positive limitation is as to the number of orphans that may be admitted. The so-called limitation of 5,000 adults really is not a limitation.

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no; I thought I made myself plain in that regard. I said twice, at least, that that was the estimate of the Commissioner General of Immigration.

Mr. WILLIS. I know, but I heard other Senators speak of it as a limitation. That is only an estimate. I am in favor of the consideration of the Senator's bill.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I think there is a very strong sentiment in this country in support of this legislation, and I hope favorable action will be taken to-day. The people of my State who have interested themselves in this question are among our most representative citizens, and numerous petitions and letters from church and philanthropic organizations have been sent me indorsing this measure.

I hope we will not delay longer, as it is now several weeks since this legislation was petitioned for. I myself introduced a resolution for this purpose early in December. It seems to me, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has said, that this legislation is in the interest of humanity and a patriotic act. I wish the bill was somewhat broader in its scope, but it has been very carefully drawn, and it is more definite and restrictive than the resolution offered by me and fully protects the country against any abuses of our immigration laws. Mr. President, I sincerely hope the bill may be favorably acted upon to-day. It does not seem possible that there can be any serious opposition.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think the Armenians, in whom I have taken a very great interest for a long time, present a peculiarly tragic history. They have been deprived of their land. The Turks have absolutely refused to give them any land to live in. Probably half the population that existed at the beginning of the war has been massacred, and their situation is piteous in the extreme. I think this bill is carefully safeguarded.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts pardon a suggestion? They are unlike any of the others of these refugees, in that they have no home land of their own.

Mr. LODGE. None.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Greeks have a home land; the Italians have a home land. These people have none on the surface of the earth except what poor, barbarous, soviet Russia offered to them the other day; and we are not going to be shamed by letting Russia outdo us.

Mr. LODGE. That is very true; but the Senator has alluded to one point that I think of importance, because I take great interest also in the Greeks. The sufferings of the Greeks in the massacres at Smyrna have been simply terrific. There are some 1,100,000 Greek refugees. Of course they have a country to go to, but it is a very small country, and their situation is trying in the extreme. I do not suppose it is possible to add them to this bill, but I wish to make that allusion to the Greeks themselves.

Mr. STERLING. Let me say, in addition to what the Senator from Massachusetts has said, that there is little Greece, with its population of perhaps 4,500,000. It has been estimated that there are as many as a million and a half refugees in Greece. Greece can not take care of all of them, yet she is doing the best she can, and without any discrimination whatever as between races.

Mr. KING. The Senator might add, speaking about the Greeks who were expelled from Asia Minor, that there have been over 400,000 expelled from Thrace and vicinity, and many of them, threading the mountain passes, have reached Athens and the surrounding territory, and in those congested districts thousands of them are dying from disease, starvation, and exposure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Immigration with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

(1) That when used in this act the term "refugee" shall mean any homeless person of the Armenian race who shows that he has fled from his home in reasonable apprehension of death or bodily injury at the hands of Turkish troops or the Turkish civilian population since the 1st of August, 1914, and was resident prior to fleeing from his home in territory now occupied by the Turkish military or civil authorities.

(2) That when used in this act the term "relative" shall mean a husband, a wife, a parent, a grandparent, an unmarried or widowed daughter, granddaughter, or a sister, or a son, grandson, or a brother under 18 years of age.

Sec. 2. That any person resident within the United States, who is either a citizen of the United States or who prior to the approval of this act has made a declaration of intention to become a citizen, may petition the Commissioner General of Immigration for the admission into the United States of any relative who is a refugee.

Sec. 3. (1) That the petition for admission must contain (a) the name and address of the petitioner; (b) if a citizen, the date and place of his admission to citizenship and the number of his certificate, or if a declarant the date and place of his declaration of intention and number of his declaration; (c) the name and address of his employer, or the address of his place of business or occupation if he is not an employee; (d) the degree of relationship of the person for whom the application is made, and the name of the place where such person was resident prior to fleeing from his home, and the place of temporary sojourn of such person at the time the application was made if known to petitioner; (e) a statement that he is able to and will if required give bond or undertaking as provided by section 21 of the immigration act of February 5, 1917, that the person for whose admission the application is made shall if admitted not become a public charge; (f) a statement of the circumstances, as far as known, under which such person was compelled to flee from his home.

(2) The petition must be made under oath before some person having authority to administer oaths and must be supported by such further evidence as may be required by regulations issued under this act.

(3) Application may be made in the same petition for more than one person.

Sec. 4. That the petition must be accompanied by the sworn statements of two responsible citizens of the United States to whom the petitioner is known that to the best of their knowledge and belief the statements made in the petition are true, and that the petitioner is a responsible person, able to give the bond required by section 3 of this act.

Sec. 5. (1) That on the receipt of any petition the Commissioner General of Immigration may make such inquiries as to him may seem necessary, either in the United States or in any foreign country, to establish the truth of the statements made in the petition or in the accompanying statements.

(2) Any consul or consular officer of the United States shall give such aid to the Commissioner General of Immigration in carrying out this act as his other duties permit.

Sec. 6. The Commissioner General of Immigration may in his discretion consider as evidence the official statements of an agent of any corporation organized for philanthropic purposes under the laws of the United States or any State thereof engaged in the relief of refugees and affiliated with any committee appointed by the President for Near East relief, if the agent is delegated by his organization for the purpose.

Sec. 7. That if the Commissioner General of Immigration shall find that the persons named in the petition are refugees and relatives within the meaning of this act, and are otherwise admissible under the provisions of the act of February 5, 1917, and other laws relating to immigration, then upon approval of the Secretary of Labor such refugees shall be exempt from the provisions of the act approved May 19, 1921, entitled "An act to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States," as extended and amended by the public resolution of May 11, 1922, and they shall not be included in estimating the quota of alien immigrants of the nationality to which they belong established under such act as extended and amended.

Sec. 8. That any refugee as herein defined who has been permitted by the immigration authorities of the United States to land temporarily shall be finally admitted if a petition be filed and approved as provided herein in respect to such alien. That the admissibility to the United States of refugees under this act shall, so far as feasible, be determined prior to embarkation of such refugees at a foreign port, and to that end officers of the United States Immigration Service and of the United States Public Health Service may be detailed for service abroad, but any examination which may be conducted by such officers abroad shall not be in substitution for examination at a United States port.

Sec. 9. That in addition to the above the Commissioner General of Immigration, subject to approval of the Secretary of Labor, is hereby authorized to admit as refugees not more than 25,000 orphaned or homeless Armenian children under 16 years of age (if physically and mentally qualified under the terms of the immigration act of February 5, 1917, and other immigration laws) and who are now under the care of the Near East Relief or American or European missions and relief associations in Constantinople, Asia Minor, or elsewhere: Provided, however, That some responsible orphans' home, governmental, religious, or secular, in the United States, or some family, American or Armenian, now living within the United States, shall agree to receive and care for them, giving proper guaranties to the Secretary of Labor that they will not become a public charge.

SEC. 10. That the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, shall prescribe rules and regulations necessary to carry this act into effect.

SEC. 11. That any person who knowingly and fraudulently aids in any way to secure the admission under this act of any person not properly admissible under it shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment for a term of not exceeding one year, or both.

SEC. 12. That this act shall take effect upon its passage. No refugee shall be admitted under its terms after June 30, 1924, except those for whose admission petition has been filed previous to that date.

SEC. 13. That this act be cited as the Near East refugee act of 1923.

Mr. STERLING. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment to the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 10, line 6, as the bill was reported, after the word "elsewhere," insert a comma and the words "and to this end such officials shall cooperate with the Near East Relief in selecting, protecting, transporting, and placing in the United States such children."

Mr. STERLING. The amendment is offered to give full responsibility for the care of those orphan children, and more responsibility to the determination as to who shall come. The Near East Relief is the one philanthropic agency in the East that has a charter from the United States Government.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs upon the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I would like to ask the Senator from South Dakota how many refugees the committee estimates are now living?

Mr. STERLING. Between five and six thousand adults, besides the 25,000 orphaned or homeless children.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSFER TO CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I was unable to be in the Chamber at the beginning of the call of the calendar, and I wish to inquire what was done with Order of Business No. 927, Senate bill 3247, to transfer to the classified civil service agents and inspectors in the field service, including general prohibition agents and field supervisors appointed and employed pursuant to the national prohibition act, and for other purposes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That bill was not reached on the calendar. By unanimous consent the Senate commenced at Order of Business No. 969.

Mr. SHIELDS. The bill to which I have referred was not passed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No.

Mr. SHIELDS. I hope the Senate can go back to it when it finishes the call of the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed to call the calendar.

TRAVELING EXPENSES OF UNITED STATES EMPLOYEES.

The bill (S. 4176) to amend section 370 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 370 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 370. Whenever the Solicitor General, an attorney, an assistant attorney, a special assistant to the Attorney General, or any other officer of the Department of Justice is sent by the Attorney General to any State, District, Territory, or country to attend to any interest of the United States the person so sent shall receive in addition to his salary and the necessary expenses of travel, his actual expenses incurred for subsistence, not to exceed $7 per day, or a per diem of $6 in lieu of such actual expenses, while absent from the seat of government, the account thereof to be verified by affidavit."

Mr. KING. I shall be glad to have an explanation from the Senator in charge of this bill.

Mr. NELSON. I will make a brief explanation. The employees of the Department of Justice, the Solicitor General, and all the agents whom they have to send throughout the country to investigate matters pertaining to the department find their expenses for subsistence much higher than the amount allowed by law. Under the existing law they are allowed a fixed sum of $5 a day, or, in lieu thereof, their actual expenses, not to exceed $6 a day. That means that they have the option of taking the $5, or they can have the allowance of $6 a day, but in that case they must render their account to show they have expended that much. This increases the two items $1 each, making them $6 and $7, respectively. That is all there is to the bill.

Mr. KING. May I say to the Senator that in most of the appropriations which have been made for the traveling expenses of employees of the Government, including officers of the Army and the Navy, my recollection is that $4 a day is the amount allowed.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no; as a matter of fact, they are allowed more than the amount here proposed. If the Senator will read the report made here, he will find that officers of the Navy and the Marine Corps are allowed $7 a day. Federal judges are allowed $10 a day. Stenographers are allowed as much as $8 a day, and other officials are allowed $6.

This is simply to allow them $1 more in each case, $1 more where they take the actual money, and $1 a day additional where they render an account. An employee can take either. If he is satisfied to take the per diem, he is limited to $6 a day. If he wants his actual subsistence, it is limited to $7 a day, but in that case he must render an account.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator, because he is familiar with many of these appropriation bills, if there are not many officials of the Government and employees of the various departments whose expenses are limited to $4 a day?

Mr. NELSON. There may be some of the minor clerks whose expenses are so limited, but these employees of the Department of Justice are usually experts, sent throughout the country to investigate and to obtain evidence in cases. They are more than the ordinary department clerks.

Mr. KING. This amount is to cover their hotel bills?

Mr. NELSON. It covers all except transportation. It covers their hotel bills, their board and room rent, and their subsistence.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL TERM OF COURT AT LIMA, OHIO.

The bill (H. R. 10817) to amend section 100 of the Judicial Code of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say that that is a long bill, which reenacts a whole paragraph of the Judicial Code. The only change in existing law is the establishment of a term of court in northern Ohio, at Lima; and there is no occasion to read the bill. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] will propose an amendment to the bill, to which there is no objection.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to offer several amendments to the bill, on page 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendments.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 13, after the word "Lima," insert a comma and the words "if in the opinion of the court the public convenience so requires," and, on line 14, strike out the words "June and," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 100 of the Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 100. The State of Ohio is divided into two judicial districts, to be known as the northern and southern districts of Ohio. The northern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Ashland, Ashtabula, Cuyahoga, Carroll, Columbiana, Crawford, Geauga, Holmes, Lake, Lorain, Medina, Mahoning, Portage, Richland, Summit, Stark, Tuscarawas, Trumbull, and Wayne, which shall constitute the eastern division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Auglaize, Allen, Defiance, Erie, Fulton, Henry, Hancock, Hardin, Huron, Lucas, Mercer, Marion, Ottawa, Paulding, Putnam, Seneca, Sandusky, Van Wert, Williams, Wood, and Wyandot, which shall constitute the western division of said district. Terms of the district court for the eastern division shall be held at Cleveland on the first Tuesdays in February, April, and October, and at Youngstown on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in March. Terms of the district court for the western division shall be held at Toledo on the last Tuesday in April and October, and at Lima, if in the opinion of the court the public convenience so requires, on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in September: Provided, That suitable accommodations for holding court at Lima be furnished free of expense to the United States.

"Grand and petit jurors summoned for service at a term of court to be held at Cleveland may, if in the opinion of the court the public convenience so requires, be directed to serve also at the term then being held or authorized to be held at Youngstown. Grand and petit jurors summoned for service at a term of court to be held at Toledo may, if in the opinion of the court the public convenience so requires, be directed to serve also at the term then being held or authorized to be held at Lima.

"Crimes and offenses committed in the eastern division shall be cognizable at the terms held at Cleveland or at Youngstown, as the court may direct. Crimes and offenses committed in the western division shall be cognizable at the terms held at Toledo or at Lima, as the court may direct.

"Any suit brought in the eastern division may, in the discretion of the court, be tried at the term held at Youngstown. Any suit brought in the western division may, in the discretion of the court, be tried at the term held at Lima.

"The southern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Adams, Brown, Butler, Champaign, Clark, Clermont, Clinton, Darke, Greene, Hamilton, Highland, Lawrence, Miami, Montgomery, Preble, Scioto, Shelby, and Warren, which shall constitute the western division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Athens, Belmont, Coshocton, Delaware, Fairfield, Fayette, Franklin, Gallia, Guernsey, Harrison, Hocking, Jackson, Jefferson, Knox, Licking, Logan, Madison, Meigs, Monroe, Morgan, Morrow, Muskingum, Noble, Perry, Pickaway, Pike, Ross, Union, Vinton, and Washington, which shall constitute the eastern division of said district.

"Terms of the district court for the western division shall be held at Cincinnati on the first Tuesdays in February, April, and October; and for the eastern division at Columbus on the first Tuesdays in June and December, and at Steubenville on the first Tuesdays of March and September. Grand and petit jurors summoned for service at a term of court being held at Columbus may, if in the opinion of the court the public convenience so requires, be directed to serve also at the term being held or authorized to be held at Steubenville. Crimes and offenses committed in the eastern division shall be cognizable at the terms held at Columbus, or at Steubenville, as the court may direct. Any suit brought in the eastern division may, in the discretion of the court, be tried at the term held at Steubenville: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Steubenville shall be furnished free of expense to the Government until the completion of the Federal building: And provided further, That terms of the district court for the southern district shall be held at Dayton on the first Mondays in May and November. Prosecutions for crimes and offenses committed in any part of said district shall also be cognizable at the terms held at Dayton. All suits which may be brought within the southern district, or either division thereof, may be instituted, tried, and determined at the terms held at Dayton."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from Ohio whether provision has been made for a suitable building, or whether this contemplates that the Government will sooner or later be called upon to make an appropriation to erect a building?

Mr. WILLIS. That matter was fully considered, and it is provided in the bill that this shall be done without any additional expense to the Government. I think I ought in fairness also to say that when this matter first came up, both of the judges of the northern district of Ohio were opposed to the bill. I have their letters here. They wrote to my colleague and to me; but they said, in response to an inquiry from the Representative who introduced the bill, that they would have no objection to it, providing the amendment which the Senate has just adopted were adopted. In other words, this makes it optional with the court. I think it quite likely that court will not be held there very often, at any rate, while the present judges remain on the bench, which I trust will be for a long time, because they are very competent judges.

Mr. ROBINSON. If that is the case, why should Congress pass the bill? If it is not expected that court will be held in this place, why not wait until there is an actual necessity for providing for a term of court at Lima?

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator did not understand me correctly if he understood me to say that it was not proposed to hold court there. Court will be held there, but under the terms of the bill as it originally stood it was made mandatory that they should hold two terms of court there, and the judge advised me by wire that if it were provided that there may be only one term, and it be left in the discretion of the court he would have no objection, and he thinks it would be a wise measure.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Ohio also said that while the present judges are on the bench, it is not anticipated court will be held there very often.

Mr. WILLIS. I think that is true, because there will not be a very great amount of litigation, but they do not object to it as it stands now. With this amendment the bill meets their approval.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then it would seem there is little necessity for this amendment to the existing statute.

Mr. WILLIS. I think it will be a convenience to litigants in that section of the State. It will not be used very often, and there will be no increased expense to the Government. That is the opinion of both judges. I think the legislation may be safely enacted, and I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. KING. I wanted to ask the Senator another question. By whom are the accommodations necessary for the holding of the court to be furnished?

Mr. WILLIS. Of course, there is a Federal building in the city of Lima now, so it is not proposed to build an additional building. I hope the Senator will not object to the bill.

Mr. KING. I am interested in knowing whether this is merely for the purpose of getting the head of the camel into the tent, and using this for the purpose of getting a large appropriation for a Federal building in Lima—

Mr. WILLIS. I assure the Senator that is not the object, and it will not be the result.

Mr. KING. Upon the theory that "We have a court; now we must have a suitable building to house it."

Mr. WILLIS. No.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Ohio assures the Government and this august tribunal that there will be no appropriation asked for to build a public building there to house the court?

Mr. WILLIS. I assure the Senator that there will be no such request flowing from this.

Mr. KING. I think the word "Tuesdays," on line 13, and the word "Mondays," on line 14, should be changed to "Tuesday" and "Monday," respectively, in view of the elimination of the words "June and."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 13, to strike out the word "Tuesdays" and insert in lieu thereof "Tuesday," and line 14, strike out the word "Mondays" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Monday."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business No. 1044, Senate bill 4061. It is a local matter of some very particular urgency. I ask the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] if he will not kindly lay aside the unfinished business temporarily?

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the measure to which the Senator refers can be passed without debate, I have no objection.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If there is any debate, I shall withdraw the request.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, in order that the Senator from Montana may present his request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

WATERS OF THE BLACKFEET INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I now renew my request for the consideration of Senate bill 4061.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4061) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to enter into an agreement with Toole County irrigation district, of Shelby, Mont., and the Cut Bank irrigation district, of Cut Bank, Mont., for the settlement of the extent of the priority to the waters of Two Medicine, Cut Bank, and Badger Creeks, of the Indians of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to enter into an agreement, jointly or separately, with the Toole County irrigation district, of Shelby, Mont., and the Cut Bank irrigation district, of Cut Bank, Mont., and thereby to fix the extent of the prior right of the Indians residing and entitled to reside on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, collectively, to the waters of Two Medicine, Cut Bank, and Badger Creeks: Provided, That said districts shall furnish in advance the entire cost to be incurred in determining the amount of the water of said streams to which such Indians are so entitled to priority.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMPLOYMENT OF PRISONERS IN PENITENTIARIES.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 53. Its consideration will lead to no debate. I think it is an urgent matter. It provides for the appointment of a committee of three Members from the Senate and three from the House to ascertain what shall be done to provide work for the convicts at Leavenworth, Kans., and McNeil Island, Wash. I ask the Senator from New York if he will allow me to call up the measure?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to say that this will be the last measure to the consideration of which I shall consent. If this one leads to no discussion, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, to strike out "1922" and insert "1923," so as to make the concurrent resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That a special joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives be created, composed of three members of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate and three members of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, to be designated by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively, that shall investigate and report to Congress, not later than the first Monday in December, 1923, as to employment of prisoners and what articles it is desirable to produce or manufacture in the United States penitentiaries at Leavenworth, Kans., and McNeil Island, Wash., the cost of erecting buildings and the equipment of such buildings with the necessary machinery for the production of any such articles, the probable cost of manufacture of such articles and the prices now paid under contract for such articles, and such other data as may be pertinent to the general inquiry. Such committee may employ clerical and stenographic assistance, and the expenses thereof and of the committee may be paid one-half out of the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of such joint committee, but such expenses shall not exceed $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume consideration of the War Department appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, pursuant to the rule, I desire to give the following notice, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the notice.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Nebraska gives notice, in accordance with the provisions of Rule LX, that he will move to suspend paragraph 3 of Rule XVI, in order that he may propose the following amendment to the bill H. R. 13793, the Army appropriation bill:

On page 104, after line 24, insert the following:

For the improvement of nitrate plant No. 1 at Muscle Shoals, Ala., by the installation of new machinery therein, in order that said plant may be utilized for experimental purposes in extracting nitrogen from the air with the view of lessening the cost of explosives in time of war and fertilizer in time of peace, $2,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether the committee amendments have been disposed of?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No. When we adjourned Saturday we were working on page 40 of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 41, under the heading of "Roads, wharves, and drainage," in line 11, the committee proposes to strike out "$650,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$600,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

For the construction and repair by the Quartermaster Corps of roads, walks, and wharves; for the pay of employees; for the disposal of drainage; for dredging channels; and for care and improvement of grounds at military posts and stations, $600,000: Provided, That none of the funds appropriated or made available under this act shall be used for the permanent construction of any new roads, walks, or wharves connected with any of the National Army cantonments or National Guard camps.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Construction and repair of hospitals," on page 43, at the end of line 18, to strike out "$497,000" and insert "$772,000," so as to read:

For construction and repair of hospitals at military posts already established and occupied, including all expenditures for construction and repairs required at the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., and for the construction and repair of general hospitals and expenses incident thereto, and for additions needed to meet the requirements of increased garrisons, and for temporary hospitals in standing camps and cantonments; for the alteration of permanent buildings at posts for use as hospitals, construction and repair of temporary hospital buildings at permanent posts, construction and repair of temporary general hospitals, rental or purchase of grounds, and rental and alteration of buildings for use for hospital purposes in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, including necessary temporary quarters for hospital personnel, outbuildings, heating and laundry apparatus, plumbing, water and sewers, and electric work, cooking apparatus, and roads and walks for the same, $772,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 20, after the word "hospitals," to insert "except that not exceeding $275,000 may be used for the construction of a hospital at Fort Benning, Ga.," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the construction of new hospitals, except that not exceeding $275,000 may be used for the construction of a hospital at Fort Benning, Ga.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Office of the Quartermaster General," on page 44, line 16, before the word "messengers," to strike out "six" and insert "five," so as to make the clause read:

Five messengers at $840 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Office of the Quartermaster General," on page 44, line 18, in the total, to strike out "$532,000" and insert "$531,220."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON obtained the floor.

Mr. TRAMMEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMEL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	France	Moses	Smoot
Ball	Frelinghuysen	Nelson	Spencer
Bayard	George	New	Stanfield
Borah	Gooding	Nicholson	Stanley
Brookhart	Harris	Norbeck	Sterling
Broussard	Harrison	Norris	Sutherland
Burnum	Heflin	Oddie	Swanson
Cameron	Johnson	Page	Townsend
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Phlipps	Trammell
Caraway	Kendrick	Polindexter	Underwood
Couzens	Keyes	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Culberson	Ladd	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Lenroot	Reed, Pa.	Walsh, Mont.
Dillingham	Lodge	Robinson	Watson
Ernst	McKellar	Sheppard	Weller
Fletcher	McNary	Shields	Willis

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-four Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate conclude its business to-day, it take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? There being no objection, it is so ordered.

SENATE LEADERSHIP AND POLITICAL SITUATION.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, we have all known that the Republican Party was very much on the down grade, because it has been evidenced in so many ways. We could read it in the faces of the distinguished leaders on the other side as well as in the returns of all elections that have been held in recent months. We thought that the Democratic Party was pretty militant and had rendered great service to the people in pointing out the defects of much of the legislation proposed in this body and in the House of Representatives and in constructive suggestions and cooperation, but we did not realize that the majority in this Chamber realized that we were so militant until Saturday last. We did not know that there was to be a confession upon the part of the Republican majority in this body that it was impotent, that it was leaderless, that it was "on the rocks," and that something must be done to rehabilitate it. No higher authority could be advanced to assure the truth of that statement than the action of the distinguished leader of the majority party in this body on last Saturday. I do not know, and I hope some one will be able to tell me before this discussion is over, whether he was acting single-handed and alone or after full conference with his colleagues; but this we do know, that there appeared in all the morning newspapers of yesterday a statement, evidently given out with authority from the rooms of the distinguished leader on the other side, that he had selected two Senators of the majority to act as assistant leaders in this body; that they were to enter more frequently into the debates in the Senate; and that he had not been able to be in his seat as often as he would have desired. The Senator did not in that statement say so, but between the lines you could read it. So he selects, without caucus action, two very distinguished and able Senators who are to be styled "assistant leaders of the majority party."

I am making these remarks in order to congratulate these two colleagues who have been so promoted by their leader, and at the same time to commiserate with others on the other side of the Chamber.

I had formed the idea from the action of my friend, the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], that he was able to take care of himself; that he had earned the high honor that had been thrust upon him by his colleagues in the last caucus, when he was named assistant leader of the Republican Party in the Senate, and that he had fulfilled every requirement and had made good in every detail.

I had thought that the distinguished senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] had made pretty good as one of the assistant leaders on the other side of the Chamber, because we have read every other day in the newspapers that he has been at the White House conferring with the President and that he would express the views of the President on the following day upon the floor of the Senate. It seems, however, from the article which I have read, and which I am sure other Senators have read with an equal amount of interest, that those two distinguished Republican past masters in the art of debate are to be dethroned and that two others are to take their places.

Now, for what reason is that to be done, Mr. President? We are told in this statement that one of these Senators was selected because the conservative wing of the Republican Party must be taken care of and that the other was selected as the representative of the progressive wing of that party. If the distinguished leader of the Republican Party in the Senate is going to select Senators as his assistants to take care of the various wings and elements of the Republican Party he will need a good many more than just two assistants in this body, for there are about as many species of Republicans in the Senate at this time, and, perhaps, there will be just as many or more—no, not so many, because we got some of them in the last election—in the next Congress as there are species of birds found in that large cage out at the Zoo. There is a good deal of aptness in that comparison, for people come here as curiosity seekers to see the various species of Republicans comprising the Senate majority, and they likewise go out to the Zoo to see the different species of birds that are to be found there. [Laughter.]

I do not know whether or not the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], who has been selected to represent the conservative wing of the party, appreciates the humor of the situation. I do not know that he will in the next campaign in New York admit that he is a conservative. Then, too, he will have to give his own definition of just what a conservative is.

Of course, if it were left to certain Senators on the opposite side of the Chamber to choose a progressive to represent the progressive element of the party, the choice might not have been different. If we should take, for instance, the group of Senators represented by the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART]; the distinguished Senator from Michigan, who sits by his side [Mr. COUZENS]; the distinguished senior Senator from Wisconsin, who occupies a seat on the other side of the Chamber [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]; the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]; and other Senators making up that group; we know there would have been no question as to the selection of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] as the leader of that particular element in this body. Surely there would have been no doubt about it; it would have been unanimous. So I presume that the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts merely took it for granted that there would be no objection to the junior Senator from Wisconsin, as the assistant leader, representing that progressive group in this body.

I am sure that it was "glad tidings of good news" when those distinguished Senators read the statement that henceforth and forever in this body when some great progressive measure was to be championed upon the floor they must sit quietly in their seats; that the distinguished junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] would receive the nod of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, and he would come forward in debate to represent the great progressive principles of that group of the party. In other words, from now on we are going to have two kinds of music played. When progressive music, quick and devilish, whether "rag" or syncopated, is to be played, our friend the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is to come forward, throw himself in the fray, and dance by it; but when the slow and antiquated regular Republican music is to be played in this Chamber our friend the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] is to receive the nod or the beck or the call of the Senator from Massachusetts, and he is to glide forward and take up the cudgel of debate.

I surmise, Mr. President, that there is more than I have indicated behind this movement. The word has gone down the line that Senators must not talk, that they must pass a ship subsidy bill, and that they must pass the Army appropriation bill; that Senators on the other side should keep quiet in order to hasten legislation. But they are evidently becoming so frightened at the chances for a vote on the ship subsidy that the policy is to be changed, and here, at the eleventh hour, in the closing hours of the Congress, these two talkative champions, one of the conservative and the other of the progressive element, are to come forward in the debate every time the Republican Party is attacked. It is peculiarly strange that the majority should start such a filibuster at this stage of the proceedings. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, why were the two Senators to whom I have referred selected as assistant leaders? The distinguished leader from Massachusetts says they were chosen to represent the two elements of the party. The same kind of statement appears in pretty nearly all of the newspapers, and care is taken to say that this did not mean the unhorsing of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]; but because he was whip and because he was assistant leader he had so much to do that he could not stay on the floor of the Senate and enter into these debates.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did the Senator say because the Senator from Kansas was "whip" or was "whipped"? I did not understand him.

Mr. HARRISON. It seems now that the "whip" is to be "whipped." I do not know how the Senator from Kansas feels about this matter. I am going to watch developments, but I am sure that some of his friends will come to his rescue here, because no Senator sits in the Chamber more patiently all the time responding to his name and telling his Republican colleagues how to vote when they come in and do not know how to vote, than does the Senator from Kansas. He always answers to the roll call louder than any one else, so that there may be no mistake as to how to vote. I recall some months ago when a delicate question was under consideration respecting the Panama Canal, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] I think having offered an amendment, Republican Senators were running around on their side of the Chamber like chickens with their heads off, not knowing how to vote. The Senator from Massachusetts voted one way, but the Senator from Kansas spoke out with the voice of a lion another way and presently I saw leaders change their votes and vote as did the distinguished Senator from Kansas. He has performed his mission well. Mr. President, in the circumstances, do you understand why he should be dethroned at this time?

It is said that the two Senators who have been appointed leaders—splendid men—are selected to represent the different elements. Are the selections made because of their views on tariff rates on wool? The distinguished Senator from New York fought the high rates on wool and the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin likewise fought those rates; so that they were not selected because they had different views on the tariff as far as the rates on wool are concerned. If some Senator were going to be selected to represent the wool element, why was my distinguished friend from Idaho [Mr. GOODING] left out, or my distinguished friend from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM], or the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]? He is all wool and a yard wide. [Laughter.]

It is very sure that if the appointments were based on the tariff measure otherwise, representatives of different elements were selected, because the distinguished Senator from New York voted for the tariff bill while the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin voted against it. There were only about five or six Republicans, I think, who voted against it; so I suppose the Senator from Wisconsin was selected to represent that element which condemned the tariff bill, which was sponsored by my friend from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. Certainly that was one time he cast a wise vote, and it may be the Republican leadership now appreciates his wisdom for that act.

Is it because of the ship subsidy bill? I understand that the distinguished Senator from New York is for that, and that the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin has been trying to amend it over the protest of Lasker and the President of the United States. It may be that they were both selected because they both had condemned in the strongest language that element in this body, composed in large part of Members on the other side, known as the farm bloc, because no one has waxed more eloquent than the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin and the distinguished Senator from New York in condemning the farm bloc, so they need representation as assistant leaders in this body.

Mr. President, I am inclined to believe that the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts awarded this promotion to the Senator from New York because the other day, when a very important matter was before the Senate, and the Chair ruled according to precedent—there was no other way to rule—the Senator from New York appealed from that ruling. The Chair had ruled that we could vote on the question of 5-cent fares on the street cars in the District of Columbia. He knew that he was following precedent when he made that ruling; but the Senator from New York immediately appealed, and, with the help of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts and his party colleagues over there, overthrew the efforts and decision of the distinguished Vice President, so I presume that the leader over there was merely rewarding the distinguished Senator from New York for helping out the street railways in the District of Columbia. Then, too, I presume that this new-found honor was laid upon the tender shoulders of my good friend from Wisconsin—he deserves it; he is a splendid statesman, a fine debater—because he put through this body the other day a bill with 62 votes for it and not a vote against it; and because of standing by the farmers as he had in that instance he is to be rewarded by this place as assistant leader in this body.

So, Mr. President, I rose to commiserate with my friend from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], who no more can rise here with all his force and eloquence and power to debate, because when he does he may be told: "Sit down! Other assistants have been found more worthy than you. You are to be squelched. You just keep your seat. You were one of my assistants, but no more." Then, when my friend from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] gets up, they can say: "Sit down! You are the whip. You have so many duties that you can not attend to this." Then I can see the Senator from Massachusetts wink at my friend, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], and say: "Go forward. It is your time. Represent the progressive element in the Republican Party. Go to them"; and when he has finished, and they need a conservative speech, the distinguished Senator from New York is to respond. Thus it is, Mr. President, that a new order of things has come about in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. What if the Senator from Massachusetts winks both eyes at once, and they both speak—will it be a joint debate? [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. Well, I am afraid they are going to be tripping themselves up quite often.

It is a peculiar thing that in the same paper of yesterday, announcing the appointment of these two assistant leaders, there appeared an article from Indianapolis, Ind., headed in big letters: "Two presidential booms in Indiana. Beveridge and WATSON are mentioned as successors to Mr. Harding." And in the same paper there appears an article by Mr. Messenger headed: "President Harding's friends reject the idea that he can be Coué out of the renomination." They are putting something over on you. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER rapped with his gavel.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, is this a movement to get the renomination of the Republican Party for Mr. Harding? Are they afraid of the distinguished Senator from Indiana? The papers are carrying the news that he may seek the nomination, and they are afraid to let him be assistant leader any longer. They are afraid his clarion voice will ring out, and he will make such a record in this body that it might "gum the cards" in the next Republican convention.

Over there sits my distinguished friend from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. There may be some method in this dethronement of him, because his distinguished colleague [Mr. CAPPER] is being mentioned in a large part of the press as one of the probable candidates for the Republican nomination for President, and he is liable to fool some of you over there. You had better begin to make up to him a little bit, like you are making up to the present President now. It may be that they thought that his colleague, the present whip and assistant leader in name only, not in practice any more, might be in too great a position here to help the junior Senator from Kansas secure the nomination for President. So it looks as though this must be a Harding proposition to blend all the elements in the Republican Party together to kill off opposition.

I wish you well. I hope that you have removed the discordant elements that have been playing so much within the Republican Party. Your leader now has fixed up the cards by the appointment as assistants of Senators WADSWORTH and LENROOT, one representing the progressive and the other the conservative element of your party. Everything is going to move along nicely. I suppose all are satisfied. There are going to be no more speeches from anyone over there except these two distinguished Senators, and they are going to be at the beck and call of the distinguished leader from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who will tell them when to speak and when to hold their peace.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, when my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] makes a comic speech he overlooks one proverbial saying, that "brevity is the soul of wit."

It would be quite possible for me, I think, with a little effort, to find the humorous side of the conflict now going on among my Democratic friends as to who shall be their leader. It would be perfectly possible for me to point out that variegated species of Democrats are, to say the least, quite as common as variegated species of Republicans. I do not care to waste the time of the Senate on matters so wholly trivial. It is enough for me to say that the only power that can create offices in the Republican organization is the Republican conference. They have created three officers there—the chairman of the conference, the vice chairman and whip, and the secretary. I have the honor to be chairman of the conference. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is the vice chairman and whip; and I may say, after a long experience, that there never has been within my knowledge a more patient, diligent, dexterous, capable whip and vice chairman than the Senator from Kansas. The secretary is the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. President, I have no power whatever to create the offices of assistant leaders or any other offices for the conference, or to appoint such officers after their positions have been created. I have created none and I have appointed no assistant leaders. I try to consult with all the Republicans. I try to do everything I can to promote the business of the Senate and to promote harmony and teamwork on this side. I consult with all, and at different times I have asked many of the Republicans here to aid me, and shall continue to do so. As the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] has been particularly named, I believe, in some of the newspaper reports, let me take this occasion to say that there is no Senator on the Republican side with whom I have consulted more, or on whose advice I rely more than on that of the senior Senator from Indiana. Not a day passes that I do not consult with him and advise with him.

No statement was issued from my office, and from the confused reports in the newspapers almost any inference might be drawn. Their perfect unreliability is shown by a report I see this morning, that I am so enfeebled and so weary that I do not intend to be the leader of the Senate if my colleagues should be good enough to choose me again for that position. As that has been brought up, let me take the occasion to relieve the mind of the Senator from Mississippi and tell him there is no truth in it. There is no truth in any of these stories that have been filling the newspapers. The two Senators who have been named as having been designated assistant leaders are Senators who command in a high degree my confidence as well as my friendship, and whom I have repeatedly asked, as I have many other Senators, to assist me in the debates on this floor, as I shall continue to do. If the Senator is disturbed about divisions in our party, I suggest that he look at some of the divisions in his own.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, my jocose friend from Mississippi is always interesting and generally amusing, and never more so than on the present occasion. I do not know why he sought to bring me into this controversy, if there be controversy, because I am only an innocent bystander, one who always gets shot, beyond doubt.

I never know just how far to be facetious in replying to a speech by the Senator from Mississippi and how far to be serious. If the people of the United States understood the situation, and could see it here just as it has been portrayed to us, I should either not respond at all or else be jocular in my response; but when a speech by the Senator is carried out in cold type, and is read by the people, they may look upon it as a serious proposition and think that in reality there are some facts to substantiate the statements made by the Senator.

Let me assure my friend in the beginning that he need have no uneasiness about the future of the Republican Party in the Senate or in the country. I have heard my friend make these speeches before, on occasions quite similar to that which now confronts us, and always with the same result.

When 1924 comes around, the forces of the Republican Party, notwithstanding any seeming division which my friend may find in the ranks at this time, will be united and militant. They will stand upon a platform that will command the respect of the great body of the American people, and they will nominate as their candidate, in my judgment, the present President of the United States without any opposition in the Republican convention. My friend has been kind enough to mention my name in connection with that exalted position, largely in order to make his speech more facetious and more jocular.

Mr. HARRISON. I was in hopes it was true.

Mr. WATSON. I have no doubt that the Senator would be glad to see any sort of opposition created to the President of the United States, but it will not be. My own thought is that if Mr. Harding wants to be renominated for President he ought to be and will be, because the Republican Party must stand on the record we have made, the record of his administration, and it is not possible to stand on the record of the administration and yet repudiate the head of the administration.

We stand upon the record made by Congress and by the President, by the legislative and by the administrative branches of the Government, and it is not possible for any party to nominate somebody else than the President of the United States and yet appeal to the people to support the party on the record made by the administration of which the President is the head. I have no doubt in my mind that the President of the United States will be a candidate for renomination, nor have I any that he will be renominated by the convention when it meets. So much for that. I am obliged to my good friend for having mentioned my name in connection with that exalted position. It is a compliment, even from him, in a jocular and facetious speech.

Mr. HARRISON. I am very glad that the Senator stopped at the renomination of Harding and did not venture to go farther.

Mr. WATSON. That is as far as is necessary to go now. The other details will be looked after in the future.

I may say to my friend, who was talking about the last election, that it might be well for him to look at the results of the very last election that was held, the by-election in New York, held only last week, where the Democratic candidate received but 206 majority, whereas in the November election he had 3,528 majority.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator recalls that President Harding carried that district by something between thirty and forty thousand, does he not?

Mr. WATSON. Yes; I do.

Mr. HARRISON. A pretty big loss, from 40,000 down to 206.

Mr. WATSON. In November the Democratic candidate carried it by 3,528 majority, but last week by 206 majority. In other words, as Lincoln said, "You can fool all the people some of the time, but you can not fool all of the people all of the time," which, after all, is saving grace for this Republic; otherwise the Democratic Party would be in power all the time.

Permit me to say this in connection with the proposition of an assistant leader: I have not been the assistant leader here, nor have I ever sought to be at any time. If the Senator from Massachusetts wants to be leader—and there is no reason why he should not be—I am for him to continue as such in this Congress and in the next that is to come. Everybody understands about the ability of the Senator and his great knowledge of parliamentary law, his statesmanship, and his capacity for leadership, and I do not intend, in so far as I am concerned, even in a facetious speech, to permit my friend to have go out to the country that there is any division or discord on this side with reference to the leadership of the Senator from Massachusetts.

So far as I am concerned, the Senator from Kansas may be the assistant leader if he so desires. There is no more competent man. He and I served together in the House many years. I happened to be the whip over there, and at that time he was my first assistant whip, and we worked together admirably. So far as his work in the Senate is concerned, it has spoken, does speak, and will continue to speak for itself. In all respects he is admirably equipped and qualified for the position he holds. It is not necessary to have assistant leaders on this side, but if assistant leaders are to be chosen, where may we find two worthier than my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and my other equally distinguished friend from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. It may be true that these men have not always voted together on various propositions which have been submitted, but after all each man on this side is a law unto himself. He thinks for himself, and while we get together in conference and thrash out our various propositions, and usually go along in harmony, after all, if no conference is held on a proposition, it is up to each man to determine his own course for himself as a free and independent Senator of the United States in this the greatest legislative body of the world.

Therefore I want to say to my good friend, of whom I am personally so very fond, that he is building up a beautiful man of straw, and then tearing it down with his usual skill, in the presence of filled galleries and of all the fine boys in the newspaper gallery. But let it be understood that, so far as the future of the Republican Party is concerned, there will be no division as to national leadership, and no discord as to leadership in the Senate of the United States.

ISLE OF PINES.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if the Senate will bear with me just a minute on a matter which is perhaps not directly in order, on January 3 I offered a resolution calling upon the Secretary of State for certain information with respect to American interests in the Isle of Pines. On January 29, the Secretary responded to that resolution, and his reply has been printed as Senate Document No. 295.

Without taking time to read the communication, it develops, in substance, that there are 10,000 American property holders in the Isle of Pines; that they own 90 per cent of the whole island; that there are 700 Americans now residing permanently on the island; that the citrus fruit groves in that island are worth about $1,000 per acre; that there are 10,470 acres of those groves, valued at about $10,470,000; that there are other lands owned by Americans estimated as worth $11,280,000, making the American holdings in all worth $21,750,000. General Crowder, who was also asked as to the value of those lands, said, in substance, that he thought they did not exceed $15,000,000 in value.

The area of this island is about 800 square miles, or 512,000 acres. Americans own 90 per cent, or 460,800 acres. The other 10 per cent is owned by Cubans and others. Most of that land was acquired by the Americans shortly after the Spanish-American war, and under the representation and belief that the Isle of Pines belonged to the United States. There has been considerable contention about it, and it is now an open question, to say the least, as to what Government owns this island.

Whether the title belongs to Cuba or not ought to be finally determined. The State Department has been of the opinion that the island belongs to Cuba. There is a treaty pending before the Senate in executive session virtually quitclaiming to the Government of Cuba the title to this island. Without attempting to discuss this question, I want to submit to the Senate this proposition: With 10,000 Americans owning 90 per cent of the acreage of the island, valued at from $15,000,000 to $21,000,000 and over, should we not, out of deference to the rights of those American citizens, try to secure sovereignty over that island? To that end I submit the following resolution, and ask that it may be read for the information of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 433) was read as follows:

"Whereas there is a dispute as to whether the Isle of Pines is territory of the United States or of Cuba; and

"Whereas a large number of American citizens purchased and acquired land and other property in and on the Isle of Pines under the representations and belief that it was territory of the United States; and

"Whereas it is estimated from the best available sources of information that 10,000 American citizens own in the aggregate 90 per cent of the whole island, or about 460,800 acres, variously estimated to be worth from $15,000,000 to $21,750,000; and

"Whereas only about 10 per cent of the area of said island, or about 51,200 acres, is now owned by Cubans, or others than citizens of the United States: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to enter into negotiations with the Republic of Cuba for the cession of the Isle of Pines to the United States upon such terms and conditions as may be equitable and just to the Governments and peoples of the United States and of Cuba and to the residents and property holders of the Isle of Pines."

MR. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I would like to ask the Senator where he got his figures about the number of Americans who own property on the Isle of Pines. Residents of the Isle of Pines who have been visiting in this country have furnished information which would indicate that the number is very much less.

Mr. POMERENE. The facts contained in the preamble to the resolution I have taken in substance from the communication which was sent to the Senate in response to my resolution by the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that the question is raised, I ask that the communication from the Secretary of State, which is found in Senate Document 295, may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The communication is as follows:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State in response to the resolution adopted by the Senate on January 3 (calendar day, January 4), 1923, requesting him to inform the Senate "how many citizens of the United States have landed or other property interests in the Isle of Pines, and the amount and value of such lands and other property owned by them."

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE.

Washington, February 2, 1923.

The President:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has received through the Secretary of the Senate an attested copy of a resolution adopted by the Senate on January 3 (calendar day, January 4), 1923, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate how many citizens of the United States have landed or other property interests in the Isle of Pines, and the amount and value of such lands and other property owned by them.

In response thereto, the Secretary of State has the honor to lay before the President the following information with a view to its transmission to the Senate, if his judgment approve thereof:

The latest information received by the Department of State on the subject matter of the Senate resolution is contained in a dispatch, dated January 13, 1923, from the American consul at Nueva Gerona, Isle of Pines, and a telegram from Maj. Gen. Enoch H. Crowder dated January 26, 1923.

In his dispatch the consul reports as follows:

"It is manifestly impossible to estimate accurately the value of the land and other property belonging to American citizens without a long and expensive survey, but it may be possible to deduce from available data some idea of the amount and value of their holdings.

"As many land titles have never been recorded by American landowners in the local registry office, it is only possible to estimate the total number. From the best available sources of information it is estimated that about 10,000 Americans own Isle of Pines land and that their holdings aggregate 90 per cent of the whole island. As only about 700 Americans reside permanently in the island, it is obvious that the great majority of the landowners reside in the United States.

"A citrus fruit grove may be estimated as worth $1,000 per acre, on an average. As there are 10,740 acres of groves their value would be $10,740,000. The other land owned by Americans is estimated as worth $11,280,000, including the growing crops and timber, making the total value of American-owned land $21,750,000.

"The value of the land not grove property is arrived at as follows: The area of the island in round figures is 800 square miles, or 512,000 acres, of which Americans own 90 per cent, or 460,800 acres. Deducting from this 10,470 acres of grove property leaves 450,330 acres of other land. This is valued at anywhere from $25 to $75 an acre. Taking it at the lowest valuation it is worth $11,258,250 without timber or crops. The growing crops of vegetables, etc., and the pine timber and other timber would easily bring this figure up to $11,280,000. This does not take into account the value of mining rights owned by Americans.

"Besides lands Americans own a great variety of other property, such as buildings, hotels, fruit-packing houses, stores, dwellings, barns, warehouses, schools, and churches, also stocks of merchandise, household goods, and personal effects, the steamboat line with three steamboats, other boats and vessels, motor vehicles, farming equipment, stock in the bank and in the telephone company, all of which may be roughly estimated as worth not less than $1,000,000. This is believed to be a very conservative estimate."

In his telegram of January 26, 1923, Maj. Gen. Enoch H. Crowder states as follows:

"From best available information the estimates made by the consul at Nueva Gerona are correct, with the exception of valuation. The value of American-owned property in the Isle of Pines would not exceed $15,000,000.

Respectfully submitted.

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 1, 1923.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, my attention was momentarily directed to something else, and I did not hear the request of the Senator from Ohio with reference to the Isle of Pines matter. Would the Senator kindly restate it briefly?

Mr. POMERENE. I have just presented a preamble and resolution requesting the President to enter into negotiations with the Government of Cuba for the purpose of securing the cession of that island to the United States under such terms and conditions as may be just and equitable, both to the Government of the United States, the Government of Cuba, and the residents and property holders of the island.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I recall, there is quite a dispute as to the present ownership of the Isle of Pines. It is held by some authorities that it is not Cuban territory and was not ceded to Cuba in the treaty which we entered into some years ago with Spain. Would not the passage of the resolution be an admission on the part of the Senate that we had no right to the Isle of Pines?

Mr. POMERENE. No; it would not. I have expressly recited in the preamble that there is a dispute with respect to the matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not hear the preamble read.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator will find it in the RECORD. I have a copy of it here, if the Senator would like to look at it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Do the American residents go further than to claim that they located there under the apprehension that it was American territory? I do not understand them to claim that it really is American territory.

Mr. POMERENE. It was claimed by them that it was American territory. Senators who may be interested in the subject will find in Senate Document 205, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, a majority report from the Committee on Foreign Relations, by Senator Foraker, former Senator from Ohio, and also a minority report which was presented by former Senator Morgan of Alabama and former Senator Clark of Montana.

I did not intend to discuss the matter, and I am not going to take time in view of the legislation that is pending. I may say, however, that about the time the Americans began to become interested in the island letters and telegrams were addressed to the War Department, and the War Department answered some of the letters to the effect that the island was United States property. A map was issued by the War Department containing different colors, representing the sovereignty of the several countries and the islands of the Caribbean Sea, and the map showed this island to be United States territory. I think it is fair to say that upon further investigation by one of the committees of the Senate, and I think it was the Committee on Foreign Relations, it was contended that there was no authority for the printing of the map.

It was claimed by some of those people that the late President McKinley said that the island was American territory.

I have not been able to satisfy myself that President McKinley ever made such a statement. The Secretaries of State have contended, dating from the Roosevelt administration, that it was Cuban territory. The controversy arises rather out of the reading of the protocol with Cuba, following the cessation of hostilities with Spain, and later in the Paris treaty, where it was stated—and now I am speaking from memory—that Spain relinquished her title to Cuba.

Then the question arose as to what was meant by the construction of the word "Cuba." It was contended on the part of property holders and others who believed this to be American territory that the word "Cuba" in the Paris treaty and in the protocol meant only the island of Cuba. On the other hand it was contended that the word "Cuba" in the treaty and protocol included not only the island of Cuba but all of the lesser islands more or less immediately connected with this island. It is contended in favor of that construction that during the days when Cuba was a part of Spain they had a government of the province of Cuba, and they sent their representatives to the Parliament of Spain. It was claimed that the Isle of Pines was always subject to the jurisdiction of the province of Cuba, so that it is said that when our commissioners drafted the protocol and later the treaty of Paris with Spain, they had in mind the previous history of the island and its connection with Cuba.

It was the acceptance of that position, I think, that led the several Secretaries of State to hold that the Isle of Pines was, in fact, Cuban territory. Nevertheless, when the question came up afterwards in the Senate, I think it was in connection with the ratification of the treaty, the title to the Isle of Pines was reserved for future consideration. It also is a fact that from that day to this the Isle of Pines has been under the jurisdiction of the Cuban Government. Now, whether we should be of the opinion that the Isle of Pines is Cuban territory or United States territory, it has seemed to me, in view of the fact that many of our people—and they are distributed more or less all over the country—have acquired their title—

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. And were solicited by the Government to go there.

Mr. POMERENE. I was not advised of that, but I accept the statement. In any event, it was represented that this was United States territory, and I know that many of our people, and particularly residents of Ohio, made purchases in the Isle of Pines believing it was United States territory. I dare say they never would have made a purchase in the Isle of Pines had they not so believed. My distinguished colleague [Mr. WILLIS] will recall former Chief Justice John A. Shauck, now dead, who was for many years one of the leading jurists of Ohio and chief justice of the supreme court of that State for many years. He was one of the men who acquired some property in the Isle of Pines. He presented to me some years ago a brief on the subject. He seemed to have no doubt whatsoever, as a matter of law, that the Isle really belonged to the United States. I have had my doubts about it.

I felt, under these circumstances, knowing that 90 per cent of the acreage belonged to American citizens, and because there are other large investments down there in the form of public utilities and manufacturing plants, that our Government ought to enter into some negotiation with the Government of Cuba looking to the ceding of that island to the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The majority report, as I understand it, holds that it is not United States territory.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; that it is Cuban territory.

Mr. McKELLAR. And the minority report that it is not United States territory?

Mr. POMERENE. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Is the Senator asking for the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, no. I could not do that now, because under the rule I think the resolution should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I ask that it may be referred to that committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so referred.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I am not familiar with the history of the Isle of Pines from a legal standpoint, but I had rather gained the impression that possibly some of the American citizens, who are very anxious to have it placed under the jurisdiction of the United States, would like to relieve themselves from the imposition of the tariff duties imposed upon products of the Isle of Pines which come in competition with similar American products. I would like to have that point considered in connection with any investigation that is made of the subject.

I dare say that many of those citizens went there to grow products that would come in competition with American products just with the hope that they might have that territory become territory of the United States and thus be relieved of the tariff duties which are imposed. If we take into consideration the last tariff act and the rates which were increased upon a number of products, and properly so, because it was the general policy of the Congress to increase tariff rates, we might go to their help; but if we had allowed the tariff to remain as it was previously on products coming from the Isle of Pines coming in competition with the products of certain parts of the country, we would not do so. I am just a little apprehensive that a good many of those American citizens down there want it to be annexed to the United States so that they can be relieved of the imposition of the present tariff rates.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. Would the Senator object? I recall that he voted against all those tariff duties.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I would object to it most strenuously under the operation of a high tariff on the products coming from every other section of the country and coming in competition with the products produced in every other section of the country. I think the Senator himself would object to any such discrimination.

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly I should, for I voted for the tariff. I believe in it.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I voted to try to equalize the tariff. I do not believe in selling goods produced in one part of the United States in a free-trade market, and being compelled to purchase goods from a territory that enjoys protection. Nobody could contend that that policy is right. If we are going to have a system of high tariff, it must not be applied to the products of only one section, ignoring the products of another section.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I may say a word in reply, I desire to say that I think it is true that some of these people are interested in getting their citrus fruits into this country. It is a sort of human desire to get a market. There are in the island, I think, 800 square miles or thereabouts. Its people raise pineapples, and some oranges and grapefruit, but the season for the Isle of Pines is over before the season begins in Florida, so I am advised, and all of their fruit should be marketed and could be marketed in the United States without in the least interfering with the Florida product.

I have a sort of an old-fashioned idea that the people here in some of the other States ought to be permitted to eat oranges or grapefruit once in a while without paying tribute by way of high tariff taxes to other people. It may be that is an old-fashioned view but, nevertheless, it is mine.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 44, line 18, to decrease the total appropriation for the "Office of the Quartermaster General" from $532,060 to $531,220.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 19, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$35,000," so as to read:

The sum of $35,000 of the appropriation available for the fiscal year 1924 for the "Disposition of remains of officers, soldiers, and civilian employees" may be expended for personal services in the cemeterial division, office of the Quartermaster General, for compiling, recording, preparing, and transmitting data incident to bringing home and disposition of remains from abroad.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Air Service," on page 51, line 19, after the word "plants," to strike out "for the Regular Army," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That not less than $50,000 of this amount shall be used for continuation of airplane bombing tests against obsolete naval craft; not exceeding $500,000 may be expended for the production of lighter-than-air equipment; and not exceeding $300,000 may be expended for improvement of stations, hangars, and gas plants.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 11, before the word "title," to strike out "the" and insert "this," and in line 13, after the name "War Department," to strike out "upon Government flying fields, and no public exhibition flights shall be given unless a bond of indemnity, in such sum as the Secretary of War may require for damages to person or property, shall be furnished the Government by the parties desiring the exhibition," so as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated under this title shall be used for the purpose of giving exhibition flights to the public other than those under the control and direction of the War Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from New York if we have now reached the provisions dealing with the Air Service?

Mr. WADSWORTH. We have.

Mr. KING. I wish to ask the Senator with respect to that service whether, in his judgment, the appropriation carried in the bill is sufficient for any practical or useful purpose; whether the appropriations which have been made during the last two or three years have resulted in any benefit; and, finally, whether the War and Navy Departments or the administration have recommended any plan or have any plan for consolidation of all of the air activities under a new bureau or a new department, or under some sort of Federal agency, so that there may be a coordination of all activities in relation to aircraft?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I know of no plans being made by the administration to unite all the aircraft activities of the Army or the Navy with any other branch of the Government. I will say to the Senator that I believe the appropriations which are carried in the pending bill are too small, but the condition of the Treasury is such that we can scarcely afford any larger ones.

The Senator has asked me if anything has been accomplished for the Air Service by appropriations which have been previously made. I think a great deal has been accomplished in the last two or three years. The new types of planes which have been developed since the World War in this country, under the guidance in part of the experts of the Army, assisted, of course, by experts in civil life, are probably unexcelled. The Martin bomber, as is well known, is one of the finest heavy machines in the world. The Thomas-Morse fast scout plane, which is the last approved design to be put into quantity production, is one of the best machines of its kind in the world. I also call the Senator's attention to the fact that at the races near Detroit last autumn the American flying machines, in part owned or operated by the Army and its personnel, broke five world records for speed. I think an instance of that kind is somewhat eloquent of the progress which has been made in this country.

It is true we have not enough machines to equip an adequate force, nor have we enough flying officers to man the machines that would be required for an adequate force, but, with the money which we have had, in spite of the very heavy restrictions, I think rather remarkable progress has been made.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether the progress made has been through the efforts of the Air Service of the War Department or through the efforts of private corporations engaged in the production of these machines?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It has been through the efforts of both. Of course, it is only the War Department that spends money out of this appropriation.

Mr. KING. Of course, I understand that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Designs of new planes are invited from private manufacturers. Planes are also being made from time to time by the Government's own designers. When finally a very advantageous design is evolved a couple of machines are manufactured in accordance with the design as experimental types. Then they are tested, and if they meet the tests—and only the War Department can determine the nature of the tests—contracts are let for their production in quantity if the Congress appropriates the money.

Mr. KING. I have been advised by one or more persons that contracts recently were let for, I think, 100 machines, and there was some question as to the utility of those machines. Is the Senator advised as to that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have never heard of it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, without indulging in any criticism of the amounts we are appropriating for aeronautics both for the Army and for the Navy, I think those appropriations do not bring adequate results, and that we never will get adequate results with the present divided responsibility. It is obvious, to me at least, that there should be one organization, one agency to control the subject of aeronautics; that such agency, of course, should have representation upon it from the Army and the Navy and perhaps from the Post Office Department; that there should be developed perhaps some suitable factory for the construction of machines, and that the efforts of all the aeronautical agencies or activities of the Government should be focused and centralized in the interest of economy and in the interest of securing the best results. We spent last year, I think, some twenty-odd million dollars for the Air Service of the Navy and perhaps from $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 for the Air Service of the Army, and this year this bill will carry, directly and indirectly, in all more than $20,000,000 for the Army for aeronautics.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is nothing appropriated indirectly; it is all carried right here.

Mr. KING. I refer to the compensation of officers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, yes.

Mr. KING. And to the civilian employees as well as officers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The appropriation is nothing like $20,000,000. The civilian employees are provided for in the item which we are discussing.

Mr. KING. I refer to the overhead expenses and the number of officers and enlisted men whose compensation will be met by some other item of the bill; so that the aggregate doubtless will approach $20,000,000. Whether more or less, at any rate it is a considerable sum; and I have some doubt as to whether or not under the appropriations of last year and this year and preceding years we have received any benefit commensurate with their magnitude, and, in my judgment, we will not do so until we have a reorganization and consolidation of these activities.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the item for salaries in the office of the Surgeon General, on page 56, line 16, before the words "of class three," to strike out "fourteen" and insert "fifteen"; in the same line, before the words "of class two," to strike out "thirty-four" and insert "thirty-five"; in line 17, before the words "of class one," to strike out "fifty-six" and insert "fifty-seven"; and, at the end of line 24, to strike out "$215,080" and insert "$219,280," so as to make the paragraph read:

Salaries: Chief clerk, $2,250; principal assistant librarian, $2,250; principal clerk, $2,000; pathologist, $1,800; microscopist, $1,800; 2 assistant librarians, at $1,800 each; anatomist, $1,600; entomologist, $1,600; photographer, $1,500; translator, $1,800; clerks—15 of class 4, 15 of class 3, 35 of class 2, 57 of class 1, 9 at $1,000 each, 2 at $900 each; multigraph operator, $1,200; engineer, $1,400; skilled mechanic, $1,000; 2 messengers, at $840 each; 6 assistant messengers, at $720 each; chauffeur, $840; 3 firemen, at $720 each; 3 watchmen, at $720 each; superintendent of building (Army Medical Museum and Library), $200; 6 laborers, at $660 each; 4 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $219,280.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from New York why there is such a large personnel required in the shape of clerks of various grades for the office of the Surgeon General?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, of course it is a very large office, and it has highly important work to do. I hardly know how to answer the Senator's question, which seems to me to be rather vague; but the Surgeon General, as the Senator knows, has charge and supervision of the entire medical department of the Army, which extends from Portland, Me., to Manila. Everything that is done by the Medical Corps is done under the direction of this office, and its records necessarily are voluminous and its correspondence is great. There has been a steady reduction in the number of employees since the war. The figure at the foot of the page, $219,280, is the Budget estimate.

Mr. KING. Of course, I appreciate the importance of this organization, and I would be the last one to restrict it by failing to give sufficient appropriations; but in view of the fact that we have but one hundred and twenty-odd thousand soldiers I was rather curious to know why it would require such a large number of clerks in order to dispose of the clerical work of the organization. May I inquire of the Senator whether the War Department avails itself of the services of the Public Health Service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 59, at the end of line 23, to insert the word "purchase" and a comma, so as to read:

ENGINEER OPERATIONS IN THE FIELD.

For expenses incident to military engineer operations in the field, including the purchase of material and a reserve of material for such operations, the rental of storehouses within and outside of the District of Columbia, the purchase, operation, maintenance, and repair of horse-drawn and motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, and such expenses as are ordinarily provided for under appropriations for "Engineer depots," "Civilian assistants to engineer officers," and "Military surveys and maps," $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Corps of Engineers," on page 62, at line 6, to insert the following subhead: "Seacoast Defenses, Insular Possessions."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator respecting the item here for the protection and repair of fortifications. There was considerable literature on the subject, the Senator will recall, during and following the war, by reason of the development of submarines, and so forth, as to whether our plan of fortifications was archaic, whether there was any necessity for the maintenance of many of these forts and fortifications along the Atlantic coast, particularly, and along the Gulf. May I inquire of the Senator whether this bill keeps all of those fortifications in esse and preserves them, or whether a new plan has been devised?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the majority of our seacoast fortifications are manned only by two or three caretakers. The guns in many of them, such as they are—and some of them are fairly modern guns—are covered with tarpaulins or wooden sheds, for the simple reason that we have not the personnel left in the Regular Army to man more than half the seacoast defenses of the United States. The most valuable ones, the most important ones, are still fully manned. I imagine that the General Staff and the Coast Artillery officers, together with the Navy, are constantly planning and revising concerning the seacoast defenses. I know of no new plan having been adopted which would result in the total abandonment of all the seacoast defenses. The amount appropriated here for repair and maintenance and preservation, $274,000, is, of course, exceedingly small.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is cut to the last limit. The committee's information is that a great deal of the Government's most valuable property is steadily going downhill in condition.

Mr. KING. The Senator refers to guns in fortifications?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Guns, range-finding apparatus, electric power plants to operate the guns and the ammunition hoists, the barbettes themselves, and the structures so necessary for keeping a seacoast defense in proper order. Severe complaint has been made by the Ordnance Department, especially, over the lack of funds to keep valuable property actually in repair.

Mr. KING. I was somewhat surprised at the smallness of this appropriation if it was to care for all of our seacoast fortifications.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This takes care only of the structural part of the fortifications under the Engineer Corps. There is another item under the Ordnance Department to keep in repair the guns themselves.

Mr. KING. I had in mind the fact that several years ago there was considerable talk about new plans being required, in view of the developments of the war, which would dispense with the necessity of maintaining many of our fortifications, and would perhaps call for the development of a different method of fortification.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 62, after line 13, to insert:

For the installation and replacement of electric light and power plants at the defenses of the Philippine Islands, $200,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator—and before we leave the bill I may offer an amendment on the subject, as I indicated the other day—if the War Department is devising any further fortifications in the Philippine Islands, other than those which seemed to be provided for here?

Mr. WADSWORTH. As I recollect, the four-power treaty forbids us to engage in the further fortification of the Philippine Islands. I may be mistaken about that, but I think that is the fact.

Mr. KING. Nothing has been brought to the attention of the committee?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no; no money is being spent there on new construction. This item is in the nature of a replacement.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator believe that if we were to leave the Philippine Islands within a year, this appropriation of $200,000 would be required?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It most certainly would not be; but we are not going to leave within a year.

Mr. KING. That is probably the view of the Senator, and probably the view of the administration. I hope, however, that both the Senator and the administration will change their point of view and will make provision for the United States to surrender the Philippine Islands and their government to the inhabitants on the 1st of January, 1924.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is a very interesting suggestion.

Mr. KING. I shall offer that as an amendment to this bill if I can, and if a point of order is not raised against it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It will be.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Field Artillery armament," on page 67, at the end of line 7, to strike out "$425,000" and insert "$448,500," so as to make the paragraph read:

For alteration and maintenance of the mobile artillery, including the purchase and manufacture of machinery, tools, and materials necessary for the work and the expenses of the mechanics engaged thereon, $448,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Chemical Warfare Service," on page 71, at the end of line 19, to increase the appropriation for the purchase, manufacture, and test of chemical warfare gases or other toxic substances, gas masks, or other offensive or defensive materials or appliances required for gas warfare purposes, etc., from "$650,000" to "$700,000."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like some explanation from the Senator in regard to the increase in this item, and then generally an explanation as to the activities of this organization, and whether, in his opinion, the results are commensurate with the expenditures which have been made, and which are called for in this bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I assume that the Senator refers to the Chemical Warfare Service.

Mr. KING. Yes. The Secretary has just announced that as the heading.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As the Senator probably knows, nearly all this expenditure takes place at the Edgewood Arsenal, which is the experimental and research laboratory, as it were, of the Chemical Warfare Service. The Budget estimate was $740,000. The House appropriated $650,000, and the Senate committee proposes to appropriate $700,000.

The great proportion of this expenditure is in the direction of research work, experimenting, of course, with gases of various kinds, and evolving methods of defense against such gases if our troops should ever be called upon to confront an enemy that uses so-called poison gases.

The work at the Edgewood Arsenal has been remarkably successful, and truly astounding improvements have been made in some of the things which some day may be of vital importance to the soldiers of the United States, and, indeed, to the country as a whole. The committee is convinced that the expenditure of $700,000 a year for experiment and research, especially for the development of defensive articles, is well worthy of our support, and for that reason the committee suggests the sum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the items for the office of Chief of Chemical Warfare Service, on page 72, line 5, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$21,600," so as to read:

The services of chemists and such other services as the Secretary of War may deem necessary may be employed only in the office of the Chief of the Chemical Warfare Service to carry into effect the appropriation for Chemical Warfare Service, to be paid from such appropriation: Provided, That the total expenditures for this purpose for the fiscal year 1924 shall not exceed $21,600, and the Secretary of War shall each year in the Budget report to Congress the number of persons so employed, their duties, and the amount paid to each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the reading clerk read to line 22 on page 72, the last item read being as follows:

NATIONAL BOARD FOR PROMOTION OF RIFLE PRACTICE.

QUARTERMASTER SUPPLIES AND SERVICES FOR RIFLE RANGES FOR CIVILIAN INSTRUCTION.

To establish and maintain indoor and outdoor rifle ranges for the use of all able-bodied males capable of bearing arms, under reasonable regulations to be prescribed by the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice and approved by the Secretary of War; for the employment of labor in connection with the establishment of outdoor and indoor rifle ranges, including labor in operating targets; for the employment of instructors; for clerical services; for badges and other insignia; for expenses incidental to instruction of citizens of the United States in marksmanship and their participation in international matches, $20,000.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, on the item for the National Board for Promotion of Rifle Practice, I thought I understood the Senator from New York to say that that was raised by committee amendment to $89,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. Mr. President, on behalf of the committee I offer an amendment to the paragraph headed "National Board for Promotion of Rifle Practice."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 72, it is proposed to strike out lines 12 to 22, inclusive, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

To establish and maintain indoor and outdoor rifle ranges for the use of all able-bodied males capable of bearing arms, under reasonable regulations to be prescribed by the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice and approved by the Secretary of War; for the employment of labor in connection with the establishment of outdoor and indoor rifle ranges, including labor in operating targets; for the employment of instructors; for clerical services; for badges and other insignia; for the transportation of employees, instructors, and civilians to engage in practice; for the purchase of materials, supplies, and services, and for expenses incidental to instruction to citizens of the United States in marksmanship, and their participation in national and international matches, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, and to remain available until expended, $89,900: Provided, That out of the said sum of $89,900 there may be expended for the payment of transportation, for supplying meals, or furnishing commutation of subsistence of civilian rifle teams authorized by the Secretary of War to participate in the national matches, not to exceed $80,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the language just read by the Secretary, with the appropriation proposed, is the exact language and the exact appropriation proposed by the Budget for 1923. It constitutes, in effect, a proposed increase over the appropriation carried in the bill as printed of $89,900 for this purpose, and broadens the purposes for which that money can be used, and brings it back to the status of 1922 and years prior to that time.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, in reference to that appropriation, in 1922 for that amount we were only able to bring about 30 of the civilian teams to the national rifle matches. That made it necessary to rule out arbitrarily a considerable number of the States. In order to take care of all the States, about $120,000 will be required for this item, instead of $89,000. We had even more than that prior to that time, but from the experience we have had it will require that much, or else we will probably have the same trouble that we had before, and will have to say arbitrarily to this State or that State: "You can not come, because we have not the funds." I know that that was true in 1922, so I should like to move that that amount be raised to $120,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa is better informed upon this subject than any other man in the Senate. I am very glad to take his word for the condition which he described as having existed at the national rifle matches, at which he has often been a principal instructor, and, so far as I may, I am willing to accept the amendment which he proposes, which would make the appropriation $120,000. But the limitation in the amendment should probably be raised if the total sum is raised. The amendment reads that the appropriation shall be $89,900, of which not more than $80,000 shall be used for transportation, and so forth.

Mr. BROOKHART. That should be raised to $100,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. I accept those two modifications.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the modified amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 6, of the amendment, strike out "$89,900" and insert in lieu thereof "$120,000," and on line 11 strike out "$80,000" and insert "$100,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment was, on page 73, at the end of line 11, to increase the appropriation for the purpose of furnishing a national trophy and medals and other prizes to be provided and contested for annually, etc., from "$6,500" to "$7,500."

Mr. BROOKHART. With reference to that item, for many years we had an appropriation of $10,000 for these purposes. The matches are much larger now than they were in those days, and I think that item should go back to the $10,000, at least. There is no part of the national matches more valuable than the distribution of trophies and medals. At one time some of that was used for cash prizes, but that was abandoned years ago and trophies and medals adopted instead. I move that the appropriation be raised to $10,000, as it was for so many years.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 73, line 12, in lieu of the amendment proposed by the committee, fixing the amount at $7,500, the Senator from Iowa proposes to make the amount $10,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKHART. Should there not be an amendment in that next item?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That does not involve a committee amendment. Will the Senator postpone offering an amendment to that paragraph until amendments generally are in order? Under the unanimous-consent agreement, under which we are proceeding now, only committee amendments are in order.

Mr. BROOKHART. Very well.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Chief of Infantry," on page 74, line 1, after the word "of," to strike out "technical, special, clerical, and temporary" and insert "temporary, technical, special, and," so as to make the paragraph read:

For the purchase of textbooks, books of reference, scientific and professional papers; instruments and material for instruction; employment of temporary, technical, special, and clerical services, including the services of one translator at the rate of $150 per month, and for the necessary expenses of instruction at the Infantry School, Fort Benning, Ga., $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Chief of Cavalry," on page 74, line 18, after the word "and," to strike out "materials" and insert "material"; in line 19, after the word "of," to strike out "technical, special, clerical, and temporary" and insert "temporary, technical, special, and," so as to make the paragraph read:

For the purchase of textbooks, books of reference, scientific and professional papers, instruments, and material for instruction; employment of temporary, technical, special, and clerical services; and for other necessary expenses of instruction at the Cavalry School, Fort Riley, Kans., $17,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Chief of Field Artillery," on page 74, at the end of line 26, to strike out "matériel" and insert "material"; and, on page 75, line 1, after the word "of," to strike out "technical, special, clerical, and temporary" and insert "temporary, technical, special, and"; and, in line 4, after the word "Artillery," strike out "Schools" and insert "School," so as to make the paragraph read:

For the purchase of textbooks, books of reference, scientific and professional papers, instruments, and material for instruction; employment of temporary, technical, special, and clerical services; and for other necessary expenses of instruction, at the Field Artillery School at Fort Sill, Okla., $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Militia Bureau, Arming, Equipping, and Training the National Guard," on page 79, line 11, to increase the appropriation for procurement of forage, bedding, etc., for animals, from "$1,250,000" to "$1,485,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 13, to increase the appropriation for compensation of help for care of matériel, animals, and equipment from "$1,850,000" to "$2,500,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 14, to increase the appropriation for expenses, camps of instruction, from "$10,000,000" to "$11,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 17, to increase the appropriation for expenses, selected officers and enlisted men, military service schools, from "$300,000" to "$350,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 19, to increase the appropriation for pay of property and disbursing officers for the United States from "$70,000" to "$75,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 4, to increase the appropriation for transportation of equipment, from "$375,000" to "$400,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, at the end of line 23, to strike out "$2,250,000" and insert "$3,250,000," so as to read:

ARMS, UNIFORMS, EQUIPMENT, ETC., FOR FIELD SERVICE, NATIONAL GUARD.

To procure by purchase or manufacture and issue from time to time to the National Guard upon requisition of the governors of the several States and Territories, or the commanding general National Guard of the District of Columbia, such number of United States service arms with all accessories, Field Artillery and Coast Artillery matériel, Engineer, Signal, and sanitary matériel, accouterments, field uniforms, clothing, equipment, publications, and military stores of all kinds, and a reserve supply of such arms, matériel, accouterments, field uniforms, clothing, equipment, and military stores of all kinds, as are necessary to arm, uniform, and equip for field service the National Guard of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, $3,250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, line 13, after the word "arms," to strike out "Field Artillery, Engineer, or Signal matériel," so as to read:

Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to issue from surplus or reserve stores and matériel now on hand and purchased for the United States Army such articles of clothing and equipment and Field Artillery, Engineer, and Signal matériel and ammunition as may be needed by the National Guard organized under the provisions of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act approved June 4, 1920. This issue shall be made without charge against militia appropriations, except for actual expenses incident to such issue, which shall be charged against militia funds for both the fiscal years 1923 and 1924. None of the funds appropriated in this paragraph shall be used for purchase of arms, public animals, or chevrons.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for salaries, Militia Bureau, War Department, on page 81, line 21, after the words "Chief clerk," to strike out "$2,250" and insert "$2,000"; at the end of the same line, to strike out "finance clerk, $2,000"; in line 22, before the words "of class three," strike out "four" and insert "five," and at the end of line 25, strike out "$82,850" and insert "$82,200," so as to make the paragraph read:

Salaries: Chief clerk, $2,000; clerks—three of class four, five of class three, ten of class two, twenty-six of class one, eighteen at $1,000 each; messenger, $840; two assistant messengers, at $720 each; two laborers, at $680 each; in all, $82,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "United States Military Academy," on page 82, line 5, to strike out "constructing quartermaster, in addition to his regular pay, $1,000"; and at the end of line 8, to strike out "$55,968" and insert "$54,968," so as to read:

PAY OF MILITARY ACADEMY.

Permanent Establishment: For eight professors, $30,000; chaplain, $2,750; master of the sword, $3,500; additional pay of professors and officers for length of service, $13,900; subsistence allowance of professors and officers, $4,818; in all, $54,968.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, at the end of line 4, to reduce the total appropriation for pay, Military Academy, from "$1,664,585" to "$1,663,586."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for miscellaneous and incidental expenses, at the Military Academy, on page 91, after line 8, to strike out "For supplying materials and painting and cleaning the cadet barracks, $3,500," and in lieu thereof to insert:

For supplying materials, repairing, painting, and cleaning furniture in cadet barracks, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 95, after line 21, to strike out:

No part of the funds appropriated in this act for the supply, maintenance, and upkeep of athletic grounds and stands at the United States Military Academy shall be used for such purposes, unless the authorities at the Military Academy charge an admission to the principal public athletic contests on such grounds in which the cadets take part, and the funds so received shall be used solely for the improvement of athletic facilities at the said academy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Finance Department," on page 96, line 17, after the figures "$1,200," to strike out the comma and insert the following words: "but one-half of each monthly payment shall be deducted until an amount equal to the aggregate of the amount of the pension which has been paid to him by the Pension Office contrary to law shall have been reached," so as to read:

For amount required to make monthly payments to John R. Kissinger, late of Company D, One hundred and fifty-seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry, also late of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "National cemeteries," on page 97, at the end of line 4, to strike out "$350,000" and insert "$370,220," so as to make the paragraph read:

For maintaining and improving national cemeteries, including fuel for superintendents, pay of laborers and other employees, purchase of tools and materials, and including care and maintenance of the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater and Chapel and grounds in the Arlington National Cemetery, Va., $370,220.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 97, line 10, to reduce the appropriation for repairs to roadways to national cemeteries which have been constructed by special authority of Congress from $24,000 to $12,000.

Mr. BROOKHART. Was there not a committee amendment to be offered on page 95?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The committee amendment will be offered when the printed committee amendments are finished. Then it is my purpose to go back and propose six or eight committee amendments, which are legislative in character, but which must be proposed on the floor and unanimous consent asked for their consideration.

Mr. BROOKHART. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 100, line 4, after the name "France," to increase the appropriation for disposition of remains of officers, soldiers, and civilian employees from $150,000 to $160,000.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 22, page 101, the last paragraph read being:

For defraying the cost of such extensions, betterments, operation, and maintenance of the Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system as may be approved by the Secretary of War, to be available until the close of the fiscal year 1925, from the receipts of the Washington-Alaska Military Cable and Telegraph System which have been covered into the Treasury of the United States, the extent of such extensions and betterments and the cost thereof to be reported to Congress by the Secretary of War, $140,000.

Mr. KING. A number of Senators are absent who are interested in some of the items we are approaching, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Hitchcock	New	Stanley
Bayard	Johnson	Nicholson	Sterling
Borah	Jones, N. Mex.	Norbeck	Sutherland
Brookhart	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Townsend
Bursum	Kendrick	Oddie	Trammell
Cameron	Keyes	Page	Underwood
Capper	King	Phipps	Wadsworth
Curtis	Lenroot	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Ernst	Lodge	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.
Fernald	McCormick	Ransdell	Warren
Fletcher	McCumber	Reed, Pa.	Watson
George	McKellar	Robinson	Williams
Hale	McKinley	Sheppard	Willis
Harris	McNary	Smoot
Harrison	Moses	Spencer
Heflin	Nelson	Stanfield

Mr. BROOKHART. I wish to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is necessarily absent attending a hearing before the Committee on Manufactures.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Sixty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I understand very well that many Senators are particularly interested in the so-called river and harbor item. We are now on page 104 of the bill, considering committee amendments. The rivers and harbors item appears on page 106. I desire to announce that when the rivers and harbors item is reached this afternoon, if it is reached, I shall ask that consideration thereof be postponed until to-morrow, and that the Senate shall proceed as long as it may be willing to stay in session to clean up what might be regarded as less important amendments in the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Then the rivers and harbors item will go over until to-morrow?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the next amendment.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the items for the Lincoln Memorial, on page 104, line 1, before the word "watchman," to strike out "three" and insert "four," and at the end of line 8, to strike out "$11,320," and insert "$12,040," so as to make the paragraph read:

Lincoln Memorial: Custodian, $1,200; four watchmen, at $720 each; three laborers, at $660 each; heat, light, miscellaneous labor, and supplies, $3,910; extra services of employees and additional supplies and materials to provide for opening the Lincoln Memorial to the public on Sundays and legal holidays, $1,750; for purchasing and supplying uniforms to the four Lincoln Memorial watchmen, $320; in all, $12,040.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 105, at the end of line 24, to increase the appropriation for construction and maintenance of military and post roads, bridges, and trails, Alaska, from "$465,000" to "$1,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 106, at the end of line 3, to reduce the appropriation for cost of survey and the preparation of plans and estimates for a Government dock at Juneau, Alaska, from "$1,000" to "$600."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is only one committee amendment having to do with rivers and harbors. I think in view of my statement a moment ago, that amendment should be postponed until to-morrow. The committee amendment, however, is not connected with the general rivers and harbors appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments on lines 15 and 17 on page 106 will be passed over together with the whole section, in accordance with the statement made by the Senator from New York, in charge of the bill.

The reading of the bill was continued at page 108, line 4.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was under the head "National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers," on page 115, at the beginning of line 25, to strike out "general" and insert "surplus"; so as to make the paragraph read:

For the fiscal year 1925 and annually thereafter moneys allotted to the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers by the Veterans' Bureau for support, maintenance, and care of World War veterans shall not be used to augment or reimburse the appropriations made for the support of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, but shall be covered into the surplus fund of the Treasury, and the Budget for the fiscal year 1925 and thereafter shall contain itemized estimates covering the entire cost of the operation and maintenance of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, including the cost of the maintenance, support, and care of beneficiaries of the United States Veterans' Bureau in such homes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head, "The Panama Canal," on page 117, after line 15, to strike out:

The limitations on the expenditure of appropriations for salaries and wages of civilian employees hereinbefore made in this act shall not apply to the appropriations for the Panama Canal.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, what is the purpose of striking out the language on page 117? Will the Senator in charge of the bill explain the purpose?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am glad the Senator called attention to that. I desired to offer a modification of the committee amendment. I first ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to may be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The committee, in striking out lines 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19, on page 117, made an error. The intention was to strike out only the words "for salaries and wages of civilian employees," and to retain the rest of the language so that it would read:

The limitations on the expenditure of appropriations hereinbefore made in this act shall not apply to the appropriations for the Panama Canal.

The Panama Canal is an entirely separate business institution. It is under the direct jurisdiction of the President, who delegates the task to the Secretary of War.

Mr. McKELLAR. I recall how that is.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We do not want limitations as to salaries in the War Department made applicable to the salaries of civilians on the Panama Canal Zone, for a different set of statutes takes care of that.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the amendment were disagreed to, then the Senator from New York could offer his amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is what I am going to do.

Mr. McKELLAR. The amendment to strike out the four lines has just been agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My purpose is to restore the language and then strike out the words "for salaries and wages of civilian employees."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests to the Senator from New York that the Senate disagree to the committee amendment, which would restore the House language.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask that that may be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move to amend, on page 117, in line 17, by striking out the words "for salaries and wages of civilian employees," so the paragraph would read:

The limitations on the expenditure of appropriations hereinbefore made in this act shall not apply to the appropriations for the Panama Canal.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York allow me to submit a Senate resolution and ask for its present consideration? If it leads to any debate whatever I will withdraw it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield for that purpose.

LEASES UPON NAVAL OIL RESERVES.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 434), as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution Numbered 282, agreed to April 21, 1922, and Senate Resolution Numbered 294, agreed to May 15, 1922, authorizing and directing the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys to investigate the entire subject of leases upon naval oil reserves, with particular reference to the protection of the rights and equities of the Government of the United States and the preservation of its natural resources, and to report its findings and recommendations to the Senate, and providing that the expenses of such investigation be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, be, and the same hereby are, continued in full force and effect until the end of the Sixty-eighth Congress.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that there be added language authorizing the committee to sit during the recess of Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the original resolution takes care of that. Senate Resolution 294 was an amendment to Senate Resolution 282, and provides as follows:

That the said committee is hereby authorized to sit and perform its duties at such times and places as it deems necessary or proper and to require the attendance of witnesses by subpoenas or otherwise; to require the production of books, papers, and documents; and to employ counsel, experts, and other assistants, and stenographers, at a cost not exceeding $1.25 per printed page. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses and sign subpoenas for witnesses; and every person duly summoned before said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, who refuses or fails to obey the process of said committee or appears and refuses to answer questions pertinent to said investigation shall be punished as prescribed by law. The expenses of said investigation shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers of the committee or subcommittee, signed by the chairman and approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator will observe that it does not cover the provision I suggested.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the last provision mentioning the subcommittee authorized the subcommittee to sit, but it does not. Therefore if the Senator will offer his amendment I am perfectly willing to accept it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I offer the following amendment. Add to the resolution the following language:

The committee or any subcommittee thereof is authorized to sit during the sessions or the recesses of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana subsequently said: Mr. President, the purpose which was intended to be accomplished by the resolution offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] a few moments ago is not fully accomplished; and I desire to ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted for the purpose of perfecting the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reconsideration? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by myself was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then, in lieu of that, I offer the following:

The committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate, and after the expiration of the present Congress until the assembling of the Sixty-eighth Congress, and until otherwise ordered by the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

CORONER'S INQUESTS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have had some inquiries respecting the method of holding coroner's inquests in the District where people have been killed by accident or otherwise. I have a letter from Commissioner James F. Oyster on that subject. It is a matter in which a few people feel a very deep interest. I think it is of some general concern likewise. It gives certain information which a great many people do not seem to have and, I might say, is somewhat at variance with the information I have on the subject. I ask unanimous consent that the letter may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection that order will be made.

The letter is as follows:

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, January 31, 1923.

HON. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: I have your favor of January 30 making certain inquiries regarding the office of coroner, and have endeavored to answer the questions you ask. In this connection I would like to invite your particular attention to the relatively small salary attached to this position of coroner when consideration is taken of the many duties of the office.

Answering your specific questions, I beg to reply as follows:

1. The coroner views all bodies and makes preliminary investigations, determines if autopsy is necessary, and conducts inquests. The deputy coroner performs autopsies and reports results to the coroner and coroner's jury.

2. The United States District Attorney is advised in advance of inquests, and a representative of his office attends all inquests. He examines all witnesses.

3. Captains of various police precincts supply the coroner with lists of names for jury service. The law fixes the number of jurors at six. The jury is discharged at the end of each inquest and not continued for a fixed period. Jurors receive $3 a day for services.

4. Records of inquests are kept on file. Testimony is taken in shorthand only in exceptional cases; otherwise in long hand. Testimony so taken is submitted to the United States District Attorney's office.

5. Legal representatives of all parties concerned are permitted to attend and allowed unlimited scope in the conduct of their questioning.

6. Coroner's compensation is $1,800 per annum. The deputy coroner receives no compensation.

If there is any further information you desire I will be very glad to obtain it for you if you will let me know.

Yours sincerely,

JAMES F. OYSTER,

Commissioner, District of Columbia.

FUNDING OF THE BRITISH DEBT—ARTICLE BY JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, since the consideration of the War Department appropriation bill has been interrupted, I ask unanimous consent that an article by the Hon. Josephus Daniels, former Secretary of the Navy, on the British debt settlement may be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

BRITISH HAVE GALL TO BEG OFF DEBT, ASSERTS DANIELS—FORMER SECRETARY OF THE NAVY DECLARES THAT AMERICA GREW IMPATIENT AT LONG DELAY IN SENDING MISSION TO ARRANGE SETTLEMENT OF DEBT.

(By Josephus Daniels.)

The return to London of the British mission which came to Washington to confer about the debt it owes to the United States, without reaching any agreement, recalls the fact that when the United States entered the World War in April, 1917, missions composed of distinguished statesmen and soldiers from the allied nations came to Washington for conference with American Government officials.

The able and charming Mr. Balfour headed the British delegation, which was the first to arrive. It was the first to come then to discuss how America could in the best and quickest way render its largest contribution to the allied cause.

Great Britain was the first country which secured a large loan of money. It was warmly welcomed and all that we could do to aid that Government was as freely given as they freely put at our disposal then and afterward all the information and aid they could render.

The first agreement of cooperation between the two English-speaking nations was made between Admiral Browning and the Secretary of the Navy on April 10, 1917.

Following closely came Mr. Balfour and his party and the beloved Joffre and the French leaders. What impressed me most about the British mission was the thorough and expert knowledge possessed by its members.

If Mr. Balfour wanted any information from the highest finance to the building of a dreadnought he had an expert at hand whose knowledge was full and accurate.

It is this thoroughness which has distinguished the British Government. Where other nations have as noble aims and even greater zeal, the British go into the minutest detail and that gives them a great advantage. They had more men in Washington at the conferences in the early days than any other nation and again the same thing was true at Paris.

Accurate information and thorough knowledge wins battles as truly as guns and ships. Full knowledge has won many victories.

BRITISH FIRST LOAN.

I have said that the British secured the first loan made by this Government to an allied nation. It had hitherto borne the brunt of financing the war.

Our declaration removed the strain that was almost to the breaking point. The big thing it asked the United States to do, in answer to our request to be advised what aid we could best render at once, was to supply money and patrol the coast from Halifax to Panama, so their ships could be released to go to European waters. We did both at once, beginning in April and carrying on to our utmost until victory.

As a British mission was the first to obtain money from us to finance the costly war—I had almost said extravagant war, for modern wars eat up money—so the British financial mission was the first to come to Washington to talk about paying its debt.

The visit had been postponed time and again. It was scheduled to reach Washington when Mr. Houston became Secretary of the Treasury and again toward the close of the Wilson administration. But it got here on a late train, so to speak.

It was in daily conference with the authorities at Washington for weeks. Then it sailed away. The people of both countries had little inkling of what was talked about in the meeting.

They had expected that at least in this matter, understandable to the average citizen, there would be "open covenants openly arrived at." But neither Congress nor the people knows any more than before they came. "Like the King of France, they marched up the hill and then marched down again."

The gossip around Washington is that they asked for a very long time to pay the debt, which request Congress would no doubt have granted upon the giving of bonds of their Government; but in addition to that they also requested that the rate of interest be fixed at 3 per cent.

I call that request, if the gossip is correct, unadulterated gall. The British know the United States did not have a dollar to lend them except what was obtainable from loans from the people or taxes imposed on them. Our taxes did not bring in near enough for our enormous expenditures to arm our own soldiers and sailors and pay the expense of a war 3,000 miles from home.

In order to obtain the billions we loaned Britain and the other allied nations, it was necessary to issue our own bonds and for Mr. McAdoo to carry on the most remarkable campaign in history to sell them to the American people.

In order to obtain the largest amount for these bonds, they were made tax exempt. That was a mistake if our own country was to be considered.

We entered upon this policy, not permissible on sound principles except in war, largely to give our allies the benefit of getting par when no other nation could float its securities without some reduction or commissions. It was done to aid Britain and the other allies to every cent possible.

FIRM AND POLITE NO.

We agreed to charge Britain no interest except what we actually paid to those who bought the bonds. After the war, when it was clear that the United States had withdrawn from European settlements, there came a near panic, saved only by the Federal Reserve Board, and bonds went below par because the interest rate rose from 6 to 8 per cent at the lowest.

In view of the fact that Britain obtained this loan at such a low rate of interest, the people were astounded when it was reported that the British mission had asked a reduction to 3 per cent. Of course, the Washington Government could do nothing but give a polite and firm no to the preposterous request.

We are ready to give every reasonable consideration to Britain with reference to the debt it owes, but its course has served to chill the feeling entertained for it.

I refer to its whole course with reference to debts; its delay in coming, preceded by Mr. Balfour's tactless statement that Britain would cancel all debts due it if the United States would do likewise. That was a world proclamation virtually putting up to us to shoulder the debts which should be paid by others.

We have gotten tired of hearing "America entered late and should assume its share of the debt contracted before it came in, and should wipe out all indebtedness due from us." Mr. Balfour "passing the buck" to the United States, followed by the British financial mission's request in the year 1923 to reduce the interest to a sum far less than we are actually paying, was not calculated to leave a good taste in the mouth.

BRITAIN SHOULD PAY.

It has done exactly the opposite. It has stiffened the backbone of Americans to say plainly that we will give every proper consideration, but we must insist upon payment of the same interest the Treasury is paying the holders of the bonds.

There is no reason why Britain should not pay. We bore our expenses of the war and we neither asked nor received anything in the way of money, coal, oil, or colonies, or anything else, even though at the time Senator Lodge said we ought to demand reparation from Germany. Later he was wiser and gloried that Woodrow Wilson had demanded nothing.

The people generally are not informed as to what Britain has received as a result of the war. The propaganda that France is the only country getting or trying to get reparations has made people forget the incomparably great things that Britain obtained. France asked too much and blundered in so doing.

What has Britain received? I have not the data as to the oil concessions and the advantages in countries that have large oil fields that will enrich Britain and be of inestimable value to its world commerce. When we reflect upon what it did obtain, we may well ask, What nation received most out of the war?

Here is what the war added to the British Empire: Five hundred thousand square miles of German Southwest Africa, 680,000 square miles of German West Africa, 75,000 square miles of Togo and Cameroon, 180,000 square miles of New Guinea and Bismarck. In addition many square miles in the colonies of Angola and Mozambique, 1,000,000 square miles in Persia, and 2,000,000 square miles in Mesopotamia have come under British influence.

BRITAIN'S ATTITUDE.

It is unfortunate that the British did not come to Washington long ago, or even on its recent visit, and say frankly: "While we have received great benefit in German colonies as a result of the war they are now liabilities and not present assets. While we are to receive 22 per cent of whatever sum Germany pays as reparation, Germany has as yet paid us nothing. Our oil concessions are yet to be realized upon. The cost of our armies to prevent wars in Europe imposes a heavy burden. We therefore would be glad to defer payments to a time when we can pay without the strain early payments would impose. We, of course, expect to pay the same rate of interest you must pay the owners of the bonds you issued to obtain the money to lend to us."

If the mission had come in that spirit and made the request, everybody would have approved acquiescence.

It was a mistake equal to a blunder, as was Mr. Balfour's tactless passing the buck to this country. However, these mistakes should not affect the cordial relations between the countries, and we should proffer to extend the loans for a long period. Britain has walked through deep waters, fought a great fight, and the two countries must be ever prepared to prevent such another holocaust of war as almost destroyed the world in 1914-1919. THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record in 8-point type an article entitled "Economic geometry versus legislative ship subsidy in the making," with reference to the operations of the Shipping Board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

ECONOMIC GEOMETRY VERSUS LEGISLATIVE SHIP SUBSIDY IN THE MAKING.

The U-boat moved westward the center of gravity of the world's carrying trade. That center of gravity is still potential. A few more years of depreciation of the governmental fleet rotting in lay up precludes the conversion of potential to kinetic.

The World War also moved westward the international bullion center of gravity. Just so long as that bullion center of gravity rests with us, they (the alien), not we, will sweat. Therefore, why assist the eastward movement momentum of said center of gravity through the medium of a half-billion-dollar yearly ocean freight bill, distributed largely among foreign bottoms. Ditto, American marine cargo and hull insurance premiums.

The yearly appropriations for our national defense approximate one-half a billion dollars. Annual British unemployment doles are now of similar amount. America contributes in direct ratio to the building of British battleships, French submarines, and Japanese light cruisers, as is the proportion of her ocean-borne freights carried in the bottoms of the named nationals.

Island empires are international economic middlemen situated tangential to the ebb and flow of sea commerce from producer to ultimate consumer. Their adverse trade balances must be restored by carrying other peoples' goods in island bottoms by the expenditures of tourists and by the proceeds of international marine insurance, banking, and investments. If they fail to restore such adverse balances, they still have three other alternatives, to wit, war, starvation, or emigration. Britain's population has doubled in 100 years.

Displacement of foreign bottoms by idle American tonnage may smash Norwegian and British triangulation. There are more Norwegians in the United States than there are in Norway. Denmark is currently reported as arranging emigration of her surplus workers to Madagascar and South America.

Section 34, Jones Act, sought, through imposition of 10 per cent discriminatory duties upon imports, to deflect return cargoes to American bottoms, and thus aid in the upbuilding of our merchant marine. Treaty complications have apparently been a deterrent to enforcement. Correct in principle, it apparently fails to articulate with present economic fact. Of what avail would it be against an increasing volume of imports capable of breaking through mountain-high tariff walls? The provision in the original pending ship subsidy bill of a 5 per cent of freights paid deduction from net income tax to American shippers shipping in American bottoms provided precise and effective impetus. Such deduction might well be 10 per cent for imports and 5 per cent for exports, as by value and volume our exports are three times our imports. The pulling effect of such percentage deduction should be in inverse ratio to volume movement. Legislative regulation of ocean freight rates becomes redundant.

Deductions to industrials shipping in their own vessels need not obtain. Not because they are rich. The nature of the traffic demands it not.

At present some three hundred and odd Government vessels are operated upon a cost-plus plan at a $50,000,000 yearly deficit. The Government fleet totals some 1,400 vessels. The cost-plus plan of operation perpetuates economic farce. Many of the vessel operators operating Government tonnage are alleged to have a direct or an indirect interest in the various subsidiaries that furnish service to the plying merchant vessels touching our ports. Among these is stevedoring. If the boss stevedore complains to the vessel operator that stevedoring wages are insufficient, why quarrel when the Public Treasury pays all the bills? Both boss stevedore and vessel operator know that profits to subsidiaries are derived alike from American and foreign vessels, and that if the major portion of American vessels are tied up the foreign vessel will fill the vacancies within the limitations of the ability of the ultimate consumer to absorb high terminal charges plus ocean freights and insurance. The cost-plus effect upon terminal service is to keep it high, and to precisely that extent stultify the flow of commerce. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link, and interference with the law of supply and demand will be reflected up the line. The pending bill presupposes that a portion of the profit in excess of 10 per cent will be deducted back into the Treasury of the United States where a vessel participates in money subsidy. A subsidiary is prone to pump off profit from the parent company if the necessity demand. It may not be amiss to refer to subsidiaries and the railroads in a period not beyond the memory of man.

Aside from the capital-cost differential American versus foreign vessels, it may be well to take into account the ability of some foreign combinations to operate their vessels at a 5 per cent loss whilst deriving a 20 per cent profit from interlocking subsidiaries. With this in mind, visualize the mass effect of pegging American Government tonnage at a valuation lower than it ever was or ever again can be in world history. If it be so pegged, not for one year but for its lifetime, and a fixed earned double depreciation equivalent be yearly made tax exempt upon the passage of this tonnage to private ownership, then adverse capital-cost differential will be eliminated and replacement and reequipment will be stimulated—five-year trust fund—in perpetuity if vessel progeny by direct lineal descent be accorded like exemption.

Couple with such basic economic foundation the compelling pull of cargoes into American bottoms by the 5 per cent deduction from net income tax of freights paid as already outlined, the potential energy of 1,400 Government vessels becomes kinetic. There can be but one deterrent, and that an ocean freight rate breaking through the meshes of the net exemplified in the above 5 per cent deduction. With terminal charges remaining as they are, a further reduction in ocean freight rates is improbable, for, ergo, had such been possible, that fact would have been recorded in yet a higher governmental shipping deficit or the further displacement of privately owned American tonnage and governmental tonnage by foreign bottoms.

Pegging the Government's dry steel cargo tonnage, some 1,261 vessels, at $30 per dead-weight ton and then renting these vessels to American citizens at 15 cents per dead-weight ton per month over a period of 15 to 17 years with the understanding that when accumulated rentals equal the pegged price of the vessel and that the vessel becomes such citizen's property without further governmental lien or encumbrance is rational solution. Rental equities to be not transferable nor capable of stock issue. Under this plan capital outlay by renter reduces to minimum. The small-vessel operator with the backing of his local community can attain sound achievement. The tendency will then truly be to make us once more a seafaring nation. The Government should require the renter to carry insurance to cover above valuation and inclusive of an adequate collision clause. Renter should also be required to furnish approved surety bond of $200,000 per vessel, protecting the Government against marine liens, domestic or foreign, and abandonment of voyage in a foreign port.

Pegging the Government's tanker tonnage, some 90 vessels, at $80 per dead-weight ton and fixing the monthly rental along above lines at 45 cents per dead-weight ton per month leaves the passenger tonnage still to be dealt with. The refrigerator tonnage, comprising a few vessels, might also be fixed separately.

Pages 507 and 644, Volume I, joint hearings, pending bill, sets forth an informative table. This testimony of record upon which proponents base plea for money subsidy for cargo carriers discloses an adverse yearly differential of some $15,000. We quote verbatim the informative two columns of said table and alongside same place a third column, ours, illustrating the practicability of the rental plan of disposing of the governmental tonnage:

	Per month.		Tax-payers' plan.
	American.	British.
Depreciation, at 5 per cent.....	$1,100	$1,100
Insurance, at 5.5 per cent.....	1,210
Insurance, at 5 per cent.....		1,100	$1,100

Interest, at 6 per cent.....		1,320
Monthly rental, at 15 cents per dead-weight ton.....			1,320
Total.....	3,850	3,520	2,420

	Per month.		Tax-payers' plan.
	American.	British.

Port charges.....	12,862	12,862	12,862
Total.....	41,528	38,890	38,668

Present adverse marine hull insurance differential is about one-half of 1 per cent. By fractional governmental participation this can be overcome and decisively reversed.

The foregoing table is the comparison of gross expenses of an American and a British steamer of 8,800 dead-weight tons (6,000 gross tons) on a single trans-Atlantic voyage—Gulf-Havre-Hamburg range—and return; book value of both ships, $30 per dead-weight ton, or $264,000; steaming days, 46; port days, 14; total, 60; burning 36 tons of coal per sea day; 5 tons per port day; coal at $5.57 t. i. b.; standard pay roll as of May 1, 1922, for British ship, and American Steamship Owners' scale of January 1, 1922, for American ship; pound sterling converted at $4.40.

The reduced involved capital outlay is obvious. The assertion that present vessel operators will not take the vessels for nothing, much less rent them for 15 cents a dead-weight ton per month, is bunk. They are now operating the cream of the cargo fleet, vessels adapted to their individual needs and organizations. They know well that if they did not, within the limits of the cargoes offered them or procurable, rent these vessels upon above basis that other domestic competitors would. On the contrary, it would be to their great initial advantage to have the first choice in the permanent retention of these vessels. Contrarywise, if the submitted method be adopted in lieu of a money subsidy it is equally palpable that with the increase in value of world tonnage in the face of a pegged nucleus that more money subsidy and yet more money subsidy will not be required to balance reflected mounting capital operating costs. That is one of the many fallacies of the pending bill concealed behind the inadvertent smoke screen of predicted ultimate greater return to the Public Treasury by the sale of Government tonnage under the stimulus of a direct money aid.

Page 506, joint hearings, apparently fails to adequately explain the port charges item of $12,862 of foregoing table, other than to aver that the handling of cargo at both terminals is thereby covered. If under that table full cargoes both ways are included, an astounding profit is immediately disclosed in these days of extreme depression in ocean shipping. Page 644, joint hearings, gives a freight rate of $4.10 per ton for above voyage. Assuming this vessel to fuel at both terminals, the available cargo capacity is 7,600 tons. The one-way gross voyage revenue is $31,160. Twice that is $62,320. Deducting gross voyage expense, $38,668, the total of the third column foregoing table, there remains a net profit of $23,652 for the voyage.

On the basis of five voyages a year, this net amounts to $118,260 per year. If the handling charges for the return cargo have been omitted, we would be happy to have them deducted. A company operating 10 such vessels would clear, according to above figures, a yearly net of $1,182,600. Page 406 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 13, 1922, quotes the average September, 1922, revenue per ton for a million tons as $5.45. On that basis, a company running 10 vessels as above would clear a yearly net of $2,208,600. An inquisitive mind now desists, and assuming only one-third of cargo capacity filled for the return voyage on the first basis of $4.10 per ton, there is deduced a voyage net of $2,877 and a yearly net of $14,385 and a further yearly net of $143,850 for a company running 10 such vessels. Individual appertaining subsidiaries, of course, continuing to profit as at present. The foregoing deductions are not all necessary. The results displayed in the established columns are sufficient unto the day thereof. However, desired emphasis that the small ship operator has a chance is not amiss.

Fifty per cent of the world tonnage is currently reported to be more than 15 years old. At the age of 15 years a vessel commences to run out of her class. Marine insurance premiums rise. An indiscriminate money subsidy would thus subsidize inefficiency. An overcapitalized 20-year-old lame duck could continue forcing a virile 5-year-old vessel to rust in lay up.

One of the weak points in the pending bill is the large personnel that undoubtedly must thereunder be retained by the Government in the matter of audit. A large administrative overhead will be incurred in chasing the ephemeral 50 per cent of the excess over 10 per cent profit around desk corners and into waste-paper baskets. The substitute plan here advanced practically cuts out the present $10,000,000 administrative overhead and quickly reduces that personnel from 4,500 to less than 500. This exclusive of the caretakers of the laid-up fleet. Governmental deficits are replaced by positive revenue. It has the further advantage of gradually absorbing into the trades laid-up Government tonnage, no matter what the degree of reasonable depreciation in the next few years. Such absorption would be accentuated if vessel operators and vessel owners were granted additional income-tax exemption to precisely the extent that they invested tax savings in any one year in betterments. A minimum of governmental supervision could quickly and accurately draw the line between betterments and normal depreciation inclusive of ordinary voyage repairs. Proper certification of such betterments would be sufficient evidence to the collector of internal revenue as to allowable deductions.

Under the submitted plan, geographical divisions of our coasts should have tentatively allocated to them such proportion of the whole Government tonnage as the total volume of their exports and imports bears to the national volume. The solely fuel-oil-burning geographical divisions would, of course, not draw coal burners. The number of our transoceanic oil burners preponderates. If for reasons of state the Chief Executive should temporarily deem inexpedient the additional release of idle Government tonnage to the trades, he has but to call upon the commissioner of navigation, Department of Commerce, for the latest percentages of American commerce carried in American bottoms and thence issue control orders accordingly. Careless infringement of the well-being of privately owned American tonnage by the too fast release of idle Government tonnage is likewise controllable and statistically discernible. Firm control of governmental nucleus remains until all that is usable is absorbed from idleness.

There remains the problem of the passenger vessels. These should be subsidized with money. The equivalent of 5 per cent of our yearly custom dues would seem ample. A 10 per cent of passenger fare paid deducted from net income tax to American citizens traveling to or from abroad in American passenger vessels can not but help. The mails might be carried free. Subsidy should preferably be at a flat rate beginning at the 16-knot level of speed. Vessels of less speed may well be absorbed into the coastwise or island tourist trades when unable to maintain competition elsewhere. To neglect upbuilding a great passenger-carrying trade is tantamount to neglect of national defense. Fast passenger vessels have other uses than that of troop transports. If there be another war, it is not apt to be against a contained enemy or an enemy capable of being contained. One hundred fast surface raiders can each in time of war account for 10 enemy merchantmen within the short period of six weeks or three months. The loss of 1,000 merchant vessels is decisive. A proud people secure from invasion may be greatly disturbed, aye, brought to heel, by having their exportable surplus thrown back on them, and in the aftermath of another Versailles, through the medium of extortion by alien bottoms, pay a helot's tribute to an alien conqueror.

NOTE.—General cargo rate north Atlantic, $6. (Letter chairman United States Shipping Board * * * December 8, 1922, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, December 19, 1922.) Applying same to foregoing voyage estimate on basis of return cargo of one-third vessel's capacity it is obvious that resultant net leaves ample funds for steamship administrative overhead plus dry-docking expense of some $2,000 * * * per vessel every eight months. However, income-tax deduction to shippers as outlined should insure full cargoes both ways most of the time.)

FISCAL RELATIONS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, for the joint select committee created under the act of June 29, 1922, to investigate the fiscal relations as between the Federal Government and the District of Columbia, I ask leave to submit a report, which I ask shall be printed in 8-point type in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. This report has been signed by five of the six committee members. I further ask that the report itself, with the report of the auditors and the comments made thereon by the auditor for the District of Columbia, representative of the Comptroller General's office, and of the Department of Justice, and other comments, together with the hearings and minutes of the committee, be printed as a public document, under one cover, for the use of the House and Senate, and that 1,500 extra copies be printed for distribution through the document room.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

FISCAL RELATIONS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

To the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your committee, appointed pursuant to the act of Congress approved June 29, 1922, which contains the following provision—
